Mr. LONG. That is not how we got the tariff on copper. We had a Democratic President here, and he did not give us a tariff on copper. I will tell you how we got the tariff on copper last time. We got it because several other Senators and myself went around here swapping enough votes to get it. [Laughter.] That is how we got the tariff on copper. We could not get the tariff with oil and copper and coal by themselves, so we put in lumber in order to get a few more votes. [Laughter.] There is no need of whipping the devil around the stump.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the best argument the Senator has made for the passage of this bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we have all realized that we have to give the other man protection if we claim it for ourselves. In other words, it is the spirit of the Bible:

> Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Why, certainly. It was the spirit of the Scripture that caused a man to give his brother a tariff, particularly when he needed his brother's vote to get the tariff for himself. [Laughter.] It makes the man feel better; but we went before the people with all that known, did we not? We went before the people and told them what we were going to do, and we said, "The people are entitled to know in plain words what it is that they are contracting for"; and we said to them, "We will have a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference." That is what we told them; and we told them we were truthful people, and that that was what we were going to do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator from Louisiana think that is applicable to the subject matter of this bill? Does not the Senator understand fully that the basis of that clause, "free from Executive interference", was the allegation that Republican Presidents had been in the habit of attempting to control or influence the action of the Tariff Commission?

This bill does not relate to the proceedings of the Tariff Commission under the flexible provision. It relates to an effort to restore and build up the foreign commerce of the United States. It is not an interference with any action of the Tariff Commission and cannot fairly be said to be. I merely ask leave to point that out to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. The Senator unfortunately runs into the declaration of the President of the United States that in making reciprocal tariff agreements this would apply. Unfortunately, the Senator is answered by the party platform again, because Mr. Cordell Hull and Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in interpreting this very platform of the party, declared to the American people that it meant just what I should have understood it to mean—that reciprocal treaties or anything else would be gaged on the report of a fact-finding commission, based upon the difference in cost of producing the particular product in the foreign country and the cost of producing it in this country. That was the declaration.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the only evidence that has been adduced respecting the interference of a President, either in the adjustment of tariff rates or otherwise, was given by the Chairman of the Tariff Commission, with failure on the part of the Finance Committee to invite any other members of the Tariff Commission before it to inquire of them whether or not the chairman of the Tariff Commission was stating a fact. I think it was very unfair of the Finance Committee not to give the other members of the Tariff Commission an opportunity to be heard; but the fact remains that the chairman of the Tariff Commission who gave support to the thought that the Chief Executive in the past had interfered with tariff rates still remains the chairman of the Tariff Commission under a Democratic administration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator contend that the exercise of the power under this bill by the Executive, if the bill should pass, would interfere with the proceedings of the Tariff Commission?

Mr. HATFIELD. I do not understand that there is any provision in the bill requiring the President to take any advice upon the questions which may be involved, but it is understood, I think, that an organization will be created to function under the bill at the dictum of the President, who will hold in his power the life and death of industry, as well as the work opportunities of American labor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not quite understand that answer. My question was directed to the point that the Senator from West Virginia was making, or attempting to make, that the failure to take the advice of the Tariff Commission as to the passage of this measure was an interference on the part of the Executive with the functions of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. HATFIELD. No. I was referring to the Tariff Commission under the existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the Senator understands that under the bill, and probably under any practice that will prevail, the Executive will avail himself of the information which the Tariff Commission can supply.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is true.

Since, however, the party in power has chosen to lay aside not only relief and recovery measures but even measures for the reform of those abuses which we all alike deplore and are prepared to remedy, and has decided to force a political battle on the whole tariff issue, we must accept the issue. It is my forecast that before the national elections in November enough of the Democratic Members of the Senate, not tied down by any gag rules, will have joined with the Republicans either so to modify the pending tariff bill as to save the Constitution, preserve the constitutional rights and duties of Congress, and protect American agriculture, labor, and industry, or to defeat the measure entirely.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator asked me a question, and I have been able to get the RECORD so as to give an answer.

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I will ask one of the pages to find the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I think he went to answer a telephone call in the cloakroom.

Mr. McKELLAR entered the Chamber.

Mr. LONG. Since the Senator from Tennessee has talked about the tariff Democrats from Louisiana, I want to read the illuminating record on the tariff question of my friend, the senior Senator from the great and sovereign State of Tennessee. I particularly love that State. I lived there for many years.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is going to get some real Democratic doctrine now.

Mr. LONG. Yes; some real, genuine Democratic doctrine.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] voted as follows:

On October 24, 1929, he voted for Mr. Blaine's amendment for a 5½-cent rate on casein. The House rate was 2½ cents.

On October 28, 1929, he voted for Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH'S amendment to increase the duty on olive oil in containers. Tennessee, as you know, raises vegetable oil. That was patriotic Democratic doctrine.

Mr. McKELLAR. What vegetable oils do we raise?

Mr. LONG. Cottonseed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. LONG. You see, the Senator is going to get wise on this thing before we get through with it. Just wait until we get through. The Senator from Tennessee is going to vote with us before we get through.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I cannot let that statement go unchallenged. The Senator from Louisiana will have to change his methods of voting a long, long way before I ever vote with him, certainly on tariff issues.

Mr. LONG. As long as "the light holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return"; but the Senator from Tennessee does not have to return in this case. He has voted against the flexible provision of the tariff with me, and he has voted for these tariffs with me, too. Wait until I get through with him.

On January 20, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] voted for the committee amendment for higher rates on basic paper. They have a paper company over in Memphis.

Mr. McKELLAR. I never heard of it.

Mr. LONG. I used to work for it—the Palo Paper Co. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Senator do any real work?

Mr. LONG. Not much; no more than I had to. [Laughter.]

On January 24, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Oddie's first amendment to increase the duty on hides. Now, imagine that! That was a good vote, too. I would have voted that way if I had been here, particularly if we had had sugar in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not mean to say that it takes sugar in a bill to make him vote for it, does it?

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; but we built up a case, you know. It is well to build up a few friends on this tariff question, because you are liable to need them the next day. That is why enough votes were obtained to put this tariff on the hides that go into the shoes that the poor little children are wearing in this country today; and I would have voted for it if I had been here. It was a good vote.

On January 28, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Idaho to increase the duty on vegetable oils. Again cottonseed comes in there.

On February 18, 1930, he voted for Mr. PITTMAN'S amendment placing a duty on silver ores. All right. I did not know that Tennessee produced any silver. Probably that was one of the kind of votes I would have cast.

On February 18, 1930, he voted for Mr. CONNALLY'S amendment increasing the duty on cattle.

Mr. HATFIELD. That was a very high duty; was it not?

Mr. LONG. Yes; a very high duty. Now, imagine that! When a man buys a beefsteak today he owes it to the vote of the Senator from Tennessee that that beefsteak costs such a high price. He put that tariff on beef. Imagine!

Let us see, now. I will read the rest of this record.

On March 3, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Shortridge's amendment for a duty on long-staple cotton. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] voted for that, too. They voted for it because cotton is a southern product.

Mr. HATFIELD. What became of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. He voted for that. I am reading the record of the Senator from Tennessee.

On March 13, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for concurrence in the amendment placing a duty on long-staple cotton.

On March 14, 1930, he voted for an amendment to increase the duty on hides. They raised it again, and he still went along.

On March 22, 1930, he voted for the amendment to place duties on basic and sensitized paper. They manufacture those over in the city of Memphis.

The Senator also voted against a number of decreases. Proposals were made to decrease some tariffs, and a number of Democratic Senators decided that they would line up on the Democratic doctrine to stand with the people, and the Senator from Tennessee stood by the people. I am one man who defends the record of the Senator from Tennessee when he does not defend it himself. I am one of the men who speak a good word for him when he is here trying to undo his own votes.

He has a friend in me, the kind of a friend that a man is proud of when he gets over these days of hectic politics, and can look back and see, when he was trying to do himself wrong, that his friends stood by him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, when that time comes I have no doubt I shall have forgotten all the mistakes the Senator from Louisiana has made while he has been in the Congress, and I shall be very forgiving.

Mr. LONG. That is very kind of the Senator; but one good thing about it is that he may not have so much to forgive when I read about 14 more votes he cast here.

On October 28, 1929, the Senator from Tennessee voted against Mr. WAGNER'S amendment to reduce the duty on olive oil in containers. Why? Just reason these votes out. Here is the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who probably will vote for a tariff on most New York products most of the time. Cottonseed oil was not raised in his part of the country, so he voted to reduce the rate on olive oil. The Senator from Tennessee deserted his party in that hour of need, except for the fact that the party was standing right. I think the party was going along with him at that time; so the Senator voted democratically that time, I guess.

November 5, 1929, he voted against the committee amendment to reduce the duty on china clay. That is pottery. Is any pottery produced in Tennessee? I do not know why the Senator voted that way. I believe the Senator was voting on principle. I have done the Senator an injustice; I thought he was voting for this tariff to get protection for a product of Tennessee. Now I know he was voting for protection as a matter of principle, and likely as a matter of party duty.

January 27, 1930, he voted against Mr. WHEELER'S amendment to reduce the duty on filaments and yarns of rayon.

On January 27, 1930, he voted against Mr. Simmons' amendment to reduce the minimum duty on filaments and yarns of rayon.

On January 31, 1930, he voted against Mr. McMaster's amendment to strike out the duty on cement.

Imagine that!

Mr. HATFIELD. Cement?

Mr. LONG. Cement. Can Senators believe that? I was down in Louisiana at that time, and that was one occasion when I was fighting a tariff. I had a big road-building program on down there, and we were buying millions of barrels of cement, spending $75,000,000 laying concrete roads, and I knew that if that tariff went on the cement was going to cost us a great deal more money, $2,000 more per mile for the roads. Because of this vote of the Senator from Tennessee, every mile of that road cost us $2,000 more.

Cement! It is all right; I do not blame the Senator. I disagreed with him at the time, but now I have been converted. I believe he was right. I think that vote was right. [Laughter.]

Let us go a little further. On March 13, 1930, he voted against the amendment to reduce the duty on mustard seed. Why was that? They raise mustard and they raise turnips in Tennessee. Did the Senator from Tennessee want them sending over to Europe or down to Mexico to get greens to make pot liquor out of when they could get them right there in Tennessee? Not on your life. [Laughter.]

On March 13, 1930, the Senator voted against the amendment to reduce the minimum rate on rayon filaments and yarns.

On March 13, 1930, he voted the same way on the same question.

On March 15, 1930, the Senator voted against the amendment to reduce the duty on hides.

On March 15, 1930, he voted against the second amendment to reduce the duty on hides.

On March 17, 1930, he voted against concurring in the amendment to eliminate the countervailing duty on coal.

Think of that! Coal! Every little child that has to get up in the morning and kindles the fire in order to keep itself warm, every poor man, woman, and child in the country who sits in front of a coal fire has to remember the vote of the Senator from Tennessee. [Laughter.] Coal! Coal! Do they mine any coal in Tennessee? I wonder.

On March 19, 1930, the Senator voted against the amendment for free cement for public use. Listen to this, Senators. Here is the dramatic climax of a marvelous accomplishment. [Laughter.] The Senator voted against the amendment for free cement for public use. He even voted that the United States Government and the State of Louisiana had to pay a tariff on cement. There we were in Louisiana, when that bill to place a tariff on cement was brought in, paying $2,000 more a mile to build concrete roads in that State; and incidentally we have the best road system in the world down there, although some gentlemen here may not know that. There we were appealing to the Congress not to tax the State, and here the Senator from Tennessee leaped over and voted to put a tax of $2,000 more a mile, in the form of a tariff on cement, on every mile of road we were building.

Why was that? I do not know whether cement is manufactured in Tennessee or not. It is made all around there. But whether it is made in Tennessee or not, the Senator from Tennessee could not have expected to get votes for tariffs on the products of his State, probably without having followed the Golden Rule that is given in the Bible, to do for the other man what you ask him to do for you.

Here we are trying to get the Senator to keep only one more promise of the party; that is, that you shall regard what you promised as an obligation and having promised the people something, that you will not go back on it.

Now I show the Senator how I have been with him. I show the Democrats how I have been with them. I read the logic, I read the philosophy, of all the gentlemen on this side of the aisle. I read the promises of the party, I read the platform declaration of the President of the United States, I read what was promised by the Secretary of State, I read the Constitution, I cite them the vote I cast here with them when I came here; but it is as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal to some of my friends.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator doth protest too much.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I think I shall have to hurry along now. [Laughter.]

The tariff was not the cause of and its change is not the cure for the depression. The only possible reason for bringing the subject up at this time would be the false theory that the tariff was the cause of the depression. I repeat that statement, the tariff was not the cause of and its change is not the cure for the depression. The figures and facts I am giving are important, and I trust that those who are honoring me with their presence will listen, for in this is a great lesson, one, in my judgment, which has not been brought home to the Executive department of the Government.

First, we are told by the administration that imports declined from $4,338,572,000 in 1929, the year before the passage of the Tariff Act of 1930, to $1,423,467,000 in 1933, a decrease of $2,915,105,000, or 67 percent. These figures are presumably correct, since they are the records published by the Tariff Commission. But did it ever occur to the administration to ask whether the decline was "in the value of goods subject to tariff" or "in those on the free list"?

The answer is very important. The Tariff Commission, which, accordding to its Chairman, is a working tool of the President and not of the Congress, has published reports showing that dollar value of duty free imports has declined from $2,880,128,000 in 1929 to $901,782,000 in 1933, a decrease of $1,978,346,000, or 68.7 percent, while commodities subject to duty declined in dollar value from $1,458,444,000 to $521,685,000, a decrease of $936,759,000, or 64.2 percent.

In other words, the decline in dollar value of imports on the free list was more than double the decline in dollar value of dutiable goods, and the percentage decline for the free list was 68.7 percent, while for those on the dutiable list it was 64.2 percent.

At this point I insert a table giving value of imports year by year, of imports dutiable, and those free from duty, so that there can be no further dispute on this point.

Dollar value of imports into the United States, "dutiable" and "free from duty", 1929–33

Year	Total	Free from duty	Dutiable
1929	$4,338,572,000	$2,880,128,000	$1,458,444,000
1930	3,114,077,000	2,081,132,000	1,032,954,000
1931	2,088,455,000	1,391,693,000	696,762,000
1932	1,325,093,000	885,536,000	439,557,000
1933	1,423,467,000	901,782,000	521,685,000

Mr. President, it should be clear to everyone who studies this table that the decline in imports cannot be traced "to high or low duties" or "to no duties." All declined together, but the decline of the free-list articles was the greater because the declines in prices of agricultural and raw materials from the tropics were greater than in prices of certain dutiable manufactured goods from Europe.

The decline in prices was principally responsible for the decline in dollar value of imports. During the three pre-war years, 1911, 1912, and 1913, imports for consumption were valued at $1,645,119,000, and, using 1926 as a basic index of 100, the wholesale price index for all American commodities was 67.9. Now we find that the average annual dollar value of imports for consumption for the three depression years, 1931, 1932, and 1933, was $1,612,338,000, and again the wholesale price index was 67.9. Thus prices for the 3 years just past have averaged exactly the same as for the last 3 pre-war years, and imports, by dollar value, were only $32,781,000 less per year, or scarcely 2 percent under the earlier period.

In other words, there is almost a parity of imports and exports between the pre-war period and the post-war depression period beginning the first of the year 1931 and ending with 1933.

Furthermore, customs duties collected in the pre-war period averaged $308,810,000 a year, and during the last 3-year period, they averaged $300,155,000 a year—a decrease of only $8,655,000, or 2.7 percent.

Mr. President, how about the fabulous value of imports in the war period, 1916 to 1920? The average annual dollar value for the 5-year period was $3,430,788,000, but the wholesale price index for all commodities for the 5-year period was 125.5. Reduced to the price level of 1931, 1932, and 1933 the average annual dollar value of imports for the war period would have been only $1,856,182,000, which should be compared with our average of $1,612,338,000 during the last 3 years. In other words, 86.9 percent of the greater dollar value of imports during the war period was due to unit prices, and only 13.1 percent was due to greater volume. And be it remembered that even this small increase in volume was due to the imports of goods for processing for reexportation on account of the war, such as the grinding of wheat and its reexportation.

In order that this matter may be removed from further controversy, I have prepared the representative figures:

Period	Dollar value of imports for consumption	Average wholesale price index (1926=100)
1911–13	$1,645,119,000	67.9
1931–33	1,612,338,000	67.0

The figures which I have submitted show that 86.9 percent of the increase in dollar value of imports for the war period over the pre-war period was due to price increase, and only 13.1 percent was due to volume of imports. The decline to the depression period, 1931, 1932, and 1933, from an average annual $3,430,788,000 to an average annual of $1,612,338,000, was accompanied by a decline in prices of from 125.5 to 67.9—using the Government wholesale-price index of 1926 as 100. In other words, our imports for the last 3 years are only 2 percent below the imports for the last 3 pre-war years when prices were the same. These figures permit of only one conclusion, and that is if we want a greater dollar value of imports for any reason, the problem is one of price levels and not of tariffs. Put prices up 50 percent and we shall put up the dollar value of imports 50 percent. But all of us know how the administration has failed to do that.

The London Conference had for its purpose, at least in part, this accomplishment, but it failed to accomplish anything.

That no general tariff changes are needed is further shown by the figures already cited, which show that the decline in dollar value of goods on the free list has been greater than those subject to duty because unit prices have gone lower for free-list articles, which are more generally raw materials, than for dutiable articles, which are more generally manufactured.

Mr. President, carrying this study one step further, we find how completely this is a problem of price levels responsive to demand and purchasing power and not to tariff rates. I have selected a list of 15 articles which represented 60 percent of our imports in 1929; such items as tea, coffee, cocoa, rubber, silk, hides and skins, furs, copper, tin, petroleum, and so forth.

The dollar value of our imports of these 15 articles rose from $964,583,000 in 1910 to 1914—the pre-war parity period talked about so much, and for which Government figures are readily available—to $2,614,975,000 in 1929, and declined again to slightly below pre-war levels to $829,855,000 by 1932, and to almost exactly pre-war levels by 1933, due to a slight rise in prices of several of the items. The average dollar value of our imports of these 15 items, representing 60 percent of our imports, was the same for 1931, 1932, and 1933 as for the pre-war period, although their dollar value had risen to three times that level in 1929. It is a false and mistaken notion to assume that we can increase our exports by any change in our tariff rates, or merely by some bargain, such as our trade of wheat with Brazil for her coffee. We must first pay more for what we are importing, which means world price adjustment, so then foreign nations can buy from us, if we want to restore dollar value of exports. This is apparent at once when we note that our exports rose and fell in dollar value as prices went up and fell down, and, further, that they followed the same general course as imports. When we paid high prices for imports, our dollar sales were correspondingly high. During the few years of excess sales we were either paying foreign debts or lending money to those who bought from us, and for that reason, Mr. President, largely, our imports increased to such a point as to be pointed to at this time as the reason why we should do something to increase our foreign commerce, when the fact remains that it was not because of the increase of the commodities which came to our shores but the price that the American consumer was willing to pay for these commodities, as compared with another period in which they would have been enabled to buy these products very much cheaper providing they had the purchasing power with which to make the purchases.

Our old foreign-debt accounts have virtually been repudiated, and we should not continue an unwise lending policy to restore the enjoyment of that trade which was ours in that inflated period of 1929.

Hence our export policy must be coordinated with our financial position, but this certainly does not mean that we shall open our markets to a flood of low-priced foreign goods, thereby depressing our prices and increasing our unemployment. This is no time to add to the world's mess of quotas, licenses, permits, exchange controls, and a hundred other devices.

Mr. Donham, dean of the school of business administration of Harvard University, discussed this question with a great deal of force, and to me, in a very convincing way, pointing out why we should build from within and adopt the same principle that has been adopted by every European nation. We have failed miserably, Mr. President, to respond to the appeals of such men as Dean Donham. It is time thoughtfully to study our new international-credit position and adjust our commerce accordingly.

In order that no doubt may arise as to the accuracy of my statements, I have prepared the detailed statistics of the dollar value of imports of each of these 15 items for the pre-war period, and for the years 1929 to 1932, inclusive.

I ask that this table may be printed as a part of my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

United States general imports—Value (15 selected groups)

Item	1910-14	1929	1930	1931	1932
Rubber and manufactures	$210,698,000	$247,420,000	$114,298,000	$76,379,000	$34,272,813
Sugar and related products	106,414,000	229,740,000	150,537,000	122,613,000	105,025,010
Coffee	101,455,000	302,396,882	209,471,802	174,904,211	136,811,614
Tea	16,732,000	25,866,089	22,594,645	18,757,123	12,455,426
Cocoa and manufactures	16,699,000	51,271,164	32,213,729	23,853,380	20,092,908
Hides and skins	104,581,000	137,281,000	92,208,000	50,302,000	22,492,038

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have shown conclusively, I think—

First. That increases in the dollar value of imports during the war and post-war periods were almost entirely a price phenomena;

Second. That the present decreases in the dollar value of imports back to pre-war levels also are a result of the price decline;

Third. That if we wish to increase the dollar value of our imports at this time it should be through a world-wide price-raising program, if that be possible, rather than through reduction in tariffs, which would deluge our markets with low-priced goods from the low-wage countries, thus breaking down our own price structure, and destroying agriculture and increasing unemployment; and,

Fourth. That high tariff rates were not the controlling feature in that the decline in dollar value of imports was equally apparent in dutiable and free goods; in fact, the decline in the dollar value of imports was greater in the case of goods on the free list than those on the dutiable list.

So it can be easily understood, Mr. President, that the error on the part of those who claim that high tariff rates are responsible for the decline in our foreign trade is due to the fact that no one has given serious study to the real picture which our imports and our exports portray. When we remember that 69.5 percent of all the imports coming to this country are free, as compared with 30.5 percent that are dutiable, and bear in mind the picture I have portrayed, it is, indeed, a wonder that we are as prosperous as we are as a nation, notwithstanding the convictions of the distinguished senior Senator from the great State of Tennessee.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I understand that the Senator is now emphasizing the fact that the percentage of falling off of our imports is larger in the case of commodities on the free list than it is in the case of commodities on the dutiable list.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is true.

Mr. FESS. That is the conclusive answer to all the talk to the effect that the high tariff is the cause of the falling off of our imports.

Mr. HATFIELD. That, I think, is correct.

We must now turn our attention to the other phase of the program, namely, that we must lower tariffs and admit greater quantities of goods, and that is what we hear today from the lips of the Senator from Tennessee, so that in turn—

First. We may increase our exports;

Second. Foreigners may pay their annual interest and other service charges; and Third. Foreigners may liquidate their indebtedness to us.

Fourth. We must add seven or eight millions to the unemployed and deprive more than 1,000,000 farmers of their properties.

These four propositions must be examined separately.

The first of these propositions, namely, that we should lower duties in order to increase values of imports in order that we may increase our exports, is especially vulnerable. We have not been given the details, and the Senate should be definitely advised of pertinent details before it delegates to administration officers the right finally to negotiate any trades.

I, as one Senator, feel that it is incumbent upon me to take the position I have taken, so that I may report to the 1,800,000 people who I in part represent in the confines of West Virginia that I have protected their work opportunities, and in protecting their work opportunities it was necessary for me to protect the industries which give them employment.

Unless and until this shall be done the Senate should insist that each proposed agreement, first, shall be the subject of a public hearing; second, that it shall be submitted to the Senate for approval; or, third, that it shall be submitted to Congress and a proper period allowed for either the House or Senate, or both, by resolution to indicate approval thereof.

Can you conceive, Mr. President, of a Chief Executive or any group of men being more familiar with the industries, the wants and the needs of the rank and file of the people, than are the Representatives in Congress from the respective districts of the 48 States of the Union, plus the Senators from those States, the men who have been elected by the voice of the people of these respective districts and States? Or can one conceive that a delegated power will be used in such a way as to afford greater protection or give greater consideration to the individual man or to the individual industry than will the power if exercised directly by the Congress of the United States?

Certainly blanket authority to make any and all trades which might occur to any clerk in any of the interested departments would open the way to the wildest orgy of efforts by importers and exporters to have secret negotiations carried through, and in turn would force every American group of farmers, every labor group, and industrial and financial groups to keep a research staff, a legal staff, and a lobbying staff here in Washington trying to defend their present protection and to ward off potential trades. There would also be an army of foreign suppliants, such as we have known during periods of tariff making; and should this bill become a law we will see them here, as they are here at this hour, in the hope that some industry under the American flag may be embarrassed to the benefit of some industry in Europe or the Orient. Members of Congress would be called upon daily to learn whether some industry in their State or district was under consideration. Under the secret operations of reciprocal tariff bargaining no Representative or Senator would know until the mischief had been done and embarrassment had necessarily ensued of any agreement that had been entered into between our own Government and some foreign government. There should be added to the bill an amendment to require the State Department to advise Members of Congress of commodities which are being considered. Otherwise there would be tariff chaos.

Mr. President, unless various protective devices are written into the pending bill, there will be such uncertainty as to what is going on behind closed doors that no industry will be willing or able to make plans 60 days ahead. Banks will not make loans. They are not making loans now. They surely will not make loans in such an uncertain financial condition as would be brought about and as would affect the average industry under a tariff control under the domination of one man whose ideas and convictions are to place American industry upon a serious competitive basis with the underpaid wage earner of Europe and the Orient.

Labor will be in constant fear that it will be unemployed. Farmers will not dare to plant crops which may be traded. Talk of recovery! No suggestion would do more to delay recovery than this proposal for secret executive tariff revision.

Mr. President, I have shouldered the responsibilities of the chief executive of my State. I would not want the responsibility thrust upon me that is proposed in the pending measure. It is too broad. It represents too great a power. To fail in its proper use would mean the destruction of the industrial institutions of the country and would send out upon the highway the wage earner who today has employment, looking for work when there would be none to be found.

Even now we constantly hear of efforts on the part of interests in Mexico and Cuba and of interests in Canada to let in fresh vegetables at lower rates of duty. How are the Senators from Florida, Texas, and California going to react to this? We hear of demands for reducing the duty on long-staple cotton to please England, Egypt, and other foreign groups and certain American buyers. How will Mississippi, Texas, and other States react to this? We hear of efforts of Venezuela, Mexico, and other Latin American countries to send in petroleum and petroleum products. How will Texas and Oklahoma, Kansas and California, and a dozen other States react to this proposal? Have we not got these matters settled now under a flexible tariff provision in the law which requires a public hearing and certification of the findings by the Commission to the Chief Executive of the Nation? Surely we have; and when we have that kind of protection invoked by the law of the land, industry can feel secure and can go forward.

Every day we hear of efforts to bring in cattle from Canada and Mexico and beef from Argentina. Our cattlemen are in a constant state of fear. They saw our administration last year bring in literally millions of pounds of canned beef from Argentina for the Civilian Conservation Corps camps, while our own cattle could not be sold at any price, even with the present tariff.

Recently I read in the newspapers a news release given out by the Secretary of Agriculture, after the purchase of this canned beef by the Government from South America, advising the farmer, who had his old cow for sale with the idea of retaining and developing her young heifer, that he should sell the heifer and keep the old cow. That is the picture that was portrayed in this news release. Imagine the consternation of the farmer when he finds out how the Government managers have failed to protect him.

Congress should not trust any administration official who cannot be recalled, who is not subject to a vote from home, who is hidden away where he can make secret arrangements which cannot be passed upon by any representative official. Are Senators from farm and industrial States going to delegate full authority, when it is admitted that some ten million are unemployed? In my address of May 1, I named fully 300 articles or commodities which even now may be under discussion and which are marked for slaughter. Perhaps before this subject is disposed of we may find it desirable to discuss the merits of some of these tariff rates in detail and have the Senators interested indicate where they stand on this trading program.

It is said we must let in these imports in order to build up our exports. For instance, we must either export more cotton or practice production control. I have searched the record and find that during 1909–14 our average annual exports of unmanufactured cotton amounted to 8,850,000 bales, each equal to 500 pounds, and at an average annual value of $529,475,000, or an average value of almost exactly 12 cents per pound. That was a very profitable period for the cotton producer. He was satisfied with the price he was receiving for his product. But what do we find in 1932? I find that in 1932 we exported 9,600,000 bales, with a value of $345,164,000, or only 7⅛ cents per pound; and in 1933 we exported 9,050,000 bales, with a value of $398,216,000, or about 8⅘ cents per pound. Thus we are exporting substantially more cotton than in pre-war years, but in 1932 and 1933 the prices were low. If we had received 12 cents per pound, as in 1909–14, our exports for the last 2 years would have had an average value of $560,000,000 instead of a little over $370,000,000—an increase of nearly $200,000,000 a year in value of exports in this one item alone. This is merely another illustration proving that the problem is a price problem and not a tariff problem. I understand that the price of cotton during recent months has ranged as high as 12 cents, so that our exports this year, if price and quantity remain, should equal the pre-war level without any tariff tinkering.

If the problem is one of an expanded cotton crop, then we should first stimulate domestic consumption. Southern cotton farmers use great quantities of burlap on their farms made from imported jute. We use great quantities of woolen carpets and rugs made from imported wool. A dozen other examples could be given. Let us take steps first to extend our tremendously potential domestic market rather than trade off some other American industry.

Recently I read in the Chicago Tribune an article which discloses the pitiful plight of the small cotton worker, the everyday man who works in the cotton field along the highway, telling how he is now looking for an opportunity to have a free ride to some industrial section with the hope of securing employment, having had his cotton-production possibilities destroyed as a result of the cotton control bill which recently was passed by the Congress. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks the article to which I have just referred.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

[See exhibit A.]

Mr. HATFIELD. Let us emulate the great European nations in building up and developing our home industries and encouraging them through proper publicity, through the different departments that deal with these problems at home; for if we trade off our products for some other farm crops or manufactured products, throwing farmers and laborers out of work, we will lose the present American market for cotton faster than we will build up a new foreign market.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hayden	Reynolds
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Davis	Keyes	Russell
Bailey	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bankhead	Dieterich	Logan	Sheppard
Barbour	Dill	Lonergan	Shipstead
Barkley	Duffy	Long	Smith
Black	Erickson	McCarran	Steiwer
Bone	Fess	McGill	Stephens
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Frazier	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Thompson
Bulow	Gibson	Neely	Townsend
Byrd	Glass	Norbeck	Tydings
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Norris	Vandenberg

Carey	Hale	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark	Harrison	Overton	Walcott
Connally	Hastings	Patterson	Walsh
Coolidge	Hatch	Pittman	Wheeler
Copeland	Hatfield	Pope	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I should like to have the attention of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] for just a moment.

In order to complete my remarks, I ask that I may be permitted to read a few lines from a statement in the RECORD embodying Democratic philosophy, which I have followed, and which was a source of inspiration to me before I entered this body.

Mr. President, I ran for the Senate in the fall of 1930, and took my seat in January 1932. Before I was a candidate for the Senate, on March 22, 1930, there was offered in the Senate by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] an amendment to increase the ad valorem duty on certain paper, an amendment to paragraph 1405 of the pending tariff bill, to place a duty of 3 cents per pound and 10 percent ad valorem on plain basic paper and 3 cents per pound and 20 percent ad valorem on that which had been albumenized or sensitized.

I wish to read the following from the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee in the discussion of that amendment on March 22, 1930, appearing on page 5905 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date:

> Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, with this statement I am going to leave the matter to the Senate. It seems to me there is but one question. Here are two great corporations, one the Eastman Kodak Co., the other the Agfa-Ansco Co. One is an American company, the other is a German company. On general principles, it seems to me that we ought to be willing to take the side of the American company. I am willing to do so, and I hope the Senate on a vote will do likewise.
> Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes; it is the paper that is produced by the monopoly, and those who are fighting it are a German monopoly by the name of the Agfa-Ansco Co. It is a fight between a German monopoly and an American monopoly, if the Senator wants to put it that way, and, of course, anybody can choose which monopoly he is for, whether the American or the foreign monopoly.

I wish to read further inspirational sentences from the discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, as far as he has gone. I entertain the same sentiments today.

Mr. LONG. I desire to read further inspirational sentences from the Senator from Tennessee, which I am sure will stay with us through the night, and no doubt will bring the Senator from Tennessee back to the faith of the fathers.

On page 5907 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD appears the following:

Mr. McKELLAR. The Ansco Corporation was organized in 1928, according to my information. It was formerly directed and controlled by the German I.G., commonly known as the "German I.G. Chemical and Dye Trust." Recently the German I.G. formed an American I.G. chemical corporation and apparently now conducts its activities in the United States through the instrumentality of the American I.G. Co. The power, wealth, and activities of the German I.G. Trust are well known among American manufacturers. It is most natural for a powerful group of foreign companies to seek to secure the entry of foreign-made basic paper at a low rate in order to reduce materially their cost of the finished paper, which they sell to American people. That is the fact about it. There is no doubt in the world about it being the German trust that wants to bring this paper in free. The American trust, if we may call it that, as some people do, want a duty on it. That is the situation.

So the Senator stated that as a basic principle, which inspired me, as it did him then.

I leave these remarks with the Senate, hoping that when the Senator from Tennessee shall return to his study tonight he will have opportunity to find out that he was following another famous Tennessean, President Andrew Jackson. My State will always be grateful and will follow along with the principles of these illustrious Tennesseans, Andrew Jackson and Senator McKELLAR.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I again thank the Senator most cordially.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, time does not permit at this moment to set down other illustrations. They all point to the same conclusions. If we pass this bill, it will probably bring out many other illustrations showing we cannot afford to go into a wholesale secret set of trades, giving away our domestic markets in the vain hope of getting a better foreign one.

Mr. President, there appeared an editorial a few years ago in a paper named "Labor." This editorial is so appropriate to the picture which I have portrayed dealing with the home markets that I feel impelled to read it at this time. It deals with the home markets, as I have stated. It states that the home market is nine times as important as the foreign market. Then it tells, Mr. President, how to stimulate the home market. I quote:

A new financial journal, the National Sphere, has an article on its cover which begins as follows:

"With 7 percent of the world's population, the United States consumes 48 percent of the world's coffee, 53 percent of its tin, 56 percent of its rubber, 21 percent of its sugar, 72 percent of its silk, 36 percent of its coal, 42 percent of its pig iron, 47 percent of its copper, 69 percent of its crude petroleum, and owns twenty-three of the thirty million running automobiles.

"While the population of the United States was increasing by 60 percent, industrial production increased by 300 percent. The purchasing power of the 120,000,000 citizens of this country is greater than that of the 500,000,000 Europeans and much greater than that of the more than a billion Asiatics."

All of which is true. But then, on an inside page, is another article headed "Export Trade Becomes Vital to American Prosperity." It urges the "stimulation" of foreign markets, because they take about 10 percent of the output of this country each year. I again quote:

It seems to Labor that the Sphere needs to learn on its inside pages the lesson taught on its cover.

If 90 percent of our production is consumed at home and only 10 percent goes abroad, then it is surely nine times as important to stimulate the home market as to stimulate the foreign market.

America's purchasing power is greater than that of a 4 times larger population in Europe and a 10 times larger population in Asia because American wages are relatively high.

Make these wages higher still and the buying power of the home market will increase in full proportion. Wipe out the periods of unemployment or half employment and there will be another increase in buying power.

A 1 percent gain in consuming power of the home market is equal to 9 percent boost in the demands of the rest of the world, and the home market is in our sole control, while the foreign markets are ruled by the financiers, governments, and customs of other nations.

The thing really vital to American prosperity is steady employment at high wages. The foreign market is important, valuable, but the heart of our prosperity—when we have it—is at home.

Mr. President, that is one of the most patriotic editorials that I have ever read in any American paper, and if we, as Americans should practice this principle, adhere to it, and build from within, we would accomplish more, we would achieve it more quickly, and reestablish that prosperous condition that we once enjoyed as a nation of people by building from within, reducing the hours of employment, and, at the same time, protecting the employment opportunities of the wage earners in this Republic against the cheap products which come into competition with their toil when they come to our ports in America, or at least require their production on a parity with the products of the home industry.

Mr. President, the second proposition is that we must open our markets by abandonment of certain branches of agriculture and manufacturing to successful foreign competition, in order to make it possible for foreign debtors—individuals, partnerships, corporations, and governments—to pay the service charges on their debts.

We were not accorded those privileges, Mr. President, when we were a debtor nation, which I will be able to disclose in the paragraphs which are to follow.

If we are going to pursue any such policy, it would be better to abandon our immigration restrictions and let these foreign people in here, and raise them from their low standard of living to our higher standards, than to lower our own by letting in a flood of goods; it would be better to abandon our merchant marine, which would be equal to the service charges on a large share of these foreign debts, and return to the policy of paying freight and insurance to foreign nationals, thus furnishing them the money with which to pay their service charges on their debts. I favor neither of these methods, however. There are other methods of taking care of the service charges on our foreign investments than the one proposed of stimulating imports, which is synonymous with lowering our prices, thus ruining our farmers, lowering wages, and leading to vast unemployment.

But I do not favor any of the methods suggested—lowered tariffs, trading off our markets, letting down our immigration restrictions, or abandoning our merchant marine. I propose to analyze this problem briefly to show that no such radical program of so-called "reform" is necessary and that each such proposal would only delay recovery, and that none of them are appropriate reform measures to consider at this time. I am glad to observe that the administration, under fire from the Republican Members in the House of Representatives, has openly at least abandoned the idea of cancelation or compromising foreign government debts as a part of this trading program. It is equally unwise to trade off our market and our farmers, laborers, manufacturing, forestry, mining, fishing, financing, and the other activities of our people.

Here, Mr. President, under our flag, where more than half of the business of the entire world is done, is to be found the greatest market on God's earth for every group. People from every clime and every land are seeking an opportunity at least to enjoy a part of the home market here under the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. President, for about 15 years—from 1918 to 1933–34—our financiers and our Government have been in a net creditor position—namely, our foreign investments have exceeded our debts to foreigners. But the rank and file of the people were in a debtor position.

They are, Mr. President, in a debtor position at the present time. They are almost, Mr. President, in a bankrupt position, and it remains to be seen whether they will be redeemed from this impoverished condition by this administration, and there is only one way to do it, and that is to build up the purchasing power of the individual man.

For a full 150 years before that—from 1765 to 1918—we were a debtor nation, and I am not so sure that we ever had a favorable balance in commerce and trade in dealing with imports and exports. When we read the recorded facts dealing with the industrial history of this country, if we add our colonial period, we may say that we were a debtor nation from the date of discovery up to about 1918, '19, '20. That did not mean that we were sinking to a lower level of civilization, Mr. President, but to the contrary, we were going forward, onward, and upward in our progress toward higher civilization, until today we stand upon the pinnacle overlooking every other nation in our progress among the nations. An individual debtor, or a debtor nation, with such marvelous assets in men and materials, may be moving forward to bigger and better accomplishments, as we did.

Thus it was for us for a century, or even two centuries, and so it can be with some outside countries which are now debtors to us. It does not follow that we should withdraw from active business relations, political relations, or social relations merely because we so unwisely have become a new creditor government, while the masses of the people were being lured more and more deeply into debt.

Mr. President, a study of our international trade shows that in every year except 14, from 1776 to 1875, a period of 100 years, we had an unfavorable balance of trade. Here we were, a debtor nation; and yet we continued for a hundred years, except 14 scattered years, to get deeper and deeper in debt and to have an unfavorable trade balance against us, but we were going forward, we were developing. Our educational system was developing. Our professional system of medical science and chemical science was developing, and today those professional men do not have to look to Europe for a finished education, because they can find it within the confines of our own Republic. We were saved by our vast national resources, the vast flow of immigration, and the courage and hardihood of the individual American, then unregimented, before the enactment of the National Recovery Act.

Let me add that in that 100-year period the net unfavorable balance adds up to a grand total of $2,346,125,000, an infinitesimal sum compared with the vast amount of money which we dissipated in our participation in the brawls of Europe from April 6, 1917, until the conclusion of that conflict. Interest was accumulating all of that period and being added to the debt by being reinvested in this country. Furthermore, we had payments to make for marine insurance, freights, immigrant remittances, and so forth. It has been estimated that by 1875 our indebtedness was no less than $5,000,000,000, and service charges were probably equal to $250,000,000 a year. In addition, we had to pay insurance, freight, and other charges for foreign service rendered. But our position was unique in the world. We were a free people, with a democratic Government.

Then our program commenced to turn. From 1876 to 1896, a period of 20 years, we had an average annual favorable balance of $109,343,000. This favorable balance was apparently less than one half enough to pay foreign interest and other service charges. It is variously estimated that during that 20-year period our public and private indebtedness to foreigners increased $150,000,000 a year, largely through reinvestment here of earnings on former investments and building of factories here, or a total of from $3,000,000,000, to a total indebtedness of possibly $8,000,000,000.

The American people reaped the whirlwind as to the attitude of the Europeans when the great depression came in 1929 in the withdrawal of their investments and the cashing in of their investments, which brought havoc and distress to the American people.

Again, we improved our trade relations, and from 1896 to 1910 our favorable balance increased to an annual average of $443,766,000. In view of our great foreign debt, and the fact that we had insurance, freight, and other foreign-service charges to meet in addition to interest, it is fair to assume that our foreign indebtedness may have continued to increase, but at a very slow rate. It is well known that beginning soon after 1896 we began to make very substantial foreign investments of our own in Cuba, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, Canada, Mexico, Panama, and elsewhere.

Between 1911 and 1915 we apparently began to reduce our foreign indebtedness, or to rapidly build up our own foreign investments, since our balance of trade during that 5-year period averaged $658,220,000 annually. During that period, or at least up to the middle of 1914—it is quite possible that so-called "invisible items"—foreign travel, immigrant remittances, foreign contributions for reduction, medical research, missionaries, and so forth, added to interest, insurance, freight, and other service charges may have taken most of our favorable balance so that the World War may have been the real beginning of the change in our status from a debtor nation to a creditor nation.

Our own indebtedness to foreigners was probably near its peak in 1914. During the 5-year period, 1916–20, our favorable balance of trade averaged $3,162,836,000 a year, or a total favorable balance of $15,814,180,000. This was enough to pay average carrying charges of $400,000,000 a year and liquidate $8,000,000,000 in foreign indebtedness, leaving foreign investments for ourselves of some $6,000,000,000. It is not to be concluded that we did in fact pay off all foreign obligations. As late as 1930 it was estimated that foreign investments in this country still amounted to nearly $5,000,000,000, so that in fact our own foreign loans had evidently gone far above $6,000,000,000. This, of course, was the period of reckless, large loans to foreign governments by our Government and through the sale of foreign securities to our people.

The 10-year period 1921–30 saw a further piling-up of private, as distinct from Government, foreign investments, since now we supplied our own marine insurance and merchant marine, at least in part; had large earnings on foreign investments already made; and continued to have a large, favorable balance of trade. Our average annual trade balance from 1921 to 1925, inclusive, was $946,924,000, while from 1926 to 1930, inclusive, it averaged $743,845,000—a total for the 10-year period of $8,453,845,000. From these figures it is easy to visualize how we so rapidly changed from a net debtor Nation of from eight to ten billion dollars in 1914 to a net creditor position of at least $20,000,000,000 in 1934, even after greatly reduced foreign government obligations.

However, the change is not so simple as these figures might make it appear. When the World War began, our National Government was free from debt, with the exception of about $1,225,000,000. By the time the post-war records were balanced, our national debt had mounted to over $25,000,000,000; and when we partially canceled or compromised debts of foreign governments to our Government, it was for an amount not far from one half this amount. When we discuss our status as a great creditor nation—a comparatively small group of our citizens with $15,000,000,000 invested abroad, and our Government with foreign credits of ten billions—and talk of allowing imports so that foreigners and their governments may pay service charges and liquidate indebtedness, let us not overlook the fact that our Government is also indebted to its citizens, or soon will be, to the extent of over $30,000,000,000, and that in order to service these debts and liquidate them someone will have to pay taxes of a billion dollars yearly. These taxes will not be paid by the foreign citizens who owe our citizens, or the foreign governments who owe our Government, but by our own people. If our own people are going to have to pay these national taxes in the smaller units where they live, coming up to the State unit, and then taking care of the Federal Government charges, together with the emergency relief charges, then we dare not at this time knock out from under them their home markets by increasing imports, lowering prices and wages, and forcing more unemployment.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks at this point an analysis of our favorable and unfavorable balances of trade from 1776 to 1930.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Analysis of export and import trade of the United States, 1776 to 1930

Year	Average annual			Total excess of exports (+) of imports (−)
	Exports	Imports	Excess of exports (+) of imports (−)
1776-90 (estimated)	$30,000,000	$40,000,000	−$10,000,000	−$150,000,000

Mr. HATFIELD. This record discloses a picture that is worth the study of any citizen who is interested in his government's future destiny.

Mr. President, I have made this excursion into the foreign-trade experience of this country for several reasons.

First, I wanted to bring out the fact that for a hundred years we were a debtor country, and yet during all but 14 of these 100 years we had an unfavorable balance of trade, and continued getting deeper and deeper into debt. We were a growing, free, and democratic country, expanding in physical area, developing our resources, increasing in population, and raising our standards of living.

Second, I wish to point out that most of the 15 billions of private foreign investments of our financial people at the present time is likewise in growing, developing countries, for instance, South America in part. Indeed, permit me to point out that in 1932 our private long-term investments in Europe were only $4,432,000,000, while in 1929–30 it was estimated that foreigners (chiefly Europeans) had investments in this country amounting to $4,700,000,000. A real study of this subject probably would disclose the fact that our private investments in Europe are no greater than their private investments in this country.

Our private investments in foreign countries were as follows:

Canada and Newfoundland	$3,999,000,000
Central America	966,000,000
South America	2,982,000,000
West Indies	1,209,000,000
Africa	129,000,000
Asia	1,002,000,000
Oceania	428,000,000
Europe	4,432,000,000
Plus capital of banks and insurance companies	125,000,000
Total	15,272,000,000

It is not at all unlikely that European countries have similar investments in these areas, especially in their own possessions.

From these facts, I see no logic in the suggestion that we must let in more imports merely in order that European countries may be able to service their debts. Indeed, the annual service on the intergovernmental debts is a comparatively trifling item to our two principal European debtors. Neither England nor France is any longer mentioning lack of ability to pay. The annual payment on the debt of England to us for principal and for interest would amount to less than 3½ percent, possibly, of their budget, and in the case of France it would amount to much less than that. So the facts that have been developed prove to me conclusively that we ought to take care of home folks, home industry, and home toilers, and give them first consideration.

In the third place, I wish to point out that the period of restoration and recovery is scarcely a time to force collections. This is another act of deflation and depression, and another obstacle in the way of recovery. Too many instances of this kind are being encountered by the average American in his experience with the banking institutions of this land today. Not only is it individual, but it also affects collective individuals who represent industries, and because of that attitude of the banking institutions of this country I have felt friendly toward legislation that would, from the Federal Treasury itself, give protection and relief to those who cannot secure the proper credit to take care of the investments they have made which they hoped would protect them through their rainy day of life.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude with a few historical facts which are intricately and intimately woven into the growth and development of our national industrial fabric, facts that none will dare to deny. It is a historic truth, Mr. President, and something that every American patriot should read and be governed by in his acts in dealing with responsibilities, public and private, that may come to him as a citizen—we have it inculcated into every fiber of our make-up—that the lamp of experience as recorded in past history is the safest, indeed, the only safe guide for the future.

In referring to past history I do so with the hope that it may impress those who have the future destiny of our Government in hand, that they will reflect seriously as to this great responsibility that is theirs, and on the results that may readily come if disregard and disrespect are the treatment accorded these historical facts.

I do not agree, Mr. President, that we are to rebuild a new nation upon the ruins of the old; for to undertake such a Herculean task would be largely to cast off all that has been accomplished in the development of our resources and our national wealth, representing some $350,000,000,000 in gold, with a value in each dollar representing 23.22 grains.

Past history records the fact, Mr. President, that 100 years ago the same political tactics were adopted that were undertaken in the year 1929 under Mr. Charles Michaelson, of the Democratic National Propaganda Bureau here in Washington; the tariff then, as now, being the occasion for arousing hatred on the part of planters and individual citizens who possibly were more or less unfamiliar with our natural growth in manufactures. These methods were successful then with results which none would wish repeated; but unless these methods are promptly abandoned, their effect in the twentieth century will be what it was in the nineteenth.

I invite every patriotic American to read that history and the results which followed in the industrial growth of our Nation, and how they affected the individual man who lived in those days.

The citizenship of America, from the individual citizen's point of view, and from an agricultural and industrial point of view, let me urge, is so interrelated that we can well be classed as one great family; and in that true sense Americans are all kinsfolk. He who teaches otherwise is unworthy of public confidence.

The first Congress of the United States, history records, was composed largely of farmers, and they were wise men. They understood full well that if all Americans were to remain tillers of the soil, it would be vain to plant or sow except for their immediate families. Therefore, as everyone knows, the first legislative act of the first Congress of farmers and planters was a protective tariff bill. The reading of the industrial history of America establishes this fact. It establishes these further facts:

First. Every manufacturing enterprise in the United States had its origin in a feeling of security engendered by ample tariff protection on its product before the industry was established. By this I mean to be understood as claiming that the Republican Party alone is entitled to credit for every manufacturing enterprise established in this country since 1861. If any gentleman on the other side will name a single industry that owes its origin to Democratic legislation, barring the production of a few chemicals as the result of a protective tariff thereon as a war measure, I will make public apology.

Mr. President, the chemical industry was developed during the World War, and it is my purpose to discuss that great industry before the close of the debate; it is so important. Indeed, there is hardly an industry in the United States today that is being operated in which the chemical equation does not enter fully, and no industry could successfully exist and develop, to the satisfaction of the consumer, without the chemical equation.

Second. Whenever tariff rates have been revised upward, industry and commerce have promptly responded, and the party responsible has never lost control except at the zenith of its achievement, and when the country could stand prosperity no longer.

Third. Whenever tariff rates have been revised downward, however slightly or gradually, industrial ruin has ensued, and the party responsible for the downward revision has invariably and always lost control amid popular execration.

Fourth. Per capita importations are always larger when American producers are given ample security against foreign competition than under a tariff-for-revenue-only policy. To this historic fact there never has been an exception, and never will be one.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. While the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is in the Chamber, I wish to have it stated in the RECORD that, as a Senator, whether we are allowed to take up and act on the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia or not, I request publicly that the Secretary of State, or the Department of State, send to the Senate the treaty which has been negotiated with Colombia, which is awaiting the enactment of the pending bill for its validity. I wish to have the announcement made that respectfully, with all due courtesy, I request the Department of State to send to the Senate a copy of the treaty which has been negotiated with the Republic of Colombia, fixing certain tariffs which will become validated when this bill shall have been enacted. In other words, inasmuch as it has been announced that our action on the bill will validate that treaty, I think that at least the Senate should have knowledge of such treaties as have already been negotiated, which are to be validated by our action.

I shall be very much disappointed if by tomorrow morning the Department of State shall not indicate its willingness to allow the Senate to have a view of this already executed treaty.

I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, since my name was mentioned, I take it the question just propounded was directed to me.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand there is no objection on the part of the State Department to making public the terms of the treaty referred to. I understood on yesterday that the State Department had sought permission from the other contracting party to have the treaty made public, and that if permission should be granted, the treaty would be made public. I am sure that is the attitude of the State Department.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether he understands that this is a treaty which is to come to the Senate for ratification under the previously existing treaty process, or whether it is a trade agreement, which is not to come to the Senate, but is to be validated under the new power contained in the pending bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that I am not familiar with the proceeding. I only know that yesterday I was informed by the State Department that they understood that some Senator was to make a request that this matter be published. I think they told me who the Senator was who intended to do that and gave me the information I am now giving to the Senate. I presume it is a treaty which would have to be submitted to the Senate. I just imagine that, because I do not know of any authority which the State Department now has to enter into any treaty which does not have to come to the Senate for ratification.

If this matter should be delayed until after the passage of this bill, perhaps the agreement might be made without its coming to the Senate. It seems to me that it would be wise for the matter to wait until this bill is out of the way; but I am merely giving the Senate the information which came to me yesterday. As I understand, the State Department has no objection to making public anything that is in that agreement or treaty.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I take it from the Senator's observation that he would concede that it would be a rather dubious thing if the State Department in December had made a treaty or trade agreement in contemplation of this ungranted authority, with the expectation of holding it back and not sending it to the Senate under the treaty process. I take it that the Senator thinks that would be a rather doubtful contemplation.

Mr. HARRISON. I made the statement because I know there are some gentlemen who seize upon everything in order to make another speech, and I think it is rather unfortunate that the matter is to be concluded now only for the reason that it makes more fuel to be used in this debate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall appreciate it if the Senator will permit me to ask him one further question.

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator apparently agrees that this treaty having been concluded last December, it probably was intended that it should be sent to the Senate for confirmation ultimately, in the regular process. If that be so, I ask the Senator why the State Department press release on December 15, 1933, stated that—

> The agreement will come into force after the necessary legislative action shall have been taken in the United States and Colombia.

Would not that lead to the reasonable interpretation that in December they had negotiated an agreement in contemplation of this subsequent power?

Mr. HARRISON. That inference might be drawn; and if it should be, I do not think there ought to be any criticism because of it. I will say to the Senate, however, that the State Department inform me that they have no objection to making the treaty public if someone wants that to be done, and they are only requesting the consent of the other nation which is a party to it before making it public.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then there would be no objection to the adoption of the resolution asking for the treaty?

Mr. HARRISON. I shall object to its adoption now. I desire to get the tariff bill out of the way before we take up something else.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, my understanding of this matter is a little bit clouded. I had understood from the Senator from Mississippi that the State Department were willing to send the treaty here, and were only waiting for the permission of the Republic of Colombia. I was under the impression that they had asked for that permission, and that it ought to be merely a matter of a day when they would hear from the Republic of Colombia as to whether or not they could make this treaty visible to the Senate. In other words, it has quite a bearing on our action on the pending bill, in view of the news report which has been read by the Senator from Michigan to the effect that that treaty has been negotiated and is waiting upon our legislative action for its ratification. If any other different view might be taken of the treaty, we should see it. If this is the bill that ratifies the treaty, we ought to see the treaty. If a separate ratification of the treaty is necessary, we ought to see it. The subject has been debated here several days.

This resolution was introduced yesterday, but it was mentioned day before yesterday. I hope we shall have the treaty by tomorrow.

I should like to look the treaty over. I am satisfied that it clearly affects the people of the South. We are competitors of the Republic of Colombia. They compete with our meat, Mr. President. They furnish meat to this country. They furnish products which take the place of our cottonseed oil and our vegetable oil, and they furnish products which come in direct competition with our mineral oil.

I know that if this treaty is very extensive in its terms it takes something away from us. We should like to know, together with the people in West Virginia, what the treaty has in it. I hope there will not be much delay in furnishing the treaty to us; that if the State Department has not already sent the necessary telegram or cable, or communicated with the Colombian Embassy, it will do so tonight. I cannot see why Colombia should undertake to keep the treaty secret, unless Colombia felt that if the American people knew its contents they would object to it.

It may be that there is something in the treaty which is so favorable to the Colombian concerns that they feel that the discovery by American interests that these institutions of Colombia are to take some of their business would injure the status of the treaty. If that attitude were taken by Colombia, it would be practically the same as telling us that they feel that the knowledge, if it should come to us, would in some way affect the possibility of ratifying the treaty.

All that, Mr. President, is a reason why there ought to be no delay in sending the treaty to the Senate. I hope the few words I have spoken, and the very gracious position which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has announced, will result in our obtaining the treaty by sometime tomorrow so that we may find out something of what we may expect from this kind of legislation if this is to be a ratification of the treaty to which reference has been made.

Mr. HATFIELD. Personal investments which our individual citizens have in some industry, the desire of the workers to protect employment opportunities they have or had, the desire of our farmers to retain that market which yearly consumes 98 percent of all they produce other than cotton, wheat, and corn, naturally forces our people to protest against and to resent the passage of legislation which enriches foreigners at the expense and the suffering and privation of our own people. Are they therefore to be condemned because of their anxiety? No, Mr. President. It is my conviction that they are entitled to exaltation, to commendation, and to expressed confidence, for the reason that they are not only laboring to maintain their own interests, but in doing so they are laboring to protect the work opportunities of the toilers, and to afford a desirable market for the farmer, as well as to give their assistance in the way of developing a purchasing power to the average man. When we trace these ramifications of the interest of the individual man as they interrelate themselves to our whole industrial fabric, it is easy to understand that the prosperity of these industries make for our social uplift, not individually, but collectively, to the extent that its influence involves every man and woman of the 125,000,000 people that inhabit our national domain.

So I repeat that under our flag all are kinsfolk, and that nationally, not locally or sectionally, do we prosper or languish.

FINDS A.A.A. PUTS COTTON WORKER IN DESTITUTION—SHARE CROPPERS GO TO CITY FOR AID

By Arthur Evans

SIKESTON, MO., May 20 (special).—Regimentation of cotton growers under the "new deal", as viewed in this region, is throwing a large portion of the share croppers, both white and Negro, who furnish the labor for the crops, out of employment and into destitution.

In this area about one third of them are estimated to be adversely affected.

The cotton worker, who has been on the ragged edge, a few jumps ahead of the wolf, is regarded as sustaining the heaviest load under the acreage-reduction plan of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the Bankhead Act, which aims to cut cotton production to 10,000,000 bales a year. In many cases the pressure is driving share-cropping families off the land.

At Cape Girardeau, on the outer fringe of the Cotton Belt, a few weeks ago white and Negro families in direst poverty were stranded along the highways, seeking to hitch-hike their way into the larger cities. Inquiry developed that they were share croppers, mostly from Arkansas, who had been cut out of work when acreage was reduced.

AID "EASIER IN THE CITIES"

The explanation they gave was that they were "hitting the road" to the cities believing it would be easier to get aid there. Cape Girardeau reported it was feeling the pressure of numerous Negro families who had been starved out of the cotton country, and in St. Louis there were complaints of an influx adding to the unemployed.

Here in Sikeston, a fertile region fond of calling itself a modern "Valley of the Nile", tenant farmers and landowners in general hold that the cotton-control project of the new deal is working havoc with the croppers.

In the eight cotton counties of southeast Missouri some farmers are refusing to sign acreage contracts.

In nearly 2 days spent in Sikeston and vicinity the observer got the same general story from nearly all cotton raisers interrogated. It was to the effect that the share cropper is made the scapegoat, since he is the man least able to stand further economic pinching.

UNREST ABOUNDS IN TOWN

Where the N.R.A., by reducing hours, seeks to make jobs for more workers the A.A.A., by reducing acreage, is reducing jobs for workers, and the farmers here hold that the Washington "brain trust" is thus traveling in opposite directions. In the towns much unrest and dissatisfaction is evident. Criticism is loud.

The argument is that the share cropper is worse off under the recovery program than he was in the worst year of the depression.

The cotton growing set-up around here is of this nature. The landlord owns the land and buildings and pays the taxes. He either operates himself or rents the farm to a tenant who manages and furnishes the seed, mules, and equipment. The growing of the crop is contracted out to the share cropper. He, his wife, and children furnish the labor. He gets a cabin free, the cutting of his firewood, and can plant a garden, but few of them do.

CROPPER GETS A HALF

When the crop is sold the landlord gets one fourth, the tenant farmer one fourth, the share cropper one half.

In general, 10 acres to a man is figured in growing the crop. A cropper with wife and family hereabouts is accounted good for 25 or 30 acres. He can grow more than he can pick, and in picking time additional labor is hired at about 1 cent a pound at present estimates.

The share cropper pays for this, as he is supposed to furnish the labor.

Here is a case which is regarded as typical of what is happening in southeast Missouri under crop allotment and the A.A.A.:

E. P. Coleman, a leading citizen of Sikeston, has a farm a short distance out in Stoddard County. Mr. Coleman is a Harvard man. He specialized in economics.

"But", says he, "I was never taught anything at Harvard like the halfbaked theories of the 'brain trust.'"

HALF IN CULTIVATION

The Coleman farm is 681 acres, of which 367 are in cultivation. An average of 363 acres was planted in cotton in the base period of the acreage-reduction plan. The yield was 234 bales in 1931 and 225 bales in 1932. (A bale is 500 pounds.)

When the contract making began the Coleman farm was cut to 100 bales of tax-exempt cotton. This was a 56-percent cut, where the landlord had been expecting about a 40-percent cut. This reduction to 100 bales was made before the contract making began with the commissars. Then another cut was made to 60 bales, the explanation being this was to "conform" to the reduction program.

On this farm the Government is going to pay rent on 97 acres, at the rate of $7.35 an acre. This price is fixed at the rate of 3½ cents a pound on a yield of 210 pounds to the acre, although the Coleman records show the yield was 355 pounds to the acre over the base period.

"Thus," says Mr. Coleman, "the cotton acreage on this farm was reduced from 323 acres, the base period average, to 145 acres, to produce 60 bales of tax-exempt cotton. Rent is to be paid for 97 acres, making a total of 242 acres. Then we knock off, for luck, 81 acres, which is not to be put into cotton and on which no rent is to be paid.

NOT EQUIPPED FOR CORN

"We can put these 81 acres into corn and sell it; but we're not equipped to grow corn, but cotton. Besides, this would run counter to what the Government is doing in corn States in cutting acreage—the programs don't seem to mesh.

"So our actual reduction in cotton acreage is 178 acres from the old 323 acres, for which the farm will receive $712 in rental payment."

On the Coleman farm are 67 persons in 11 share-cropper families. This year the families will be retained on the land and the reduced cotton acreage divided among them.

In 1931 seven share-cropper families had a return of $2,627.26, or $375.30 per family. Out of this had to come the expense of extra cotton-picking labor.

In 1932, 10 families on the same farm made $3,019.52, an average of $301.95 per family.

In 1934, 11 families on the farm, it is estimated, will make $1,750 or an average of $159.10 per family. This figure is based on the prepared reduction contract plus a 1-cent-a-pound parity payment to the cropper, the price of the lint cotton being estimated at 11 cents a pound, present market value.

MUST BE CARED FOR

The increase in number of families on the farm is due to increased acreage 2 or 3 years ago. The families are still there to be taken care of despite the reduction in acreage.

"From these figures", says Mr. Coleman, "it appears the share cropper is worse off under this recovery plan than he was during the depression in actual money return. And in addition, the cropper is paying 35 percent more for the goods he buys than last year, while consumers are paying processing taxes and higher prices for goods. In other words, the processing tax and higher prices are being paid by the consumer to give hypothetical aid in recovery, while in real operation the program is reducing income of the great bulk of cotton labor, and in numerous instances is swelling the ranks of the unemployed.

"The Government insists the landlords maintain the same number of tenants they had on their farms in 1933. They do not permit the landlord to have a base acreage in excess of the average of 1928 to 1932. During 1933 there was a great increase in cotton acreage. On this particular farm, the croppers who farmed 100 acres in 1933 would be retained to plant 35 acres in 1934. It is ruining the share cropper and is the cause of general unrest, dissatisfaction, and complaint."

BETTER THAN ELSEWHERE

In southeast Missouri, conditions in the cotton fields are rated much higher than in some other sections of the Cotton Belt, and the return of the share cropper has been somewhat greater. Scores of farmers are complaining on the rule-of-thumb method used in ascertaining the acreage reduction. Most farmers do not keep records and apparently did considreable guesswork in figuring how much they raised during the base years. When the returns were footed some counties were given totals above the official records for the counties, and this led to a horizontal cut on top of the initial reduction contemplated. The effect was to penalize landlords and tenants who had kept books.

William Graham, former county judge here, dwelt sorrowfully but explosively on his experience. "The Government gave me a black eye", he said. "I gave them 35 percent off, and they came back and knocked me off 40 percent more. They gave no reason for that last cut."

"Why didn't you tell them to go to Jericho, Jedge?" asked a bystander.

"Because, like the rest of you, I was scared to", answered the judge. "That Bankhead 50-percent tax looked like a sword of Damocles, but everyone is kicking now."

A TYPICAL EXPERIENCE

An experience said to be typical of several hereabouts was narrated by E. L. Limbaugh, a tenant-farm manager for 30 years near Sikeston. He has a 339-acre farm, under high state of cultivation. Of this, 250 acres was in cotton last year.

"My average cotton planting was 200 acres during the base period", said Mr. Limbaugh. "I was entitled to 114 acres under the reduction plan, but they slashed me far below this.

"I have 35 people to feed, and if I had signed the share croppers would be cut out of work. So I told the A.A.A. to go to hell. I shore did. Now I've planted double the cotton allotment they wanted to give me. I'll pay the 6 cents a pound tax, and I'd rather do that than go into the Government deal, after they butchered me up."

"You talk like a Republican," interjected a bystander.

"There isn't a stronger Democrat in southeast Missouri than I am," retorted Mr. Limbaugh. "But the Government is dispossessing the share croppers by putting on the pressure. I kaint feed those 35 people if I sign a contract. It can't be done.

"So I'm going to take the hide with the taller, raise my cotton, and pay the penalty tax."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2442. An act for the protection of the municipal water supply of the city of Salt Lake City, State of Utah;

S. 3114. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges in the State of Oregon;

S. 3355. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone; and

H.R. 3673. An act to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes.

PUGET SOUND BRIDGE, WASHINGTON

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 9530, which passed the House 2 or 3 days ago, and which grants the permission of Congress to Pierce County, in the State of Washington, to erect a bridge over a part of Puget Sound known as "The Narrows", a very narrow arm of water. It involves nothing but a mere permit and is revocable in its terms.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if it has the approval of the committee?

Mr. BONE. It has been reported favorably by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have investigated the matter and I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 9530) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Pierce, a legal subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Puget Sound, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as "The Narrows" was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Pierce, a legal subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Puget Sound, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as "The Narrows", at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

APPROPRIATION FOR ADMINISTRATION OF COTTON AND CATTLE ACTS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 345) to provide funds to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of the acts approved April 21, 1934, and April 7, 1934, relating, respectively, to cotton and to cattle and dairy products, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand this bill is designed to carry out an authorization heretofore provided.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. It carries an appropriation to meet an emergency situation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. McNARY. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. In view of Congress having expressed itself favorably, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. I understand the bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of the act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21, 1934, there is hereby appropriated and made available, pursuant to the authorizations contained in the said act, the funds available for carrying into effect the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, which shall be available for administrative and other expenses, and in addition thereto, the proceeds derived from the tax levied under said act of April 21, 1934, are hereby appropriated and made available for the purposes for which appropriations are authorized to be made under the provisions of section 16 (c) of said act: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Treasury Department and is authorized to transfer to other agencies out of funds hereby made available for carrying out said act of April 21, 1934, such sums as are required to carry out the provisions of said act, including administrative expenses and refunds of taxes.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle and other products as basic agricultural commodities, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 142, 73d Cong.), approved April 7, 1934, there are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, pursuant to the authorizations contained in sections 2 and 6 of said act of April 7, 1934, $100,000,000 for the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and $50,000,000 for the purposes specified in section 6 of said act of April 7, 1934, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and other necessary expenses; in all, $150,000,000, to remain available until December 31, 1935.

The sum of $3,000 of the appropriation "Contingent expenses, House of Representatives: Folding documents, 1933 (03114)" is continued and made available for the same purposes during the fiscal year 1934.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the Senator in charge of the bill willing to recess at this time until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have been very hopeful that we might proceed until 7 o'clock tonight. I can appreciate the Senator's feeling about the matter, and I appreciate my own feeling about it as well. Since we met at 11 o'clock this morning a good deal of the time of the Senate has been devoted to another subject than the bill which is the unfinished business. We have made very little actual progress. If we are going to reach any conclusion on the bill, we must have the set speeches delivered and out of the way. Senators have a right to make set speeches, of course. I do not want to forestall any Senator from making any speech he may desire.

I had very much hoped that we could get a vote on the bill by Friday of this week, so that when we might recess over the weekend. Of course, if we cannot get a vote by Friday, we shall have to remain in session Saturday. We certainly never will pass the bill unless we stay here and get the long speeches out of the way. I had hoped that we might proceed until at least 7 o'clock tonight and then meet early tomorrow, unless we could reach a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate on the bill.

Today is Wednesday. If we could have a unanimous-consent agreement that beginning Friday when the Senate convenes debate on any amendment shall be limited to 15 minutes and on the bill to 30 minutes, and that no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once on the bill or any amendment, I think we could get rid of the set speeches tomorrow, and that would not curtail any Senator in the matter of time. Each Senator would have 45 minutes to discuss the bill. I am hopeful the Senator from Oregon will agree to such an arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not as yet submitted the request.

Mr. McNARY. It was merely an observation or an expression of a hope.

I appreciate the Senator's anxiety to conclude the argument and to place the bill on its final passage. He has been very patient and always accommodating. There are very few Senators here at this time. It is now 5:45 o'clock. We convened this morning at 11 o'clock. I could not enter into a unanimous-consent agreement because of the absence of two or three Senators on this side of the Chamber who by tomorrow will have their speeches ready for delivery. After general discussion of the subject matter shall have been concluded, I shall be very glad to consider a unanimous-consent agreement limiting debate on the bill and amendments. However, in view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that several Senators have had to leave in order to keep engagements, I hope the Senator will consent to recess at this time until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. How many more speeches are to be made on the Senator's side of the Chamber?

Mr. McNARY. I have no desire to conceal anything from the Senator from Mississippi. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has a speech which will probably take an hour and a half. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] has a speech which will probably take an hour or an hour and a half to deliver. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] will have a speech that will probably require 2 hours to deliver. Beyond that I know of no other set speeches. When those Senators shall have had an opportunity to present their views I shall very gladly, and I hope favorably, consider a limitation of debate. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] also has a speech to make.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from West Virginia who just concluded a speech?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; he has a speech in relation to the chemical industry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oregon feel in all probability that it will be possible sometime tomorrow to reach an agreement for limitation of debate?

Mr. McNARY. If the debate proceeds in an orderly fashion and opportunity is given to Members to make their speeches, I shall be glad to consider, later in the day or tomorrow, such a proposal. I am not saying that I shall consent. It depends on whether Senators have an opportunity to give full expression to their views. I hope we may at a very early time reach such an agreement.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think it is possible to conclude consideration of the bill Friday?

Mr. McNARY. I have looked over the amendments, of which there are 24. In view of the amendments and the speeches to be made tomorrow, I doubt if we can finish Friday.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think we can get through at least by Saturday?

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is not a very good witness. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is absent and there are other Senators who want to discuss some of the amendments. I have asked how long they want to discuss the bill or the amendments, and I hope it can be done under limitation of time. That is as far as I think I can go, and as far as the Senator from Mississippi should wish me to go.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to ask the Senator any impertinent question.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator has not done so.

Mr. HARRISON. I am extremely anxious to finish consideration of the bill this week.

Mr. McNARY. I am extremely anxious to be frank about the matter. I hope the Senate will now recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. There is quite a backfire upon my side of the Chamber about the management of the bill and possible lack of expedition in its consideration.

Mr. McNARY. I should be glad to cooperate with the Senator to control that backfire. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. It is pretty hard to control. However, in view of what the Senator from Oregon has said, I shall not object to a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

CONTROL OF CHINCH BUGS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, day before yesterday, on behalf of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] and myself, I introduced a joint resolution (S.J.Res. 126) to provide funds to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with States in control of chinch bugs, and obtained an order for it to lie on the table in the hope that, because of its important character, I might obtain unanimous consent for its early consideration.

I have become convinced that the joint resolution should go to the appropriate committee, in view of the fact that it carries an appropriation of $1,000,000. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent for its reference to the appropriate committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the joint resolution appears to carry an appropriation.

Mr. CLARK. It does.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is not merely an authorization There is no authorization for it, is there?

Mr. CLARK. It is an emergency joint resolution. My thought was that it should go to the Committee on Appropriations, although I am not certain about the reference.

Mr. McNARY. What is the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CLARK. I asked unanimous consent, day before yesterday, that the joint resolution lie on the table. I now request that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RULES IN ACTIONS AT LAW

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should be lacking in grace and deficient as to gratitude if I failed to make expression of appreciation of the valuable and timely assistance rendered by the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the majority leader, and the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the minority leader, in the passage of what is called the "antigangster legislation."

Presuming further upon those two Senators and upon the Senate, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 3040, a bill considered by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and unanimously reported favorably.

It is a bill giving the Supreme Court of the United States power to make and publish rules in actions at law. It does not deprive any State or any citizen of any vital right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, for many years the Supreme Court has exercised the right to make uniform rules for the regulation of practice in equity.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The provisions of this bill have been recommended by the American Bar Association and by other authorities familiar with the subject for a good many years.

Mr. ASHURST. That is also true.

It will be remembered that the Prince of Denmark, in recounting some things that made life wearisome, mentioned "the law's delay." This bill will eliminate a good portion, but, of course, not all of the law's delay.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, do I understand that this bill emanates from the Supreme Court and has the approval of its judges?

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure the Supreme Court would approve.

Mr. JOHNSON. One of the recommendations suggested does not commend itself to me greatly, and that is the reason why I made the query.

Mr. FESS. Is the report a unanimous one?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

I ask that the letter of the Attorney General be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D.C., March 1, 1934.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I enclose herewith a draft of a bill to empower the Supreme Court of the United States to prescribe rules to govern the practice and procedure in civil actions at law in the district courts of the United States and the courts of the District of Columbia. The enactment of this bill would bring about uniformity and simplicity in the practice in actions at law in Federal courts and thus relieve the courts and the bar of controversies and difficulties which are continually arising wholly apart from the merits of the litigation in which they are interested. It seems to me that there can be no substantial objection to the enactment of a measure which would produce so desirable a result, which, apart from its inherent merit, would also, it is believed, contribute to a reduction in the cost of litigation in the Federal courts.

I request that you introduce the enclosed bill and hope that you may be able to give it your support.

Sincerely yours,

HOMER CUMMINGS, Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3040) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in actions at law, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have the power to prescribe, by general rules, for the district courts of the United States and for the courts of the District of Columbia, the forms of process, writs, pleadings, and motions, and the practice and procedure in civil actions at law. Said rules shall neither abridge, enlarge, nor modify the substantive rights of any litigant. They shall take effect 6 months after their promulgation, and thereafter all laws in conflict therewith shall be of no further force or effect.

SEC. 2. The Court may at any time unite the general rules prescribed by it for cases in equity with those in actions at law so as to secure one form of civil action and procedure for both: Provided, however, That in such union of rules the right of trial by jury as at common law and declared by the seventh amendment to the Constitution shall be preserved to the parties inviolate. Such united rules shall not take effect until they shall have been reported to Congress by the Attorney General at the beginning of a regular session thereof and until after the close of such session.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Arizona whether or not this bill provides, or intends to provide, that the present practice in Federal courts in actions at law in which State procedure now governs is to be supplanted by rules of the Supreme Court, so that the lawyers in the various States who have some familiarity with State practice in actions at law will be forced to engage in additional studies to find out whether or not they may safely proceed in actions in the Federal courts.

Mr. ASHURST. No distinction is made in some States between a case at law and a case in equity. This bill is for the purpose of granting the Supreme Court of the United States the right and power to make general rules for the district courts of the United States and for the courts of the District of Columbia with respect to forms of process, pleadings, writs, and motions in civil actions. It does not in any sense destroy or abridge any right or any statute of any State. It does seek to secure some sort of uniformity in law cases in the Federal courts, as has been accomplished in equity cases.

Before the able Senator from Colorado came into the Chamber, I mentioned that one of the things recounted by Hamlet that made life not worth the living was "the law's delay." It is the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary, as is also the opinion of the Attorney General, that no person will be deprived by the bill of any substantial right. It will tend to simplify and make uniform the pleadings and practice in law cases, and the Supreme Court of the United States will have the power to promulgate rules.

Manifestly, the Supreme Court of the United States could not make a rule that would violate any law of any State or of the United States. I hope the able Senator from Colorado will not object to the consideration of the bill. It is recommended by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and was drafted partly, if not wholly, by the Attorney General.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I find myself forced to withdraw my personal judgment on the matter in my deep awe and respect for the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, but my judgment is that the lawyers in the smaller communities who practice only occasionally in the Federal courts will regret the passage of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall ask them to take their revenge on me, then, and on the Department of Justice instead of on the Senator from Colorado. I believe that the bill is an advance. Lawyers, among all the people in our country, must not be the last to make advance. We are trying to simplify procedure.

I am grateful to the Senator for withdrawing his personal objection.

Mr. ADAMS. I could not maintain an objection in the face of the arguments advanced by the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting nominations of sundry postmasters, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR—TREATIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read Executive D, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the United States and the Republic of Finland, signed at Washington, February 13, 1934.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The treaties may go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaties will be passed over.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert H. Jackson, of Jamestown, N.Y., to be Assistant General Counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of Mr. Jackson's nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of R. Kenneth Kerr to be United States Marshal, Southern District of Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, they will be confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 24, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Oh, the love of Almighty God; we pause in silence before its heights and its depths. Oh, the mystery of wonder; oh, the rapture of delight! Let us dedicate ourselves anew to the high and holy cause of humanity, and may the perfume of the sacrifice fill our homes where we dwell, the shrines where we worship, and the places where we work. Heavenly Father, for the sake of others may we engage ourselves in ardent, patient, and undiscouraged toil. We pray that the work we do, the thoughts we think, and the words we speak may be fit to remember and worthy of use for another day. In all that is done in this Chamber let the Golden Rule be magnified, and all to Thy glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. There is one other request I desire to make. A great many Members have asked me to request a meeting tomorrow night to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to. In response to these numerous requests, which have come from both sides of the aisle, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order tomorrow to take a recess until tomorrow night for the purpose of considering only bills on the Private Calendar which are unobjected to, beginning with the star.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman would amend his request for tomorrow night and make it Tuesday night?

Mr. BYRNS. I will if I have to, but I would like to have the meeting tomorrow night.

Mr. TRUAX. I am sure some of our colleagues would want to be present when we consider bills on the Private Calendar and they cannot be here tomorrow night. Under the circumstances I will have to object.

Mr. BYRNS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next it shall be in order to take a recess until Monday evening for the purpose of considering only bills on the Private Calendar which are unobjected to, beginning at the star.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would it not be better to wait until Monday to make the request?

Mr. BYRNS. I am perfectly willing to do that. I can withhold the request until tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. I wish the gentleman would withhold his request until tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNS. I thought if I made the request this week the Members who have bills on the Private Calendar would have ample notice.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. In view of the fact the gentleman is making a unanimous-consent request, does not the gentleman think it would be in order to ask unanimous consent to bring up the arms embargo bill after we conclude the bill now under consideration?

Mr. BYRNS. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] was going to make that request.

Mr. FISH. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to make the request now?

Mr. BYRNS. I think so, and I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] will make the request.

UNEMPLOYMENT

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] is recognized for 10 minutes at this time.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I requested this time to bring to the attention of the House and the country a bill which I introduced this week and which has been given number H.R. 9696.

The general purpose of this bill is to continue the Recovery Act, and the primary reason for introducing this bill was because of general unemployment, particularly in the building trades.

In my home community, a building-stone district, where in normal times 10,000 people were employed, today less than 1,000 men have employment. Suffering, privation, and distress abound. This is true throughout the country wherever building material is produced.

No other branch or group of people in the entire United States is in such distress as the people employed in the building trades. If the people of this industry can be afforded work, it will be what is needed to bring ultimate complete recovery to the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, unmistakable indications showing an uptrend in national recovery are to be seen and we are on the road back to normal times. Commodity prices and the financial markets have shown a decided improvement in the past few months. This is very encouraging.

Today our greatest problem is unemployment. While there has been a noticeable decline in unemployment, it is, however, imperative that further declines be had and that more men are employed and that the machinery be set up now to increase the employment before the coming winter, in order to avoid a dole or a continuance of work which will not create things of lasting benefit.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND ITS EFFECT

Statistics compiled by the American Federation of Labor show that of the 40,000,000 persons engaged in gainful employment during normal times, 11,000,000 are out of work. Other agencies show the unemployment to range from 8,000,000 up. Unless we maintain the present uptrend in business, the coming winter would add another million workers to the ranks of the unemployed; therefore, it is imperative that further steps be taken to see that this does not occur. Many who have been able to retain their jobs during these troublesome times have had drastic reductions in wages. Many others have only had part-time work, accordingly reducing the purchasing power of those employed. Many of the workers being on half time are buying one half of what they did normally buy. No lasting improvement in business can be expected until the wage earner has full-time employment and full-time pay rolls.

THE REMEDY

Employment of labor is the remedy. The employment of labor, if it be used in the immediate use of material and supplies at the place where the labor is performed, in turn, will create fabrication of material back in shops, factories, and mills and start an endless chain requiring both labor, materials, and merchandise. That process is so much more effective than a dole, and, may it be pointed out, that either employment be furnished or the dole is imperative. This rich Nation is not going to permit starvation of its citizens. The dole admits that many of the Nation's good citizens are starving, but it creates nothing substantial and leaves other thousands and millions in its wake ultimately in the same condition; that is to say, ultimately thousands who contribute to the dole will, if long continued, reach the same status themselves.

WORK

In my opinion, the proper solution for our economic problems and our unemployment lies in producing work of a kind that will furnish the greatest amount of useful employment and consume the most materials without adding to the present surplus of marketable goods. I believe one of the most feasible plans and one that would bring the greatest return per dollar invested would be a wide-spread acceptance of the use of the Government's offer to loan municipalities money to finance their projects. Some months ago I urged Mr. Ickes, of the Interior Department, to hasten the construction of Federal projects throughout the country of post-office buildings and other Federal buildings, which program was at a standstill. I subsequently introduced a bill of $125,000,000 to take care of this. I later introduced a bill for $50,000,000 to be used to further and complete the Government's building program in the city of Washington, the Apex, and other buildings to be included. I find, however, that even though these amounts were granted and earmarked, that they would not be even a starter toward the amount necessary to bring recovery to the Nation.

$2,500,000,000 FOR NATIONAL RECOVERY

I want it to be known and distinctly understood that in introducing the bill that I have introduced today for $2,500,000,000 for Federal and non-Federal projects that it is not in any sense of the word a desire to embarrass the administration, but to help the administration, and with a hope that the proper publicity and public sentiment be aroused to the need of a continuance of the program, which was initiated last year and which I supported, namely, the bill authorizing $3,300,000,000, intended to bring about recovery of the Nation. In this bill of two and one-half billion dollars I ask that no less than $700,000,000 shall be allocated for new building construction, of which not to exceed $175,000,000 shall be allocated for construction of Federal buildings; this money to be for post-office buildings throughout the country in the districts of the several Congressmen, and $50,000,000 for buildings in the city of Washington; the remaining $525,000,000 to be for loans and grants to finance building construction provided in section 202, National Industrial Recovery Act, as amended.

I am specifying an amount of $1,800,000,000 for non-Federal projects. We find in the P.W.A. that the $3,300,000,000 has been allocated. We find that thousands of other applications have been filed with the Department for projects in thousands of cities, counties, States, and so forth, throughout the United States. These projects will average as good, and many of them even better, than many which have already been accepted by the Government. It is a fact that today 1,037 projects requiring $126,000,000 could be allocated if the money were available. Other projects totaling $150,000,000 are coming through very soon, which it is assured will be proven acceptable. A total of more than $3,000,000,000 worth of requests are now with the department of P.W.A., of which it can be safely said that at least 50 percent will be acceptable to the Government when they are finally surveyed by the legal, financial, and engineering departments of the Government. This would mean that at least one and one-half billion dollars would be needed. Accordingly, I feel that a conservative amount, all told, would be $1,800,000,000 for these projects.

The necessity for this is apparent in every American city. Mayors from the principal cities of the United States, economists, and many of the most substantial people in our country have recently appeared at hearings conducted by Senator LA FOLLETTE and have testified to the need of augmenting the Public Works program, which is now getting under way.

It should be particularly impressed upon the people of the Nation that this is not really increasing the indebtedness of the Federal Government in any appreciable amount. Seventy percent of this money will be refunded to the Government with interest. The Government's credit is good. Every call for money by it is quickly oversubscribed. The Government is simply stepping in as the big brother for all of these communities that are afflicted and paralyzed throughout the Nation and upholding their hands, furnishing the needed credit.

It is further shown that the greatest unemployment there is in the country today is in the building trades. While this has improved perhaps 5 to 10 percent during the last year, there is said to be 80 percent yet of unemployment of people who work in the building trades. We further know that to bring a lasting prosperity that heavy goods must be used if we permanently break the panic. The use of consumer goods alone is not sufficient. It needs the use of all sorts of building materials, steel, stone, brick, cement, roofing, and so forth. That program will start a cycle of fabrication, which will reach to every city and village and hamlet in the United States. To those who would be inclined to criticize and to say that the dollars spent in buildings, roads, bridges, sewers, waterworks, and so forth, do not sufficiently reach labor, let me suggest to them that the dollar's worth of stone, lumber, or any other building material in the building, is perhaps only worth a penny or two in the tree, quarry, or claybank, and that through all the steps that it takes to reach the finished product nearly all of it is for labor in some form or other. When you follow the slab as laid in the highway, and trace it back, the material, the machinery, and everything else finally reaches, in its final break-down and analysis, the unmined ores, the stone in the quarries, buried deep with earth and clay, and after all, it takes labor to bring it into the use of man.

As one who is supporting the administration in every way that I possibly can, I am bringing this measure to the House and to the country hoping that it will further augment employment of labor, and bring permanent and lasting prosperity to the Nation. [Applause.]

THE M'LEOD BANK BILL

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by Congressman DOUGLASS over the radio relative to the McLeod bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of Representative DOUGLASS, of Massachusetts, through radio station WMAL on the McLeod bank bill, Monday, May 21, 1934, at 6:30 p.m.:

Our National Government is now extending the hand of assistance to millions of our citizens who are striving to overcome the economic handicaps which have beset them in the last few years.

That helpful hand is reaching out in many directions. It is aiding people in many walks of life. It is providing jobs. It is furnishing the essentials of livelihood for those who otherwise would be in want.

While to some these activities of the Government may seem to be out of line with America's traditional political philosophy, there can be no doubt that we have bridged by this means a terrible chasm in our national existence. Over that bridge we are confident that we shall march to a more complete national existence, to a greater individual happiness.

But in all of these activities of the Government on behalf of its citizens there is one amazing omission. That omission leaves out of our national rehabilitation scheme 10,000,000 of our most loyal and patriotic citizens.

Those to whom I refer as the "omitted 10,000,000" are the thrifty and industrious men and women whose little accumulations of savings have been frozen in closed banks as a result of the financial collapse of a year ago.

So long as these 10,000,000 are forgotten, so long as they are deprived of the helping hand of governmental aid, our bridge to recovery will be incomplete and shaky.

Representative MCLEOD, who has so kindly presented me tonight, has introduced in the House a bill which would give added strength to the recovery bridge at this, its weakest point.

His measure might well be termed "a bill to extend the recovery to the omitted 10,000,000."

Mr. MCLEOD's bill is sometimes called the "bank relief bill." That is a misnomer. It would be more accurately known if it were described as the "bank depositors' justice bill."

Because that is all that the bill provides—simple justice for the men and women who were lured by their Government into leaving their hard-earned savings in banks which had the soundness only of tissue paper.

The provisions of the McLeod charter of justice are simple. They acknowledge the obligation which the Government assumed when it countenanced and encouraged its examiners in making misleading, if not false, statements as to the soundness of the banks now closed.

The bill proposes to meet this obligation by the simple expedient of making the Government the temporary receiver for the assets of these closed banks. Under its provisions the Government would buy the assets and pay off the depositors.

Over a period of 10 years the Government would sell these assets, thus repaying to itself the money which would be expended immediately.

An effort has been made to show that Mr. MCLEOD's program would be terribly expensive, perhaps prohibitive, that the Government would stand to lose most of the money which it would put up to buy the assets.

If there is any truth in that charge, then the Government has already wasted thousands of millions of dollars in its recovery effort. The only way the McLeod bill could be made costly would be for our recovery plans to fail. That is unthinkable.

As those recovery plans, upon which, as I have said, we have already spent billions of dollars, become effective, the value of the assets of the closed banks will increase. That increase will enable the Government to dispose of these assets after a period of years at fully enough to repay the advance which it now would be called upon to make.

It should be borne in mind when considering this bill that so long as the affairs of these closed banks remain in the hands of receivers and conservators there exists a menace which at any instant may destroy whatever progress we have made toward recovery in the last year.

Those receivers and conservators have it in their power to knock the bottom out from under almost every market in the country. If they were to unload upon the markets of the Nation with any degree of precipitation the assets which they control, we would have a break in prices which would be disastrous.

That danger would be completely eliminated if the Government took over the assets and proceeded to liquidate them in an orderly and leisurely manner. And the Government is the only institution in our country which is big enough and strong enough to liquidate them in that manner.

Considering the tremendous potentialities of the McLeod bill as a recovery measure, the extent to which its opponents have gone in fighting it is, to put it charitably, amazing and regrettable.

Its opponents in the House have resorted to almost every known trick in the rather lengthy parliamentary trick book They have indulged in virtually every known political maneuver to hinder and plague its progress.

Yet the demand for its enactment has become so strong and so wide-spread that these obstructive tactics cannot in the end prevail.

It is true that the bill has been introduced by a Republican Member of Congress. Yet it cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be called a Republican Party measure. Some of its most bitter opponents sit on the Republican side of the aisle in the House.

These Republican opponents are linked with powerful Democratic opponents. Yet the friends of the bill sit on both sides of the aisle, too.

Democrats as well as Republicans have pledged their support to the measure, not because they seek partisan or personal advantage through the bill, but simply because they realize that it would be a tremendous aid to the recovery program and because they realize also that only through its enactment can the reputation of the Government be cleansed of the accusation that it deliberately deceived its citizens as to the conditions of the banks.

Notwithstanding the overwhelming public sentiment in favor of this measure of justice, and notwithstanding the wide-spread support among both parties on the floor of the House, an almost unbelievable situation has arisen.

This situation, briefly, is that a small group of so-called "leaders" of the House have thus far succeeded in preventing any consideration of the bill on the floor of the House.

This group has thwarted every effort to bring the bill onto the floor, permit debate and amendment and final action by vote of the House.

This condition is truly alarming to those who believe in the fundamentals of representative government. Representative government becomes a mockery if the representatives of the people are not to be allowed to vote on measures which are of general interest to the people—matters affecting the general welfare.

Yet that is exactly the situation which we are facing in the House at present on the McLeod bill.

The American people have sent their Representatives to Congress to consider and decide upon just such proposals as this. They are willing that the majority shall govern; but they have heretofore been determined and are, we believe, today resolved that a small group shall not dominate the Government. So long as a small group is able to prevent even consideration of bills, that group is able to govern because it holds absolute veto. To deny the right to petition and to be heard is tyranny.

In the House we are now trying to defeat the effort of this small group to dominate the legislative program.

We have upon the Speaker's desk a petition which is designed to force this group to permit the House to vote "yes" or "no" upon the McLeod bill—in favor or against it.

This petition has come to be known as a "new declaration of independence." In effect it declares the independence of the House from political domination of a few of its Members.

In order that this petition may have the force which we desire it must be signed by 145 Members of the House. Already more than 125 Members of the House have affixed their signatures to the declaration. They have written their names, as the founding fathers years ago wrote theirs, to put an end to unjust and improper interference with the wishes of our people.

It is now necessary to obtain about a dozen-and-a-half additional signatures to the petition in order to make it effective.

It is up to the American people to register their views on this proposition of government—to determine whether legislation shall be stifled by a few or whether it shall be considered, debated, and voted upon as we want to consider, debate, and vote upon the McLeod charter of justice.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, if you believe in the principle back of the McLeod bill, write or telegraph your Congressman and tell him so. If he has not already signed the McLeod petition on the Speaker's desk, write or telegraph him to do so at once. Write tonight—now! Delay may be disastrous.

I thank you all.

Good night.

REREFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reference of the bill (S. 2585) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel patent in fee issued to Victoria Arconge to the Committee on Public Lands may be changed and the bill referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on next Tuesday morning after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes to make a statement with reference to a reflection that was made on the enrolling clerk and the Committee on Enrolled Bills in the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, during the course of the discussion on the measure that was sent back for correction to the House yesterday this statement appears in the RECORD:

> I do not know how many there have been, but it seems like a waste of time. Every day we have one or two bills which having passed both Houses of Congress and having been enrolled by the enrolling clerks have to be called back and the work done over again. I believe it is a situation that deserves the attention of the leadership of the House.

This statement is a reflection upon the enrolling clerk's office under the Clerk of the House of Representatives and upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and especially the clerk of this committee.

I wish to say that during the four sessions that this work of the House has been under the present enrolling clerk and the clerk of the Committee on Enrolled Bills there has not been a single, solitary mistake made in the thousands and thousands of pages of bills that have been passed by this House and enrolled by the enrolling clerk's office and the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

When a bill originates in the House and is passed here, it goes to the clerk's office and there it is proofread and prepared to go to the Senate. When it has been passed by the Senate, with or without amendments, and it has been agreed to in conference and passed on by both Houses, the enrolling clerk's office again proofreads it and corrects it and prepares the copy to go to the Printer, where the enrolled copy is printed. It is there read and reread before the copy is prepared for the signature of the Speaker and the Vice President before going to the President.

Mr. Ellis was in the enrolling clerk's office beginning in 1910 up to 1933, and no mistakes were made during the years he was in that office. Mr. Rippon, who is in that position now, and Mr. Hesselman, who is the clerk of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, have performed almost miraculous work in seeing that no mistakes have been made in the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" or leaving out of a comma in any of the bills, and thousands of pages are crowded through here every session. In the tax bill alone there were 248 pages of matter.

I desire to make this statement this morning, so that the Members may know that in this Senate concurrent resolution, which was brought back here yesterday for correction, certain language in the resolution was superfluous and it was sent back by the President for correction. This correction should have been made by the committee in the beginning. No mistake was made in the enrolling clerk's office or by the Committee on Enrolled Bills. [Applause.]

SALE OF ARMS OR MUNITIONS OF WAR

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 347) to prohibit the sale of arms and munitions of war in the United States under certain conditions.

This refers to the Chaco situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That if the President finds that the prohibition of the sale of arms and munitions of war in the United States to those countries now engaged in armed conflict in the Chaco may contribute to the reestablishment of peace between those countries, and if after consultation with the governments of other American Republics and with their cooperation, as well as that of such other governments as he may deem necessary, he makes proclamation to that effect, it shall be unlawful to sell, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President prescribes, any arms or munitions of war in any place in the United States to the countries now engaged in that armed conflict, or to any person, company, or association acting in the interest of either country, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.
> SEC. 2. Whoever sells any arms or munitions of war in violation of section 1 shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 2 years, or both.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, we are only going to take a few minutes for the consideration of this joint resolution. The reason for calling it up at this time is the emergency that has existed, and is still existing, in South America in the Chaco section.

As you know, a war between Bolivia and Paraguay has been going on intermittently since 1928. Many people have been slain during this time. The President of the United States is very anxious to do whatever he can to stop this conflict, and I am sure that the people of the United States will approve of his action.

Many munition-producing countries of Europe, as well as the countries of South America, are deeply concerned about this situation, and, I am advised, are anxious to cooperate in an effort to stop this useless conflict. This bill simply prohibits the sale of munitions for the purpose of exportation to these countries if the President so desires in view of conditions existing there, and in cooperation with other countries.

The Secretary of State has this to say about it:

> This conflict has been proceeding intermittently since December 1928, and continuously since June 1932. It has involved the loss of thousands of lives and if it is permitted to continue unchecked, the destruction of life is likely to assume appalling proportions. War in any part of the world is a matter of concern to this Government. But war between two American Republics is of special and vital concern, which neither our humanitarian sentiment nor our feeling of American solidarity will permit us to ignore.
> I have reason to believe that the arms-producing nations of the world will find it possible to join in this movement, and that the selfish interests of manufacturers and merchants of arms and munitions will not be permitted to stand in the way of concerted action sponsored by the enlightened opinion of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this resolution was reported out of the committee unanimously. It simply carries out the request of the President to give him the power to stop the sale of munitions of war going to the countries engaged in the fight in the Grand Chaco—in other words, Bolivia and Paraguay.

In my humble opinion, this legislation should have been enacted a year or more ago. The Prime Minister of Great Britain has deliberately, within the last week, accused the United States Government of being responsible for preventing other nations from agreeing to prohibit the shipment of arms to these two fighting nations. Therefore there should be no delay in passing this legislation. The administration should have taken the lead, instead of being compelled by world public opinion to follow Great Britain and other munition-producing countries in stopping the sale of arms and munitions of war to Bolivia and Paraguay.

I rose today in my limited time to call the attention of the Members of the House to a bill that is now on the Speaker's desk, and has been there for several months. It is a bill that originated in the Committee on Foreign Affairs and passed this House to give the President the power to decide on the aggressor nation and to lay an embargo on that nation. We on this side of the House fought that bill bitterly, and I am still bitterly opposed to it as an act of war and not an act of peace.

The Senate amended it by virtually adopting the motion to recommit offered by me in the House, empowering the President to lay an embargo on both belligerent nations or on all belligerent nations, but not on any one nation or the alleged aggressor nation.

That bill has been on the Speaker's desk for several months. The reason, I understand, it has not been called up is that we have just sent Mr. Norman Davis as ambassador at large over to the arms conference at Geneva that begins at the end of this month.

I further understand he wants to go there to bargain and to lead foreign nations to believe that the Congress of the United States will join them in giving the President the power to lay an embargo on the aggressor nation. Such tactics would be utterly unfair and without any foundation, except a good imagination backed by a colossal amount of nerve and bluff.

You might just as well join the League of Nations, and, as far as I am concerned, I should rather join the League of Nations than give the President the power to lay an embargo on the aggressor nation—a measure to provoke war and the right to declare war. You might as well take all the constitutional powers away from Congress and give them to the President—the right to declare war, to destroy the traditional policy of the United States laid down by Washington in 1793, the traditional policy of neutrality adhered to by every President since that time.

Mr. HENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Not unless I can get more time. Now, everybody in the country ordinarily would say, "Fine, when you give the President the power to lay an embargo on the aggressor." But when you analyze it, you will find that history is full if controversies over which nation was the aggressor. Historians are still debating and disputing as to which was the aggressor nation during the World War. There has never been a war where it has been admitted that one nation was the aggressor. It would be considered an unneutral act, and virtually an act of war, to lay an embargo against one nation as the aggressor. Unquestionably such an unneutral policy would entangle us in all European or Asiatic wars and would only result in involving us and dragging us into foreign wars. And if we should empower the President to determine the aggressor nation, and he should join the League of Nations or the group that is in the League of Nations, we would be virtually enforcing the provisions that are most obnoxious to the American people, the sanction powers of the League of Nations, articles X and XVI.

The Senate of the United States, after careful deliberation, amended our resolution and struck out granting power to the President to select the aggressor nation. So I think it would be most unfair if our Ambassador at Large, Mr. Norman Davis, conveyed the impression to foreign nations that the Congress had any idea of surrendering our constitutional powers to the President to provoke war by committing an unneutral act. Let us assume that Japan continued the fighting in Manchuria or in China and that the President had this power and declared that Japan was the aggressor nation and laid an arms embargo on Japan. The first thing that would happen would be that an American ship carrying munitions under an American flag to China would be seized going into a Chinese port by a Japanese warship, and in 30 days we would be at war with Japan because our national honor would have been impugned. There is not a man or woman in America who wants war with Japan. Yet we would be forced into war because the Congress had given up its constitutional power to lay an embargo to the President and some ambassador at large, someone not elected by the people, might go over to the League of Nations and say to them, "We will go along with you and declare who is the aggressor." Do you not know what would happen?

The United States would be holding the bag and would be expected to do all the fighting. It is time that the United States refuse to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the rest of the world; it is time that we stop passing moral judgments on the rest of the world; it is time that we minded our own business and stopped meddling and muddling with affairs of other nations. We do not propose to act as an international policeman, and we have plenty of problems to solve at home.

We are a peaceful nation, and we do not want war, and the only war that the United States will declare is a war in defense of our country. [Applause.] I do not know that I have ever felt more strongly about anything in the 14 years that I have been in Congress, because I can see so clearly that if you give this power to determine the aggressor nation to any man, no matter how good he is, some representative, some agent of the President, would surely get us into trouble, and probably into war.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The impression is held here on this side that the gentleman is making a speech on another resolution that is now on the Speaker's table but not before the House at the present time. A great many Members on this side want to know how the gentleman stands on this resolution.

Mr. FISH. Oh, I am 100 percent for it. I started out by saying so, but the whole issue of an arms embargo is involved in the pending resolution.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. This resolution gives the President the right to prohibit the sale of arms and munitions to anyone who would export to either country or to both countries. There is no aggressor proposition involved, and I wish the gentleman would make that distinction.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am for this legislation, and the gentleman has announced that he is for it. The gentleman has also announced that there never was a case but that one or the other of the nations was an aggressor.

Mr. FISH. They never admit it.

Mr. ROMJUE. But, as a matter of fact, never a controversy has started but that one or the other is the aggressor.

Mr. FISH. Oh, they both always claim that the other made the first move to mobilize.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. ROMJUE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] has just suggested that the gentleman has gone off to discuss another piece of legislation.

Mr. FISH. Yes; of a similar character that is on the Speakers desk.

Mr. ROMJUE. Does not this legislation amount to an embargo, which the gentleman has just denounced; an embargo in effect against both nations? I think so and I approve of that.

Mr. FISH. Oh, the gentleman misunderstood me. This resolution gives the President power only to stop the sale of munitions to both countries, not to the aggressor country, and the resolution pending now on the Speaker's desk does practically the same thing, as it permits the President to place an embargo on arms against all belligerent nations, while this merely permits an embargo on the sale of arms to only Bolivia and Paraguay.

Mr. ROMJUE. Very well. Let us see if we know what we are talking about. This absolutely prohibits the distribution of arms to these countries that are engaging in war.

Mr. FISH. This applies only to two countries, Bolivia and Paraguay, and to no other countries, and can be applied only to both and not against one.

Mr. ROMJUE. One or the other must be the aggressor.

Mr. FISH. No; it has nothing to do with the aggressor. It can apply only to both.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman has instanced the case of Japan and China.

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does not the gentleman well know that Japan, for instance, is fully able to arm and equip herself as against China, and that China is not able to arm and equip herself, and that an embargo against both of them would, therefore, be playing directly into the hands of Japan and against China?

Mr. FISH. I believe that; but that does not change the situation. It is not our fault if China does not protect herself or is not able to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It changes it entirely so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HENNEY. The gentleman made the statement that Members on his side of the House were against this matter when it came up last spring, and inferred that Members on this side are responsible for the legislation.

Would not the gentleman state that this bill was one of President Hoover's pets, and was sent down during his administration, and had the backing of the Members on the gentleman's side of the House at that time?

Mr. FISH. Let me amend that by saying that it was the pet of the so-called "Republican Secretary of State", Mr. Stimson.

Mr. HENNEY. Who is still a Republican wheel horse.

Mr. FISH. Who is called "Wrong Horse Harry" Stimson. He is with you on the tariff. He is with you on the aggressor-nation proposal; and if you want him, you can have him If you take him, for God's sake keep him. [Applause.]

Mr. HENNEY. We are with you on that; we do not wish to accept your gift; but President Hoover sponsored this program.

Mr. FISH. Oh, his Secretary of State did. He was for the League of Nations. It is a League of Nations proposition, and Secretary Stimson was for the League of Nations. Mr. Hull is for the League of Nations, and Ambassador at Large Norman Davis is for the League of Nations. This proposal to permit the President to pick the aggressor is entrance, not by the back door but by the front door, into the League of Nations, to enforce the sanctions of the League known as "articles X and XVI."

Mr. HENNEY. Does the gentleman deny that President Hoover sent down a letter endorsing that program?

Mr. FISH. I do not recollect. I will have to refresh my memory. I do not want to blame Hoover for anything more than is necessary.

Mr. HENNEY. I will ask the gentleman if President Hoover was not in favor of the League of Nations?

Mr. FISH. I am not a mind reader, but I know he never campaigned on any League platform.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further.

Mr. Speaker, as one who loathes and abhors war, as one who served in the war, and will go as far as any man or woman in the Nation for peace and peaceful relations in the world, I believe this doctrine of the aggressor nation to be the greatest menace to our people, and the only thing that will lead us into war. At the same time I should like to say a few words, representing my own views, at least. If we are forced into war, let it be in defense of the United States of America and not in defense of the war profiteers and munition makers of America. [Applause.]

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Not at this time. As one who believes in the profits system in this country and not in these socialistic doctrines that would destroy capitalism, I am ready at any time to vote to take the profits out of war, and I am also ready to vote for Government ownership of the munition plants in America. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has again expired.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I just want to say the question of aggressor nation is not involved in this bill. It applies to both, if authority is given to the President to prohibit the sale of arms for exportation to Bolivia and Paraguay.

I have not time to reply to the gentleman from New York because of my agreement to take only a few minutes for the consideration of this bill in order to get action at this time. However, the gentleman's speech was almost wholly relative of the House to the bill (S. 3114) to extend the times for for consideration. In order to put us in a better position before other countries, and in a position where this country can be of great service to humanity, we feel that immediate action should be taken.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3114) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges in the State of Oregon.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the House, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President did on the following dates approve and sign bills of the House of the following titles:

On May 21, 1934:

H.R. 7059. An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories.

On May 22, 1934:

H.R. 473. An act for the relief of Irene Brand Alper; and

H.R. 4274. An act for the relief of Charles A. Brown.

LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL PURPOSES

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, S. 3487, with Mr. McREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon adequate security, based on mineral acreage to recognized and established incorporated agencies engaged in the business of mining, milling, or smelting of ores.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Michigan: Page 21, add a new section immediately after section 9, reading as follows:

"The Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to any person, association, or corporation organized under the laws of any State, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, or Puerto Rico, for the purpose of financing the production, storage, handling, packing, processing, carrying, and/or orderly marketing of fish of American fisheries, and/or products thereof, upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations as are applicable in case of loans made under said section 5, as amended."

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a committee amendment offered for the purpose of clearing up some doubt regarding the construction of section 5 of the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. By testimony before the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee handling the Reconstruction Finance Corporation matters it appeared that two chairmen of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have held that the fishing business is not an industry and is not entitled to loans under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. We of the committee believe that this industry is entitled to recognition along with farming, mining, or any other such enterprise. I can tell you very briefly that the amendment is of great interest to all the States bordering the Atlantic Ocean, the Gulf of Mexico, an dthe Pacific Ocean, and it is also of great interest to those of us who live on the shores of the Great Lakes. The industry is one which in 1932 produced 83,000,000 pounds of food products. The Great Lakes themselves produced over $4,000,000 worth of food products, over half of which were produced in my own State of Michigan.

We feel that the amendment is in line with simple, plain justice, and we see no reason why it should not be adopted, so as to clear up this matter of construction.

I shall read an excerpt from the testimony before the subcommittee. This is a portion of the statement made by Mr. Andrews relative to loans to fishing enterprises:

I have taken the matter of including fishing as an industry up with the first two chairmen of the R.F.C.—there have been three appointed so far—and they have answered that they do not find any provision in section 5 which would allow them to deal with a fishing corporation.

This amendment includes fishing as an industry and authorizes loans upon full and adequate security to any person, firm, or corporation engaged in any branch of the fishing or fish-processing industry.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I would remind the gentleman that a good deal of testimony was taken before the Committee on the Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries to the effect that fishing was an industry extending into many millions of dollars when consideration is taken of the value of the fisheries and allied projects.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question; and I shall also address the question to the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. PRALL.

The ability of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under section 5 to make interpretations as to whether certain lines of business may be considered as eligible industries is questioned. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that I am not at all sure that under this bill the ginning industry, one of great importance throughout the entire South, would be eligible for loans.

For the information of the committee I may say that in the past 6 months the manufacturing interests putting out ginning machinery have sold a vast quantity of this machinery to Mexico, Cuba, and other foreign countries.

I know it to be a fact that in my own State of Texas there is a real problem with reference to needed repairs and replacement of this machinery. I know, too, that in my particular section, while they might find that credit was available on certain terms, credit is not obtainable.

Section 5 of the pending bill contains the word "available." The question in my mind is whether or not with the retention of the word "available" in this bill these interests would be able to obtain credit under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. PRALL. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I cannot conceive of any body of men such as the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation considering ginning anything but an industry.

Mr. KLEBERG. There is no question that it is a large and distinct industry.

One more question, if the gentleman will permit: If the gentleman will turn to page 22, the gentleman will find, beginning in line 8, the words "when credit at prevailing bank rates for the character of loans applied for is not otherwise available." Should not the word "available" be stricken and the word "obtainable" substituted for it? Credit might be available and still not be obtainable.

The purpose of this act is to increase employment. There are many times when credit might be available to certain institutions, but not obtainable.

Mr. PRALL. I would say that that is drawing the line pretty close.

Mr. KLEBERG. But I would remind the gentleman from New York that the banks draw the line exceedingly close.

Mr. PRALL. I know that is true; but I would say that the word "available" is perfectly all right.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am willing, of course, to accept the gentleman's interpretation, because what the gentleman said on the floor should go a long way toward interpreting the intention of Congress for those who are to administer this act. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment to include the fishing industry within the class of industries to which loans may be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is, in my judgment, a sound one that ought to be adopted.

The Pacific coast has a vast fishing industry stretching all the way from Alaska to San Diego. I have been informed by individuals and corporations engaged in the fishing industry in California that they have been unable to secure adequate bank credit for their business, and as a result are operating under a tremendous handicap.

It seems to me that if this bill is designed to promote employment, to encourage capital to promote the industry of the country, it should specifically include the fishing industry, because of the importance of that industry in the United States. I am in favor of the bill as a whole, and am convinced that this amendment will greatly increase the effectiveness of the measure. We all want business to revive; we all want to see unemployment diminish. For that way lies recovery, and recovery is the goal of the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may again read the pending amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk again read the pending amendment.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on behalf of this amendment. The pending bill is designed to promote the interests of the smaller and the distressed industries of the country. If there is any industry in the entire country which meets these qualifications of being a small-scale and a distressed industry, it is that of fishing. The industry is not conducted by great corporations with large aggregations of capital. It is carried on by small groups of men with very little money back of them. If there is any industry more in distress today than the fishing industry, I do not know what it is. They have suffered from oversupply, from declining prices, from inability to secure credit to replace their nets and gear and equipment. Many of their vessels are tied up at the docks, and many of the fishermen are without employment.

In the last 20 years we have done many things in Congress to promote the interests of those who cultivate the soil, but we have done nothing for those who toil on the sea. During the period of the depression particularly we have passed a long series of measures for the benefit of agriculture, but we have scarcely passed a single measure for the benefit of those who work on the sea.

Some of you think of fishing as a sport, as a means of diversion for vacation days, but there are whole communities in the United States for whose people it is a very serious business, and which depend exclusively upon fishing for a living. The city of Gloucester, Mass., from which I come, has for 300 years found in fishing its principal business. Some 20,000 of its inhabitants depend directly or indirectly upon it for their livelihood today.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I think the House should know that this amendment is in effect the bill introduced by Mr. McCORMACK, of Massachusetts, which was supported by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. ANDREW, and other Members from the Northeastern States before the subcommittee.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. That is true. We are all intensely interested in it. The men who make their livelihood from this hazardous occupation do not know the 6-hour day or the 30-hour week. They work through the night as well as by day on the sea, battling with the elements, with storms and gales of wind and the turbulent waves, and even in the midst of the ice and the snows of winter; but they earn at best a meager living, and of late many of them have earned nothing at all. Yet they have looked in vain to Congress for some assistance in their plight.

In the last 4 years they have suffered at least as much as has any other occupation in the country, but they have found no relief. They are unorganized. They are most of the time out at sea, referring particularly to those engaged in coastal fishing. They are seldom situated where many of them can get together and discuss what they need to help them. They have no great organizations to speak for them, and no great department of the Government to prepare measures in their behalf. One after another effort is undertaken for the farmers, but the fishermen remain neglected. It would be but another injustice if this measure should not be amended so as to extend them the credit of which they stand in need.

The bill before us was designed to extend the benefit of Government credit to what are called the "smaller industries" of the country. It offers relief to the mining industry, to the smelting industry, to irrigation projects, and to corporations which have mineral deposits. In view of such liberal extensions, if no steps were taken today to help the scattered and helpless fishing industry, upon which at least 200,000 people in this country depend for their living, manifestly it would be cruel and unfair. Fishing is a calling which is dangerous. It is hard. It is not, financially speaking, very rewarding. It is very hard pressed just now. The humble citizens who pursue it as a life work up to the present moment have received little or no consideration from the Federal Government. I hope there will not be anyone in the House to vote against this amendment which offers them at least some possibility of relief.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the House to a situation which I think will prove of interest and which is in marked contrast to that which is generally found to be the case today. I do not suppose anyone, unless he has had an opportunity to come in close contact with these fishermen, understands just what these hardy, seafaring men have been called upon to go through in the last 4 years. They are a very industrious, frugal class of people. But the facts are as follows: After they have encountered all the hazards of the sea and the uncertainties of the catch have been made certain, their experience has been that when they get fish to the market they are unable to get enough for them to pay the actual cost of operations if you reckon their time of any value. They have been here in Washington for aid. They asked no charity. They wanted to make some arrangements to borrow enough money on their boats, their tackle, their nets and traps to enable them to repair their equipment so that they could carry on. You will recollect a rather picturesque incident which occurred about a year ago when some of these Maine fishermen came here in a sailing vessel. They came up the Potomac River in their sailing vessel and went to the R.F.C. for aid, which they were unable to secure.

Last Wednesday morning—I think I am correct in that day—I picked up the Washington Post at my breakfast table. My eye fell upon an editorial which paid a tribute to the fishermen of Maine. I shall ask to insert the editorial at this point.

REFRESHING

A fund of $100,000 to assist needy fishermen of the Maine coast in repairing their gear or buying new outfits has been refused by those hardy men. With Yankee pride they have informed the State administrator of the Emergency Relief Administration that if he wants to lend them the money they have no objections, but they want no charity.

This independent spirit has long characterized the men of the Maine coast. It may be old-fashioned stubbornness, this insistence upon paying their own way, but it is what they have always done in their struggle to wrest a living from the sea. State Administrator J. A. McDonough was reported so moved by the refusal that he told the men they could pay the money back in cash or in catch.

Just what the Government will do with $100,000 worth of haddock and hake is not quite apparent. If it cannot find a market for the fish as such, perhaps it can turn them into fertilizer, which could then be distributed gratis to other groups of hardy men who have lately been far from averse to seeking Government subsidies.

Here was the cause of the editorial. The chairman of the relief committee of the State of Maine, Mr. McDonough, had offered these Maine fishermen a check for $100,000 as a gift. Did they take it? No. In substance, they said: "We do not think when our Government is in a crisis that we ought to ask it to feed us. We do not want charity. We will give all we have as security for a loan and we will pay back every dollar with interest, but our Government can give us nothing." [Applause.]

I have not been so stirred by an incident for a long time, and I here express pride, not a local pride, but one in which I am sure every man and woman in this House will join me, in that type of American citizen. That is the spirit that is going to save the United States of America in this day of its travail. [Applause.]

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to the fact that in southern California, where the fishermen have brought in tons of fish, being unable to sell them, they have contributed the fish to the unemployed, and this has been the only meat the unemployed of southern California have had available. These fishermen have been very generous.

Mr. BEEDY. I wish to extend my thanks to the fishermen of Maine for this splendid spirit of self-sacrifice and cooperation. I also wish to thank the members of the Banking and Currency Committee for accepting this amendment, and those gentlemen who introduced and sponsored it on the floor of the House. I invite the unanimous support of this House.

Mr. MORAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to my colleague from Maine.

Mr. MORAN. So far as this amendment is concerned, it does not give anything new or additional, but it does prevent discrimination against the fishing industry.

Mr. BEEDY. That is correct.

Mr. MORAN. And so far as the security is concerned, there is the general requirement that the security must be satisfactory to the R.F.C., anyway.

Mr. BEEDY. That is true.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, of which I have the honor to be the Chairman, has given about 5 days' study, and probably longer, to the fish situation throughout the United States, may I say that as a result of the study it was the unanimous opinion of that committee that relief should be extended. While the approval of this amendment has not been formally submitted to the committee, I take the liberty now of saying that I believe that it would have the unanimous support of every man on the committee. I see before me many members of the committee, and I am satisfied that they will agree with my statement.

Some question has arisen whether it would include oysters, lobsters, and other classes of fish. It is my understanding that the amendment is to include all branches of the fish industry, floating and fixed. This would include oysters.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say in response to the gentleman's statement that having drafted the bill which is now offered as an amendment by the committee, I appreciate very much the action of the chairman of the committee and the committee. It was my intention that this should include all fishing activities, and I am in absolute harmony with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BLAND. I have no doubt that it includes oysters and lobsters.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGUGIN: Page 21, line 9, after the word "agencies", insert the following words: "individuals and partnerships."

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to want to lead anyone in this House to believe that there is a single justification in the world for the Government of the United States furnishing its credit for undeveloped mineral property, as is provided for in sections 8 and 9 of this bill. It is beyond my comprehension that any line of credit could be presented which would be more hazardous and worthless credit.

We find, first, it provides for credit as against mineral rights, not as against a mining institution which is already developed and is making money, but mineral rights; not as against an oil refinery or an oil company which has producing wells, but as against undeveloped oil rights or leases. If we are going to do such a thing, we should at least be fair about it, and we should do as much for the individual or the partnership as we do for a corporation owning undeveloped mineral property.

Under section 9, applying it to the oil business, leave that section as it is, and Standard Oil of New York, Sinclair, or any other oil corporations can go and borrow money on their undeveloped mineral acreage; but the individual cannot do it, and a partnership cannot do it.

The actual facts are that in oil and other lines of mining endeavor, corporations have gone out and undertaken to corner the mineral resources of this country, developed and undeveloped. They have bought up the undeveloped mineral rights on land which they believe is prospective mineral property. It is a burden to carry these leases and rights in the matter of taxes and rentals, and by this act we provide that this undeveloped acreage is good collateral down at the R.F.C.

The principle is wrong; but if we are going to use Government credit to preserve the mineral rights of these corporations who now own these mineral rights, then we should do the same for individuals and partnerships.

Again, so far as the oil industry is concerned, if the Congress is going to extend some special favors here to corporations, it should extend the same privileges to the individuals. If the individual oil man makes a strike, his income tax immediately goes up to the higher brackets, but if a corporation makes a strike it only pays the corporation rate. It is the individual oil man who does the most for the Government, and if we are going to furnish credit on mineral property when that property is owned by corporations, we should do the same thing for the individual or the partnership, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It will be recalled that when we had up the original Reconstruction Finance Act, as I recall it, under the leadership of Mr. Garner here in the House, the same proposal was made that loans should not be restricted simply to corporations, but that individuals and partnerships should have an opportunity to borrow from the R.F.C., and at that time President Hoover and the leadership on the Republican side very strenuously opposed any such suggestion.

Mr. McGUGIN. If Mr. Garner was right, then I am sure my amendment will be adopted today, when we have a House the Membership of which is more than two thirds Democratic.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am wondering about the change of mind on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. McGUGIN. No; so far as I am concerned, I am against the whole section, with or without this amendment, but if we are going to adopt the section, we should have this amendment.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Does the gentleman think the word "mineral" in section 9 will be interpreted to include oil and petroleum products?

Mr. McGUGIN. It will if the R.F.C. pays any attention to the law books.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I should like to see the word "oil" inserted there, because I am not sure that it will be construed in that way.

Mr. McGUGIN. The courts have universally classified oil as a mineral.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the committee feels the amendment is scarcely necessary in view of the language of section 5 (d) of the bill but, to clarify the matter, the committee does not object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MEEKS: After section 9, page 1, insert the following as a new section:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to make loans at any time prior to January 31, 1935, out of the funds of the Corporation upon full and adequate security to public-school districts or other similar public-school authorities organized pursuant to State law for the purpose of payment of teachers' salaries due prior to January 1, 1934: Provided, That the aggregate amount of such loans at any time outstanding shall not exceed $75,000,000."

Mr. MEEKS. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the committee, after careful deliberation, reached the conclusion that this proposed amendment should be incorporated in the bill. The language of the amendment is clear and unmistakable and expresses its purpose. It is to aid one of the most essential activities in the country, namely, the relief of school districts throughout the United States that are in need of funds to pay accumulated salaries. I think that a lengthy discussion of the amendment is unnecessary, as the language makes clear its purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I want to congratulate the Committee for having presented the kind of an amendment which, in my opinion, will be beneficial to education. Ever since I have been a Member of Congress my best efforts have been put forth to support all school activities. On January 16, 1934, I introduced a bill which is known as "H.R. 6971", to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase or loan money upon school warrants issued in payment of teachers' salaries. This bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and when a hearing was held by a subcommittee, headed by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PRALL], I appeared before the same and delivered an argument in favor of the bill. The present legislation, which proposes to extend benefits to industries, is the result of the hearings held and the various testimony given by Members interested in this subject.

I have called on the Chairman of the Committee on Education and urged that his committee report out a general school bill which will provide for a per capita payment and, in addition, take care of the so-called "educational program"; and, regardless of whether or not it is possible to obtain additional legislation relating to this subject during the present session, I am of the opinion that this amendment will provide sufficient power on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to extend some aid to school districts.

Within the last few weeks legislation has been presented to the Ways and Means Committee for the purpose of increasing the powers granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and being the chairman of the subcommittee appointed to hold hearings and make a report on this subject, I appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee for the purpose of finding out whether or not this measure was going to receive consideration; and, inasmuch as this legislation was in the course of preparation, it was not necessary for my committee to try to assume jurisdiction, as the passage of this bill takes care of what I had in mind. Therefore, inasmuch as school warrants are backed up by levies against taxable property, I feel certain that this is sufficient security to cause the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the purposes as named in this amendment, and I am sure that the passage of this bill with the added amendment extending the time to June 1, 1934, will be looked upon with favor by all those interested in educational matters. [Applause.]

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I think this House today is marking time for the future. This, in my opinion, is one of the best bills that we have had the privilege to support. It is going to place industry back where our people can work and earn a living so that they can do away with being constantly in doubt as to how they are going to take care of their families.

This amendment adds strength to this bill. It proposes to furnish aid to schools by providing for the cashing of teachers' warrants.

In the early part of this session I introduced the first bill that was offered in this Congress to take care of this situation that was so appalling and so disturbing to the school interests of our country and to relieve teachers who are carrying their warrants received for teaching.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. I will.

Mr. COX. Is not there a popular demand from all parts of the country for this legislation?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes. I think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot serve a better purpose than in carrying out the purpose of this amendment. The trouble with the school situation now is that they have built fine schoolhouses all over the country in a time of prosperity, thinking that prosperity would go on. They contracted for the payment of the buildings and must necessarily set aside funds to take care of those contracts.

Now, the teachers are the ones that are suffering most. The teachers of my State—and I presume it is true all over the country—have been forced to take school warrants, which are as good as gold but cannot be paid now, as there is sufficient property behind them, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not lose one penny. But the teachers are having to carry these warrants; they have deposited them in the bank and have drawn a small percentage of their value but are not able to take up the warrants.

The bill that I offered before the committee had a respectful hearing by this committee, and I am glad to have that principle in this bill. That was the principle that was advocated by every educator who came before your committee and before the Committee on Education. This is one of the most vital parts of this bill, and it ought to have been in it originally. I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I take this time to speak to you as Chairman of your Committee on Education. While I do not oppose as such this amendment, I want you to understand the position of the Committee on Education, of which I have the honor to be chairman. We have been discussing in that committee for 3 or 4 or 5 months the need of Federal emergency aid to education, and we have tried honestly to determine that issue according to our ability and according to the evidence presented to us. Your Committee on Education has reported H.R. 9544, a bill to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories, and the District of Columbia, in meeting the crisis in education. The essential provision of the bill is that $75,000,000 shall be appropriated for carrying out the purposes of the act from the Federal emergency relief funds that are to be provided this year, to be disbursed on the basis of need by the Federal Relief Administrator, with the advice and cooperation of the Commissioner of Education. There is an overwhelming demand throughout the country from all the State superintendents of education, or practically all, for relief for education in order that the common schools of less than college grade shall be kept open in this Nation next year. I have no objection to the paying of back salaries already due, but I tell you the great need, beginning in September, with the scheduled opening of the schools, will be that the children shall go back into the schools, and unless this Government appropriates the $75,000,000 which the Committee on Education has asked for in some form, in some manner, before adjournment of this Congress, then there are thousands of schools that will not be opened in this country next September. If that sad event happens, if that catastrophe befall, it will be most unfortunate, because when you close the door of the school, you open the door of the jail. If this measure under discussion is intended to take the place of the bill which your Committee on Education has reported, I would be against it, but I hesitate at this moment to take that position.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLASS. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that schools in Pennsylvania will not be able to keep open during this next year unless some provision is made?

Mr. DOUGLASS. I am perfectly aware of that fact. We have evidence and documents submitted to us from all the State superintendents of the Nation calling upon the Federal Government to expend, not $75,000,000, but $150,000,000. Your committee feels that the pressing need is not to pay for obligations past due, but to open the schools next September, and you will be doing a great injustice to the youth of this Nation, you will be buying and selling their future morality, you will be opening the doors of the jails to them if you do not do something by way of emergency aid and do it in this session. I hate to believe that this measure was brought in to hamper or defeat our Education Committee bill, because the Committee on Rules will not give us a rule on it, but I am going to insist that this House, later, when I have better opportunity to make a speech on the subject, shall hear from us in the form of an amendment to the emergency relief bill, and I appeal to you to think what you are doing here today. Pay the teachers what is owing them from the past, if you will, but give us something to open the schools with next fall and pay the teachers in the near future. Protect the youth of America. Think what you are doing here today, and if in your hearts and souls you believe that the passage of this amendment will thwart needed relief to education in the immediate future, then vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this bill is really an amendment to a Senate bill and is subject only to one additional amendment. I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma to that amendment is an amendment in the third degree and not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order because this amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the Senate bill, is being considered as an original bill and is subject to the same amendments as if it were an original bill. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HASTINGS to the amendment of the committee offered by Mr. MEEKS: Strike out in the amendment "January 1, 1934", and insert "June 1, 1935."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment is as follows:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to make loans at any time prior to January 31, 1935, out of the funds of the Corporation, upon full and adequate security, to public-school districts, or other similar public-school authorities, organized pursuant to State law, for the purpose of the payment of teachers' salaries due prior to January 1, 1934, provided that the aggregate amount of such loans at any time outstanding shall not exceed $75,000,000.

The amendment which I have offered is to strike out "January 1, 1934" and insert "June 1, 1934."

You will see that the effect of this amendment, if adopted, will permit loans to be made to school districts for the payment of salaries to teachers upon outstanding school warrants on and after January 1, 1934, and up to June 1, 1934.

This is an important amendment, and I should like to have your earnest attention to it for a moment, and I really hope it will be accepted by the committee.

The fact is that in nearly every school district sufficient taxes are collected to pay the salaries of teachers up to January 1 of each year, but the difficulty is the payment of the salaries of teachers after January 1 of any year. This is true in Oklahoma. Practically all the school districts collect enough taxes to pay all outstanding warrants up to the first of the year, but thereafter the teachers, who are very poorly paid at best, are compelled to discount their warrants at ruinous rates; and the truth is that during the past few years some teachers have been unable to secure money on their warrants at any price.

The law in my State of Oklahoma requires the warrants for any scholastic year to be paid in the order of issuance, out of the funds collected in taxes or other sources; but if sufficient taxes are not collected or funds derived from other sources to pay all the outstanding warrants issued against the funds of any school district, they are not paid out of the taxes collected during the coming year, because the funds collected during the coming year are used to meet the obligations of that particular year. You will see, therefore, that the teachers are particularly concerned with the warrants issued during the last half of the school year, and that, of course, is after January 1 of each year.

The truth is that in practically every rural school district in my State of Oklahoma, and I assume this is measurably true throughout the entire country, taxes are not collected during these distressed times in sufficient amount to meet the warrant obligations issued against the taxes. As I have stated, if a warrant issued during the last half of a school year is not paid out of the taxes collected for that year, this warrant is not paid the following year, and there really is no way to collect it except by bonding the district or to bring suit and get a judgment against the district, and after a judgment is secured it may require 3 or more years to collect it.

You will see, therefore, that if you really want to help the poorly paid teachers you will vote for the amendment which I have offered, which will extend the time within which loans may be made, from January 1, 1934, to June 1, 1934, so that loans may be made to school districts to pay the salaries of teachers for the spring months of the year and until June 1, 1934.

Now, this is an important amendment, if you really want to help the teachers of the country.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman did not mean June 1 of this year?

Mr. HASTINGS. Of this year.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The amendment reads 1935.

Mr. HASTINGS. I meant it to read June 1, 1934.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be corrected to read "June 1, 1934."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. I hope the author of the original amendment will accept this amendment, as it is very important to the teachers throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the information I am about to give the committee is of vital importance to every Member outside the city of Chicago who hopes that his home region will profit by this bill.

The amendment proposes full and adequate security for loans, and, in my judgment, there is not a single school district in the United States outside of Chicago which can meet this requirement. So I am opposing the amendment primarily that the Committee on Banking and Currency may not be held responsible by Members when they find they have been given a gold brick. "Full and adequate security!" Now, why can Chicago give full and adequate security? Because it owns a block in the heart of the city that is worth $40,000,000. Let every Member here who hopes to get something for his own school district ask himself what security that is full and adequate it can present. He may suggest tax warrants. Is there a man here who would lend a dollar today on any tax warrant in the United States where school teachers are unpaid? Is it not known that communities in Florida are in insolvency today and that we are passing legislation to relieve bankrupt communities generally? The value of a tax warrant depends upon the willingness of the citizens in the district in question to vote the money. There is no certainty that they will ever vote the money, and no prudent man would lend on the tax warrant of a district that cannot pay its teachers.

But you may say there are the school buildings and grounds, which can, in effect, be mortgaged in order to get this money. Is there a man here who would accept a school building as security for a loan? It is of no value for any other purpose. Its life is short as a rule. It is usually not built of fireproof material, and the ground upon which it rests is often of insignificant value. So you can remove school property from the security that can be given.

So that in effect, barring some few localities in Kentucky, I think, this amendment is not worth a continental to anybody outside Chicago, who is being asked to vote for it on the ground that it will help his school district. The amendment is a camouflage for relief for the second largest city in the United States, a city of great wealth and prosperity, which now through several years has been unable to extricate itself from the slough into which it was plunged by disgraceful local politics. The city of Chicago is an instrumentality of the State of Illinois. The State of Illinois has refused to meet this situation. It has recently passed some legislation that may help, but now for several years it has turned a deaf ear to the teachers in Chicago, who have been left in a pitiable plight that should arouse the sympathy of anybody except a ward politician.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. By reason of their inability to get from the legislature the necessary legislation, or to induce the legislature to call a constitutional convention to change the constitution, Chicago has floundered in this slough of mud, and now comes here, because it will not save itself, because the Legislature of Illinois will not save it—comes here to ask the credit of the United States, aye, the credit of the residents of all these school districts that are being deceived in the expectation that they will get something out of the bill—the credit of the whole country, to save a city that will not save itself.

There came to the subcommittee a witness from the city of Chicago, Prof. Simeon E. Leland, Professor of Economics in the University of Chicago, and a member of the State Tax Commission of Illinois, and he made this statement:

As I see it, there is only excuse for two sets of government, Federal Government and urban government, and I would abolish all the rest in between.

He qualified by saying this was only his philosophy. He did not ask us to accept it; but if he had his way, he would abolish the State of Illinois and he would abolish every other State. Is it not a pity that we have reached a point where men of learning come before us and suggest to us that we abolish all the 48 States of the Union? He comes from the observation of an administration of a city in a State where I do not marvel such views should germinate. He comes from a city so debauched in the conduct of its affairs that it cannot get relief from its own legislature. So he would abolish State legislatures to justify the demand on the Treasury of the United States of America.

Then the real question is here whether you will feel it expedient by national legislation to supplant the State of Illinois and say to the city of Chicago that it may raise money on the $40,000,000 block in the center of the city. There is no question here of help for any other school districts. That it is impracticable and impossible to give, and it is certain will not be given.

I trust that, knowing the facts in the case, the committee will not see fit to allow itself to be used to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the city of Chicago. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Do I understand the gentleman wishes to convey the idea that there is no city, no school district throughout this country, that is not financially responsible, that should not be considered for any kind of a loan?

Mr. LUCE. I undertake to say that the requirement of the amendment "full and adequate security" will not be met by any school district in the United States outside of the city of Chicago.

Mr. KENNEY. May I ask the gentleman whether or not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, after the passage of this bill, will not be a large banking institution so far as the making of loans is concerned and stand in the place of the ordinary commercial bank?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, I suppose so—in effect.

Mr. KENNEY. And has it not been true in the past that the municipalities of this Nation have always been considered for loans by all the commercial banks of the country?

Mr. LUCE. That is perfectly true, but at the present moment municipalities are coming here to ask us to pass legislation to treat them as bankrupts and provide for their going through insolvency.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the gentleman from Massachusetts for at least conceding that should a loan be made to Chicago, it would be fully secured and repaid. This is really more than I had expected from the gentleman. Now, I assure the gentleman that within the last few years the city of Chicago has demonstrated to the world, if not to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that it is making progress in every direction. The city now has a splendid administration which is doing everything within its power to rebuild the fair name of Chicago. I recognize that up to about 2 years ago the city of Chicago suffered. I am not going to talk politics, nor am I going to say that it was due to Republican maladministration, but is not that a fact? I assure the gentleman from Massachusetts, and every other Member present that we of this city are making progress and now have perhaps as good a record for accomplishment as any other city in the United States.

I differ with the gentleman from Massachusetts when he says that this amendment would afford relief to no school district in the United States outside of Chicago, for an examination of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. MEEKS], a member of the committee, will disclose that it is substantially my bill, H.R. 9465, and will show that the provision to which the gentleman objects, namely, to make loans upon full and adequate security, are embodied in other provisions of this bill and in all sections granting authority to the R.F.C. to make loans.

Take any section at random, and this will be found to be the case. For instance, section 8 states that "the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon full and adequate security based on mineral acreages", and so on.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] stated also that the great State of Illinois has neglected or refused to come to the rescue of its unpaid 16,000 deserving school teachers. May I again call his attention to the fact that in a special session of our legislature a few months ago an act was passed authorizing the Chicago Board of Education to pledge not only a great block of its property, which has a value of $40,000,000, and which he described, but any other property owned by the Board of Education not used for educational purposes, to obtain money with which to pay its school teachers?

I also wish to say that not one single cent of this authorization will be taken out of any other appropriation provided for or authorized in this bill. The Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has plainly stated that the Corporation can make loans up to $100,000,000 out of funds that have already been repaid and which are again legally available for loan purposes.

The pending amendment was adopted by the Committee on Banking and Currency after weeks and weeks of careful consideration. It has been carefully worded; the Government's highest interests are protected; it has the approval of every member of the committee, with the exception of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and one or two others; it has the approval of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the approval of the administration also.

Let me again call attention to the fact that this is merely an authorization and not an appropriation. It only authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to the limit of $75,000,000 for the payment of school teachers' salaries. I repeat, it applies to all school districts in the United States, provided, of course, that they furnish full and adequate security, and I disagree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] when he states that there is not any other district in the United States, outside of Chicago, that is not solvent and that can furnish good securities that are and will be acceptable to the Corporation. I am reliably informed that 27 States will be able to comply with the requirements of my amendment.

I desire to say one word, if I may, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS], who has made an earnest and convincing plea for his committee bill. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts and those interested in the gentleman's bill that when the gentleman asks for a special rule for his bill, I, as one member of the Rules Committee, shall gladly vote for it, because I am in favor of the Congress' doing all within its power to take care of the country's praiseworthy educational institutions. Congress should come forward and do the righteous thing, the imperative thing, for these brave men and women to whom we confidently intrust the education of the youth of America.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, I believe, has stated that this bill will not interfere with his bill. I shall give the gentleman the same support of his bill that I am giving to this meritorious amendment of the committee. I believe this amendment is of extreme importance. I assure the Membership of the House that the provision is broad enough to make possible the authorization of loans on good security to any school district.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the mere fact that I remained here today at my post of duty rather than leave the city to attend the funeral tomorrow of a close relative should prove my vital interest in the worthy cause of these unfortunate school teachers, and through them the great cause of popular education.

I cannot close without extending my thanks and appreciation to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], who has recognized the merit and need of this amendment, and for the great aid he has given me and the great service he has rendered in obtaining favorable consideration. This also applies to Mr. PRALL, of New York, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland, Mr. SISSON, of New York, Mr. FARLEY, of Indiana, and to my colleague, Mr. MEEKS, of Illinois, who, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and for the committee, offered my amendment.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall take over 5 minutes; I just want to express myself on this proposition, although I know I am on the unpopular side, as I usually am; but that does not keep me from expressing my views.

So far as I am able to understand, there has never been a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that Congress could appropriate money to anything except Federal projects. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act has never been passed upon by the Supreme Court. A number of important laws, as a matter of fact, have never reached the Supreme Court. I am one of those who believe that Congress should not enact a law unless there is constitutional authority for the law, and I am trying to stand by this proposition.

I taught school for many years, and certainly am in sympathy with the school teachers. I should like to help the schools, but I know this is a State problem, and was so declared by the framers of the Constitution of the United States. Congress has no right to appropriate one dollar for schools anywhere in any State, and I base this statement not only upon the Constitution itself but upon the decisions of the courts of the United States and upon veto messages of Presidents who have disapproved legislation of this kind.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KENNEY. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been making money out of its loans, has it not?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. That does not alter the question at all, even though they may have made hundreds of millions.

I read now, Mr. Chairman, an excerpt from the veto message from President Buchanan, who was President of the United States during the year 1859, when this law was enacted.

This is very short. The Congress had passed a law donating land and land scrip for the establishment of agricultural and mechanical colleges in the different States. He vetoed the bill, and here are just a few of his words:

> I deem it to be both inexpedient and unconstitutional.
> Does Congress possess the power under the Constitution to make a donation of public lands to the different States to provide colleges for the purposes of educating their own people? I presume the general proposition is undeniable that Congress does not possess the power to appropriate money in the Treasury, raised by taxes on the people of the United States, for the purpose of educating the people of the respective States. It will not be pretended that any such power is to be found among the specific powers granted to Congress, nor that "it is necessary and proper for carrying into execution" any one of these powers.
> Should Congress exercise such a power, this would be to break down the barriers which have been so carefully constructed in the Constitution to separate Federal from State authority. We should then not only "lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises" for Federal purposes but for every State purpose which Congress might deem expedient or useful. This would be an actual consolidation of the Federal and State Governments, so far as the great taxing power is concerned, and constitute a sort of partnership between the two in the Treasury of the United States, equally ruinous to both.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. That was before the Civil War?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. And the Congress afterward did pass the very bill that the gentleman objects to?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. That is true, but it has not yet been passed upon by the Supreme Court.

Mr. KELLER. But it has been in effect for many years?

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. It has been in effect, that is true. Many laws have been passed years ago that are unconstitutional and have not been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. KELLER. It has been good for the schools all over the country.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Some of them have, but I am going to stand by the Constitution of the United States, as I understand it.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the committee will object to the Hastings amendment, which accomplishes substantially what was desired by the original amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment and the amendment thereto may be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HASTINGS) there were—ayes 87, noes 50.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH and Mr. GLOVER) there were—ayes 90, noes 73.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers, Mr. MEEKS and Mr. LUCE.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 113, noes 80.

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Kentucky: On page 21, after section 9, insert a new section as follows:
> "That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make loans for periods not exceeding 20 years, to finance the acquisition of any system, plant, or works for the production, transmission, or distribution of electric energy by such public corporations, bodies, or instrumentalities as are referred to in section 201 (a) (1) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932. The provisions of title 2 of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 as amended and all acts supplementary thereto applicable to loans to said public corporations, bodies, or instrumentalities so far as consistent with the terms thereof shall apply to loans made under the terms of this section."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The Committee has already passed upon this proposal.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

Mr. RANKIN. This is not the same proposal.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard further?

Mr. LUCE. I do.

Mr. Chairman, my understanding is if there is a substantial change in a proposal that has been defeated, it may be brought up; but if the new proposal is not essentially different, the Committee cannot be obliged to take the time to consider it again.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the Chairman to the fact that a substantial change has been made, as will appear from a reading of the amendment. The amendment on yesterday confined its application to municipalities that purchased power from public plants, which necessarily confined it to small areas. That has been eliminated by this amendment and therefore broadens the scope of the amendment to reach the entire country.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the change is radical, substantial, and entirely changes the purport of the amendment, and that the gentleman's point of order should not be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that there has been sufficient change made in this amendment to make it a different proposition, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon we voted on an amendment somewhat similar in nature to this, but confined only to municipalities buying their power from a Government agency. Whatever objection was offered yesterday afternoon to the amendment was offered on the ground that we were picking out particular portions of the United States and granting a privilege that we did not grant to other sections.

The amendment which I offer removes all such arguments from consideration, because there is not a municipality in the United States that cannot come in under this amendment as offered and get the necessary funds if they can present security that is adequate and satisfies the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is not a municipality that cannot come in and get the money. That argument is completely removed from the picture. This applies to every section of the United States.

There is just one issue before us this morning when you vote on the amendment, and that is: Are you opposed to these municipalities being offered the opportunity of owning their own municipal lighting plants?

It is not a question of voting for one section over another; we are voting for all the country, and if you are in favor of municipalities being allowed to own their light plants, then you should be in favor of this Government agency lending the money to make it possible for them to do so.

As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] said yesterday afternoon, there is not a type of security that can be offered that is better than the returns from these municipal plants. We have not very many of them in the State of Kentucky. We have had a government there for 30 or 40 years that has been opposed to the people having the right to benefit by these public monopolies. We have had a government there that has not believed the people ought to have the right to purchase cheap power, but that they ought to be exploited by private enterprise. So we have not had an opportunity in more than three or four instances to benefit by municipal ownership. There are in Kentucky the towns of Owensboro, Providence, and Falmouth with the lowest light rates in the State because they have municipal plants, and at least one of these towns is without any city tax rate and is supporting the entire government of the city by the returns on their municipal plant. We should like for the rest of the State of Kentucky to have the right to do the same thing, and we should like for the rest of the municipalities in the United States to have the right to either get a fair and decent rate from their private companies or the right to come to the R.F.C. and, by furnishing adequate security, get the money to buy their own light plants.

This is the issue before us this morning—not to grant relief to any particular section, but to all towns in the United States.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman said this would allow them to get decent rates from the companies that they now have. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. What I mean is, if they cannot enter into a contract with the private companies now serving them, they will have this avenue open to them so they can bring their securities here and borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and build or buy the plant that is now in their town.

Mr. CONNERY. I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky, and to the other Members of the Congress, that whenever you give the municipalities the right to borrow this money, then your power companies will begin to bring your rates down. There is no amendment that has been offered in this House that will do more to bring down power rates to the ultimate consumers in this country than this amendment. Very few of these communities will ever exercise this right, very few of them will ever borrow money under this provision, but here is what the amendment will do. You people who live in towns and cities that are being overcharged on electric light and power rates will see them begin to bring those rates down, base them on the cost of production, and not on watered stocks, unreasonable overhead charges, and on great expenditures made to spread propaganda throughout the country, and to keep lawyers on the pay rolls that they do not need in order to keep the people misled as to what they are doing to them.

This will not cost very much, and I sincerely trust that the Membership of the House will adopt the amendment, because it will help to bring the rates down in every town, city, and community in the United States, that has not already brought them down, to the T.V.A. yardstick.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the question before us is really this: Are we going to use the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a weapon of social justice, as a kind of club to coerce one or the other group in some particular municipal fight, or are we to use it for the purpose for which it was originally created and for which most of us want it extended?

One of the recent speakers has just said that if you approve of municipal ownership you should vote for this amendment. Mr. Chairman, that is a strange statement. The mere fact that we approve the right of an individual to conduct whatever business he sees fit does not necessarily mean that we want to give that person the right to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The mere fact that you approve of a particular kind of business does not necessarily mean that you want to put the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into that kind of business.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized for the purpose of bolstering up the economic system of the country by assistance to banks, insurance companies, and railroads. We are now carrying it further and giving direct assistance to industry for the particular purpose of keeping them going and thus keeping people at work.

We all know the purpose for which this amendment has been introduced and we all know it will not put a single additional man to work. The people are already working in these plants that are to be acquired and the use of this money will not put any more men to work than are working now.

To show the manifest absurdity of the suggestion, why, if it is a sound suggestion, should we not take every kind of public utility and give the same kind of an authorization, whether a street-car system, a bus system, a water-works system, a power line, or anything else of a like nature? How long would the resources of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation last, Mr. Chairman, if we should permit every municipality of the country that wants to acquire anything of this kind to come in and ask for money for such a purpose?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would not the effect of this amendment be the setting up of a selling agency in practically every city in the United States where private interests have these particular utilities.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It would seem to me it might very well work out in that way.

Mr. BRITTEN. It seems to me it would have that effect in practically every city in the country because wherever they have in any small city or community a more or less defunct electric utility their object would be to sell that utility to the city and a selling agency would be immediately established for that purpose.

Mr. HOLLISTER. In many cases the city would not be helped at all and it would simply mean that some private promoters who had a losing proposition on their hands would see a chance to get out from under.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Does not the gentleman believe that any such light plant in the country that wanted to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, whether it was defunct or not, would be just as apt to pay this Government as Mr. Dawes would be to pay the $90,000,000 that you lent him under Mr. Hoover's administration?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not think the gentleman is addressing his remarks to the question. I am not suggesting the idea it might not be paid back. I am suggesting that this is not the function of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The gentleman, apparently, takes the attitude that a great many of the Members take, that the mere fact that the loan will probably be repaid is a reason why one should be able to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to borrow money. I say that so far we have not adopted that theory, and I do not think we ought to go that far.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Oh, no; Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOLLISTER. I cannot yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. If a private individual in a town in your State owned a power plant, under this bill he could borrow money. Does the gentleman contend that if all the people in that town owned such a plant it would be worth any less or it would be any more dangerous for the R.F.C. to lend it money?

Mr. HOLLISTER. But that is not the gentleman's amendment. Under the gentleman's amendment, the R.F.C. may advance money to municipalities to acquire a power plant, not borrow on one already owned.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Under this bill, as now written, the private owner of a plant can borrow money from the R.F.C.; and my contention is that if the people of the town owned the plant, there would be just as good security.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am willing to yield for a question, but that is not a question.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. Is it not a fact that a great majority of the power lines and power plants in the State of Ohio are owned by the Ohio Power Co., a subsidiary of the House of Morgan?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman probably knows a great deal more about that subject than I do, but the gentleman's question has nothing to do with the proposition I am discussing.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I think that if this amendment did not do anything else except to give particular cities and towns throughout the United States an opportunity to have some defense against these big power companies who are controlling all the gas and electricity of the United States—if it only gave the cities and towns an opportunity to have a club to say to these power companies, "If you do not give us decent rates, if you do not give us low rates, if you do not give the people a chance, we will build our own plant", I think the passage of this amendment would be worth while.

I am deeply interested in this matter for this reason. In 1912 my father was mayor of the city of Lynn, Mass. He brought down an expert from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to make a survey of this very situation in the city of Lynn. This expert got all of the facts and figures together and reported that the Lynn Gas & Electric Co. was making some 300-percent profit on the rates that the people of Lynn were paying.

One of my colleagues told me this afternoon that in his city the small home owners today are paying the same rates for gas and electricity that they did when the gas and electric company first started, showing that it is not a question of justice and fair rates. It is not a question of fair rates at all; it is a question of getting everything they can out of the people. I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will pass. It will be a great forward step for every city and town in the United States, giving them an opportunity, or a club if you call it, against the big Power Trust, and will let the average taxpayer of the country pay the right rates for gas and electricity and not the high exorbitant rates charged by the Power Trust.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LLOYD. Assuming all the gentleman says in favor of the amendment, what we are trying to do is to furnish industry money so that they can put men to work. Does not the gentleman think the better way would be to provide for this by some other legislation?

Mr. CONNERY. I think there is no time like the present. It is germane to this legislation, and we ought to do it now.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think that when these municipalities borrow money to build a plant it will put men to work in those industries?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; and the workers will be supplied with greater buying power, thereby aiding all business men in that city or town.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What does the gentleman say about public utilities regulating the rates of power companies in the cities? Does not the gentleman think they are sufficient?

Mr. CONNERY. I heard a colleague to my right here say just now that the public utilities do not regulate. Of course, there are utility commissions and commissions; some act for the people, others for the interests of the power companies.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I do not think the gentleman from Texas understood what the amendment is.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from Texas meant that if in Topeka, Kans., a new plant was being erected by money furnished by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that would put people to work.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But that is not covered by this particular amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Permit me to answer the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]. The trouble is that instead of the State commissions regulating the power interests or the utilities, the utilities are regulating the State commissions. That is the reason we had to resort to the establishment of the Tennessee Valley Authority, in order to give the people some yardstick by which to measure the rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Concerning what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] says, the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, which is supposed to regulate or fix the rates, is now known by the people not as a public-utilities commission but as a utilities commission.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; as I said some work for the people, others for the Power Trust. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] will be agreed to. I think it is a good amendment and will inure greatly to the benefit of the small-tax payers of the United States.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will this amendment enable loans to be made to municipalities for the construction, building, and installation of their own plants?

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I understand.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will it allow the building of new ones?

Mr. RANKIN. You can do that under the P.W.A.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it has been our hope under this bill to give the full share of benefit to such small industries which cannot now go to the banks or other ordinary lending agencies of the country and obtain capital with which to carry on their business. As a consequence, these factories and businesses have to close, and men and women are put out of employment. We want to give every small industry in the Nation an opportunity to live and progress and to expand and to put men to work. This talk here today about creating funds under the R.F.C. by which municipalities can buy up the utilities of the Nation should not be considered as an amendment to this bill, because we know from the appraisals of these utilities that there are not just a few millions of dollars involved, but there are actually billions of dollars involved. I call attention to the fact that the money provided for in this bill would not be one one-thousandth of the capital of these utilities which are now serving the country. I want to see low rates, and I want to see low rates in the industrial States, such as New York and Massachusetts, the New England States, and in Michigan and Ohio and the Midwest States, and why? Because in these States we have not these subsidized power plants such as you have in the Tennessee Valley, such as you will have in the Grand Coulee District, such as you have at the Wilson Dam and Roosevelt Dam and the Coolidge Dam and the Boulder Dam. We have not the facilities for getting cheap power such as you, and we want to keep these industries. You have taken away from us certain of our agricultural pursuits because of these Government subsidies. When we can soberly sit down around a committee table and work out a plan whereby every municipality may take over its light and power plant, then I think perhaps we should give favorable consideration to it, but in this bill the limitation of $300,000,000 is placed, and if every cent of that money were used in the purchase of public utilities and lighting plants, by municipalities, you could not begin to even buy out one one-hundredth part of the capital stock of these companies, and so all the benefit which you would give to the municipalities by way of reduced rates would be inconsequential. I do not contend that the funds advanced by the R.F.C. under this amendment would be deducted from the $300,000,000 provided for in this bill, but I use this figure solely for comparison. Further, I contend that you are not putting one man to work by adopting this amendment. It is our purpose under this bill to give to the small industries of the Nation a chance to live.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MAY. To call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that if we loan money to municipalities to acquire these light plants, we will take that much property out of the realm of taxation for the Federal Government when it becomes municipal property. In addition to that, we do not increase employment in any single instance, but perhaps reduce it, because the private utility would employ more men than a municipal plant.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is perhaps right. I feel that if the public utility commissions of the several States cannot regulate a situation such as that brought to our attention by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] in which he says the utilities of his State are getting 300-percent profit, then there is something the matter with that State administration.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. And I want to say that there is something wrong with the administration.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then it is up to the gentleman's State to remedy it. Such a condition does not exist in my State. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, lest an opportunity be not afforded a little later on, I wish to compare what you are doing now in respect to section 9 with section 11. Under this section we seem to be loading down the R.F.C. with all sorts of loans on things which are somewhat doubtful in respect to the relief of unemployment which they would afford. Under section 11, commerce and industry are to be subjected to no such liberal treatment. They must show first that there are no available funds in the local banks, and then must go to the Federal Reserve bank in their district, and after being refused twice, then—and then only—can they go to the R.F.C.. By that time the loan would necessarily be regarded as a most dubious one.

I call to the attention of the committee that I have already heard this point made by those who have a great deal to do with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We passed a bill 2 years ago to authorize the Federal Reserve Board to make loans to private industry for 6 months. Did they do it? They did not. We are doubtful as to whether they will do it now. When section 11 is reached, I hope that some member of the committee will see to it that that part of the section be stricken out which provides that when there are no available funds at the local banks, commerce and industry must be forced to go to the Federal Reserve bank of that district before they may make application to the R.F.C. They should be allowed to go either to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the Federal Reserve bank.

Section 11 is the important one embodying the real purpose of this bill. This measure is designed to assist commerce and industry, that business may receive a more permanent cure and future unemployment be prevented. I take this opportunity of presenting this matter to the attention of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I urge that this proposed amendment be presented, especially in view of the unwillingness of the Federal Reserve banks to carry out the plain intent of the Congress expressed in the act of 1932.

At that time I personally called on the Federal Reserve bank in my district and asked if they would make loans to industry, and they said, "Probably not. We do not intend to enter into competition with our member banks, even for 6 months." The intent of the Congress was rudely violated. Under this act an industry must show the Federal Reserve bank why the local member bank will not loan the money. The local bank probably will be called upon by the Federal Reserve bank anyway to pass upon the loan. When the local member banks have money on hand—and they now do have it, but do not see fit to loan it—what possible chance has industry, after being refused twice, to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation could simply say that if the desired loan were not a proper one to be made by the other two agencies, why should or how could they approve it?

Let us see to it that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in its delegated duty to assist industry and commerce, is not to be called on to review prejudicial opinions, but rather be permitted to make its own investigations and decision, uninfluenced by the refusals of other agencies which simply do not wish to do business.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to know if, in the gentleman's opinion, Congress is unable to pass a law to compel the agencies of this Government to do what this Congress told them to do?

Mr. GIFFORD. I reminded the Reserve bank officials that the intent of Congress was that they should come to the relief of industry for the next 6 months.

Mr. KELLER. And the gentleman should have said more.

Mr. GIFFORD. I did say a great deal more on the floor of this House on the assembling of the next Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think we should bear in mind that these loans are to be made only upon application of the municipality which desires to have its own electric plant. If the people of a community feel for one reason or another that their interests will best be served by having their own electric plant, it seems to me we should afford those people an opportunity to acquire that plant, by making loans, just as we make loans to private business. This bill provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can make loans to industrial and commercial businesses. It would seem to me only fair that we should loan to municipalities which are desirous of engaging in the power business the money to enable them to acquire a plant. In no locality is there a possibility of an electric plant being established unless the people of that community feel that for some reason or another private business has not been dealing properly with them. The only time there is any agitation for a public power plant is when the people of a community feel they are paying excessive rates. If the people feel that in their locality they are paying excessive rates, it seems to me we would be doing the fair thing in this bill by making money available to them to carry on that business, which is certainly of a public nature.

One gentleman made the statement that this bill would have the effect of taking property out of taxation and placing it in the hands of the municipality which would not pay Federal taxes. That may be true to some extent, but if a public utility, if an electric plant in any given community is paying such large income taxes to the Federal Government that the Federal Government would be materially injured by the loss of that income, then it seems clear that the profits are so large that they should be retained in the hands of the people of that community through the operation of their own public plant.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. When the Tennessee Valley Authority delivered the contract to the city of Tupelo, Miss., to supply power, to be furnished to the people at rates based on the cost of production, the mayor of the city held that contract up and said, "This contract reduces the light and power bill to the people of Tupelo just exactly as much as our city ad valorem taxes amount to, all told."

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not feel that if, under this legislation, we authorize municipalities to borrow money to buy these plants, it may be a means by which the municipalities will be able to pay large sums of money in exorbitant and ridiculous prices to the public utilities that now own the plants simply because of the fact that they take it for granted it is all coming from the Government?

Mr. BOILEAU. In coming to that conclusion the gentleman must assume that those who will act for the communities are a bunch of bums, a bunch of grafters, and that they are crooked. In the first place, there must be a sentiment in the community for a publicly owned plant. In the second place no municipality is going to pay an exorbitant price for a plant, or more than the plant is worth. There is no more reason to say that graft will result from the adoption of this amendment than there is to say that there has been graft in the acquisition of all public-utility plants by municipalities.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does not the earning capacity of an electric plant in a municipality have a decided bearing upon the sale value of the plant? If it is not earning anything, it will not sell. If the plant is earning a big profit, it will sell at a big price. Would not, therefore, profits have to be taken into consideration in fixing the value of these plants?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not entirely agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the statement of my colleague from the seventh district of Michigan to the effect that if the commissions in the various States could not regulate properly the rates paid by consumers, that there was something wrong with the government in those States. Had the gentleman been acquainted with the conditions in his own State he would know that there is and has been something wrong there for years. For instance, the rate the ordinary householders pay in cities comparable in size to Washington is 9 cents per kilowatt-hour. The rate in the city of Washington is 3.2 cents. When I came here it was 3.8 cents. Now, there is no such difference in cost. There might be a difference in cost of a cent a kilowatt-hour, but there is no such difference in cost as 6½ cents per kilowatt-hour.

We in Michigan live in one of the most utility-ridden States in the Union. For instance, the utility which furnishes power for most of the State and for my city is the Consumers' Power Co. I happen to operate a number of plants for which I buy power from this company. The distributing plant of the Consumers' Power Co. which furnishes power to Saginaw and Bay City is located 3 or 4 miles outside the city of Saginaw; as a matter of fact, it is about half-way between the two cities. Saginaw has a population of about 83,000, and Bay City has a population of about 52,000. In Bay City is a municipal distributing plant buying current from the Consumers' Power Co. and retailing it to their inhabitants. I have a competitor in Bay City, 8 miles from my plant. I compared bills with him one day. Each of us happened to have a bill for the same number of kilowatt-hours—2,020. My competitor, buying from the Consumers' Power Co., paid $54, whereas I, buying from the Consumers' Power Co. also, paid $127 for the same number of kilowatt-hours; and our plants are located but 8 miles apart, and we are competitors.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HART. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The records show that in the city of Detroit, Mich., the consumers pay approximately three times as much for light and power as do the people right across the river in Windsor, Canada, although Windsor transmits hers from Niagara Falls, 250 miles away.

Mr. HART. I am aware of that fact. Now, the conditions were so bad and it was so generally understood that the commission was not functioning in behalf of the people in Michigan that the Governor preferred charges against the commission and removed the commissioners. Now we are beginning to have some hearings before this commission and may get some results.

The practices of these utilities are abominable. They go into city elections. They have furnished the money for certain candidates in city elections. If they have a contract coming up they immediately begin a campaign to elect someone who will negotiate for them; and they write their own rates; they have done it for years.

I am not advocating Government ownership of all public utilities. What I am after is fair rates, fair play.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are going far afield in giving any consideration whatever to this amendment. The purposes of the pending bill are to help recovery by extending aid to industries to continue and increase employment. It was never contemplated by our committee that the R.F.C. should be used to buy anything. We have had many hearings on bills providing for loans to municipalities and on bills for other purposes, but none of the proposals were included in this bill because we could not see that they extended aid to the unemployed. I am quite sure the gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken in his statement that this amendment will relieve unemployment.

In this bill $300,000,000 is provided for one purpose, that of aiding industry to get on its feet. I do not suppose the electric and power plants in this country could be bought for less than billions of dollars, and every amendment adopted by the committee today which removes any amount from the sum set up in the bill for the purpose of the bill takes just that much aid from industry.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRALL. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. There seems to be considerable misunderstanding as to the effect of the amendments already adopted on the $300,000,000 the bill carries for industry. For instance, to be specific, is the amount of money that was earmarked for the school districts to be taken from the $300,000,000?

Mr. PRALL. No; it does not.

Mr. SNELL. Then, regardless of any of the amendments put on the bill there will be $300,000,000 for industry?

Mr. PRALL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And the sums necessary to take care of the other amendments will be in addition to the $300,000,000?

Mr. PRALL. Yes; that is provided in the amendment. It does not affect the $300,000,000 set up in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. In the hearings before the gentleman's committee was any consideration given to authorizations similar to that contained in the amendment pending before the House at the present time?

Mr. PRALL. Yes; our subcommittee sat for 6 weeks holding hearings almost every day. During that time many bills were presented to the committee upon which it acted unfavorably. Probably a great many of them will be offered today as amendments to the pending bill. Had the committee considered that any of these proposals would have aided the objects sought to be accomplished by this bill the committee would have included the suggestions in the bill. This is primarily a bill to aid industry and not to purchase anything, not to furnish money for such uses as the buying of electric power plants or for States or municipalities to invest in other activities.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRALL. I hope the House will stand by the committee. I have no objection to Members introducing bills authorizing the purchase of these plants; but this is an object foreign to the purposes of the pending legislation.

I hope the House will not only vote against this amendment but against every amendment offered which does not primarily take care of industry.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRALL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The whole effect of the amendment now under discussion would be merely to transfer title from one party to another party and would not aid industry at all?

Mr. PRALL. It would mean absolutely nothing to industry.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRALL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have just read the amendment and it seems to me that it gives additional power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan money to States or subdivisions thereof for the purpose of buying power plants, and so forth. If this amendment carries, will the gentleman say that the money so loaned would come out of the appropriation that we are making for loans to industry?

Mr. PRALL. I may say to the gentleman that in connection with other bills that have been introduced, reports come from the R.F.C. that if those objects, whatever they may be, run into very much money, Congress will have to appropriate additional funds.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The amendment that we are now considering does not take away from the amount that we are now appropriating, but simply gives to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the power to loan money for the purpose contained in the amendment, namely, for the purchase of power plants, and so forth. The gentleman is not going to contend that we are taking away one dollar from this loan-to-industry appropriation by the amendment.

Mr. PRALL. It may be construed by the R.F.C. that that is what it means.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The intent of the Congress right now, regardless of the construction placed upon it by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation later, is simply to give them the power to loan money for the purpose enumerated in the amendment, if they have the money, and not to provide that any part of the appropriation contained in this act is to be used for that purpose.

Mr. PRALL. Well, whatever meaning and whatever interpretation the R.F.C. may choose to make, I hope, and I again ask, the Members of the House to vote against this amendment and not load the bill down with amendments for other purposes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In line with the question propounded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], I call attention to the fact that the amendment with respect to $75,000,000 to cover loans for teachers' salaries specifically provided that it shall not come out of the $300,000,000. It was limited to $75,000,000. I suggest that if it is intended the proceeds of this authorization shall not come out of the $300,000,000, it ought to so state.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is what I was trying to show. This will not come out of the appropriation.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I am somewhat worried, too. I believe the House should understand as they proceed what becomes of the $300,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. It seems to me it is very important to understand just where this $300,000,000 goes which we are allocating to the R.F.C. We have a provision in the bill that carries an authorization of $125,000,000 for drainage or irrigation districts to buy bonds with. The question comes up whether they can use the $300,000,000, which was supposed to be for loans to help industries, to buy these drainage bonds?

Mr. PRALL. No; they cannot.

Mr. FISH. Suppose the R.F.C. runs short of funds, can they take any of the $300,000,000?

Mr. PRALL. No; they cannot.

Mr. FISH. I think it is very important that that be made most emphatic.

Mr. PRALL. The appropriation which the gentleman refers to, of $125,000,000, was made under another act some time ago, wherein $50,000,000 was first provided. The $50,000,000 was not sufficient and they applied for $100,000,000 additional funds. We increased this amount to $125,000,000 because they have applications now pending for almost this amount.

Mr. FISH. But could they take any of this $300,000,000 if the other fund runs short?

Mr. PRALL. They are bound to loan $300,000,000 to industry under this bill, regardless of anything else.

Mr. FISH. That is what I want to know.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Under the existing law, the R.F.C. has the right to extend its credit to irrigation and levee districts, as the gentleman just explained, and under the law, as amended in this bill, to mining corporations, and now it is proposed to extend the benefits to municipalities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. In extending this credit they will be operating under existing laws and using existing funds. They have a considerable amount at their disposal. Section 5 (d) is in regard to extending direct loans to industry and section 5 (d) in giving the R.F.C. permission and authority to extend the loans also makes an authorization of $300,000,000. Therefore, any amendment that we put in this bill, such as the Brown amendment and the Sabath amendment or any other amendment, the amount of money that is expended will not come from section 5 (d) because that section stands out by itself, to cover commercial and industrial loans $300,000,000.

Mr. PRALL. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment. Let it be clearly understood that the gentleman in charge of the bill has plainly stated to the House that if this amendment is adopted the $300,000,000 provided for in this bill will in no way be affected. I say this for the future benefit of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if the amendment is adopted.

We passed a law appropriating money to be disbursed by the Public Works Administration. There were several counties and municipalities in my State that applied for loans for the purpose of constructing their own power plants. The public utilities of my State immediately went into court and challenged the right of the counties to issue bonds for this purpose. This tied up the loans. A special session of our legislature was held, and I regret to say that it was subject to severe criticism. Why? Because it was claimed by the press that the public-utility corporations operating in the State went to the State capital and by means, fair or foul, protested the legalization of such bonds, and the protests prevented our legislature from enacting legislation that would have enabled the counties and the subdivisions thereof to construct these power plants. If I am in error in what I say, I hope some Member from my State will correct me.

Now, here is proposed a plan to extend an opportunity for the States or subdivisions thereof to apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for aid to construct their own power plants. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not have the money, it cannot lend it; but I see no reason why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should not have the power to make such loans, provided the money is available.

I may say in conclusion—and this, again, is also for the benefit of the members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—the members of the House committee in control of this bill have stated here on the floor that if this amendment is adopted the money is not to come out of the $300,000,000 provided in this bill for loans to industry, but is simply an additional authorization giving power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make such loans if it is in a position to do so. I hope the amendment is agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROWN of Kentucky) there were—ayes 66, noes 96.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PRALL and Mr. BROWN of Kentucky.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 73, noes 124.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On Page 21, following line 10, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 9 (a). The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans out of the funds of the Corporation upon adequate security to publicly and privately controlled colleges, universities, and other institutions of higher learning, including corporations for higher learning controlled by denominations, to provide emergency relief through the refinancing of accumulated financial obligations: Provided, That the aggregate amount of such loans at any time outstanding shall not exceed $15,000,000."

LOANS TO DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGES

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, while the title of the bill under consideration stipulates that it relates to direct loans for industrial purposes, the fact is there are other matters embraced in the legislation and it is really an omnibus bill.

I favor the main purpose of the bill, which is to provide for direct loans to industries, to maintain and increase employment of labor where such loans cannot be obtained from existing banking institutions, and I am opposed to all amendments that would divert any part of the $300,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for industries, to other purposes.

Under the Relief and Construction Act of 1932, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to make self-liquidating loans to State universities and colleges, and to States, counties, and municipalities for the operation of educational institutions. Under the Public Works Act of 1933, such and similar loans were authorized to be made by the Administrator of Public Works, and the authority previously conferred upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was transferred to, and is now vested in, the Administrator of Public Works.

Provision has thus been made in the existing depression for loans to State universities, colleges, and other educational institutions where the public credit may be pledged for their repayment.

There is no existing provision for loans to privately controlled colleges, universities, and other institutions of learning, including corporations for learning controlled by denominations.

The denominational colleges and universities are supported by donations and contributions. They depend upon the liberality of their benefactors. In the very nature of the case, during the wide-spread depression, contributions for the support and maintenance of denominational institutions have greatly decreased. Formerly relief and charity work was done by voluntary contribution, but in the emergency where worthy citizens who gladly contributed to denominational schools and to charities, without any fault of their own, have lost all, denominational colleges and universities have been among the greatest sufferers.

The denominational institution fills a large place in public education. Citizens are taxed to maintain the State and publicly controlled colleges and universities. The educational facilities afforded by denominational colleges provide for training and educating the youth of the land without direct expense to the taxpayers. They are to be encouraged and maintained, for their proper functioning relieves the taxpayers of providing additional institutions to accommodate the students who now attend denominational colleges and universities.

Personally, I believe that the public interest would be promoted by the enlargement and multiplication of denominational institutions. The duty of the State is to provide the youth with at least a high-school education. The obligation is not so great to provide college or university training. In many States appropriations are made by the State legislatures for scholarships in private and denominational colleges and universities. Without being required to equip or maintain the higher institutions of learning by providing scholarships in denominational colleges, the legislatures are promoting the interests of the taxpayers.

Denominational colleges ordinarily have had excellent credit with banks and banking institutions. The amendment I propose is not a gift or a grant. The justification for the amendment is there is no source of credit to denominational colleges and universities in the emergency. They have ample and sound security; they are entitled to credit. My amendment would authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to extend that credit primarily because banks are unable to provide the necessary loans.

With no taxing power and with gifts and donations largely eliminated as a result of the depression, the denominational colleges and universities are really in a serious plight. In many cases the endowments of these institutions were invested in stocks and securities that have materially declined. The endowments have been seriously impaired. Relief is essential to enable these institutions to function properly.

I am aware that the Banking and Currency Committee conducted hearings on similar proposals. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] introduced similar legislation some months ago.

While the better practice is for legislation to be reported by the committee rather than be proposed on the floor of the House, I maintain the subject matter is not new. Unless the House considers the amendment which I propose, there will be no other opportunity during the present session for the consideration of this vital and important matter.

Previous provision has been made not only for State colleges and universities, but provision has been also made for agriculture, banking, railroads, and public works. There is nothing more important than the education of the youth of the land. We cannot neglect the training of the boys and girls of today who are to be the men and women of tomorrow. I know of nothing more vital to recovery than the proper training of the youth of today, and I know of no institutions where better training is given than in the denominational schools of the country.

The amendment that I have offered authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, out of its funds—without taking any part of the $300,000,000 authorized to aid industry in the pending bill—on adequate security, to make loans to denominational colleges, universities, and other publicly and privately controlled institutions, to provide emergency relief through the refinancing of accumulated financial obligations, with the provision that there shall not be outstanding loans aggregating more than $15,000,000 at one time. When multiplied millions are being supplied by the public Treasury for commerce and industry, for relief and for public improvements, I assert that Congress should recognize and encourage the fine work of the denominational colleges and universities by authorizing for the next current year loans aggregating $15,000,000 to aid them in refinancing.

I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. When I heard the amendment read, I was inclined to support it; but I was wondering whether it included preparatory schools.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The amendment applies to schools of higher learning, because the State and municipally owned colleges may obtain loans under the Public Works Act of 1933. The amendment has to do with institutions of higher learning, and for that reason I limit the amount of outstanding loans at one time to $15,000,000. I have in mind the bill mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusets [Mr. DOUGLASS] and appropriations for preparatory schools under that legislation, which will doubtless come before the House at an early date.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In West Virginia, over a period of years, the denominational colleges have been the backbone of our higher educational system. Today we have the denominational colleges of the State being driven to the wall. Now is the time to come to the rescue of these worthy institutions. I want to say that I favor the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And let me say, further, that the loans I seek in the amendment I have offered will aid the taxpayers. The proper fostering of denominational education is for the benefit of the taxpayers of the Nation. The denominational colleges have probably suffered more than any other institutions from the depression. The amendment will afford imperative relief to worthy institutions.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, this is clearly another attempt to get from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds for other purposes than those which the bill provides. There is no reason in the world why we should confuse this bill by adding amendments providing funds for private colleges or schools or hospitals.

A bill came before the Subcommittee on Banking and Currency which provided for funds for colleges, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation objected to it. The committee reported adversely, and I again appeal to the Membership to vote down this amendment.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me in all fairness it comes with poor grace from the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House to complain about an amendment's being added to this bill because it is for purposes other than for industry, especially as meritorious as this amendment is.

The House Banking and Currency Committee received a bill from the Senate which contained 11 pages, and it struck out all of those 11 pages and substituted its bill. The Senate bill was limited entirely to industry, but the House Committee on Banking and Currency had some pet purpose it wanted to serve. It is all right for the committee to take care of pet projects, but it is all wrong for the House to take care of borrowers under the head of "other purposes."

The committee saw fit to make undeveloped mineral acreage a proper subject for credit at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and no man has enough ingenuity in financial trickery to think of a credit more flimsy than undeveloped mineral rights.

We are told that $15,000,000 for private and denominational colleges would be loading this bill down with bad legislation. We are told that by the committee, in the face of the fact that the committee provided for making loans on mineral acreage. Undeveloped mineral acreage, Mr. Chairman, is what Dr. Cook sold his securities on.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And may I say that the $15,000,000 would be available to every one of the 48 States of the Union.

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes; the $15,000,000 could be loaned to denominational schools, and practically all of them own mortgages and other securities of substantial value, and it is quite certain that the money will be paid back. I want it distinctly understood that I did not vote for the R.F.C., in the first instance, and I have never voted for a single bill to extend its authority. I am unalterably opposed to using public credit for private purposes.

We are now debating this bill. I do not intend to vote for it in the end. I do submit that this House could most graciously accept this amendment for the denominational colleges, since the committee has seen fit to take care of mineral acreage, and has seen fit to go far beyond industries and provide for the purchase of preferred stock in insurance companies. Of course, it is common knowledge that when the R.F.C. buys preferred stock it is because the companies do not have adequate securities to present. That is the primary reason any company sells preferred stock. It does not have good collateral upon which to borrow money. It provides in the case of mutual insurance companies to take any security that they offer or that will pass the R.F.C. Why not permit these denominational and private colleges to keep their doors open by adopting this amendment? If there is any merit in this bill, there is more merit in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi than in anything the bill provides for, other than industry.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Virginia offers an amendment to the amendment: In line 4, strike out the word "higher" where it occurs in the amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I have no objection to that amendment to my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized just to say in behalf of the entire amendment as it is now changed that it seems to me that we should adopt it. It does not interfere with any loans to industries. I am voting, as many of you are, against every amendment offered on the floor that will affect or stop loans to industries or stop putting men to work, and the only chance that you are going to have at this session of Congress to get relief for these educational institutions is on this bill. You will not get a chance on the floor. We are lending money to railroads and insurance companies, on homes and on farms, and on everything else, but we are doing nothing for the privately owned educational institutions, and there is no reason why the Congress should discriminate against them.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. This amendment specifically provides that the $15,000,000 is not to come out of the $300,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; and that it is to be loaned on adequate security. It puts those people on the same basis that you put other private industries. There is no reason why we should discriminate against these institutions.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this proposal received the long and serious attention of the subcommittee. We heard eminent educators from various parts of the country who disclosed to us clearly and convincingly the unfortunate situation in which the private colleges find themselves. That situation received our complete sympathy, yet we decided it was unwise to advise the House to grant their request, partly because of the money involved, but that was, after all, a minor and unimportant consideration. The determining factor was to be found in the fact that this amendment would be a cruelty to the institutions themselves. Those institutions have been founded, conducted, and perpetuated through the benevolence of their friends, largely graduates of the institutions, sometimes individuals of large means, but always as a result of benevolence and philanthropy. Every man within the sound of my voice knows that the moment there is a public supply of funds for any of these institutions private supplies dry up. Men say, "You can get this from the Government or from some subdivision of the Government by a vote of the city council or the State legislature or the Congress. Why should we give anything when you can make the taxpayer do it?"

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I remind the gentleman that this merely provides for loans to enable those institutions that are supported by contribution to function.

Mr. LUCE. Absolutely. It applies to a loan, but that does not in any way affect the consideration I am presenting, that the moment it is found an institution can be saved from closing its doors by coming to Washington, that moment its friends, its graduates, townsfolk, and everybody else concerned stop taking any further interest in the situation of the institution in question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If we follow that argument to its conclusion, Congress would not make any appropriations for direct relief, would it?

Mr. LUCE. Why, sir, I see nothing to tie up the direct relief the gentleman has in mind with the benefactions that men make to schools and churches and hospitals; and if you begin with the colleges, you would have to go on to the hospitals and you would be asked to go on to the churches. There would be no stopping short of the complete field of private benevolence. So I feel I am accurate in saying that the adoption of this amendment would be an injury to the institutions which it is meant to benefit. So long as there are graduates who have faith in the institutions that gave them their education, so long as there are towns that desire to keep within their borders institutions that shall have their doors open to give higher education, so long as men feel enough responsibility for maintaining those institutions that make for the welfare of mankind, it is unfortunate that such institutions should ask for public funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if we follow the plea of the able chairman of this committee we might as well abolish all of Congress except the committee. The gentleman asked us, because the committee did not offer this amendment, not to put it in. I do not think there is any doubt that if this mining-pool amendment had been offered from the floor of the House he would have pleaded with us to vote it down, but because it was offered from within the committee it is all right.

Now, there is no question that these private colleges need and deserve relief. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not going to loan any money unless the security is adequate. I have had pleas from the best citizens in my district to vote for this amendment on some bill on the floor of this House because our private colleges need this relief. They have the best security on earth to offer. If you are going to have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if you are going to loan money to mining pools, if you are going to loan money to any other agencies, private power plants, and not to the public, I see no reason why you should not loan it to these private colleges.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And they are not able to operate because the banks have been told by the Federal Reserve Board that they cannot make such loans?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The Federal Reserve banks have ruled that these colleges are not sufficiently liquid, and they are not able to borrow money. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is the only hope they have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, this will probably be the last opportunity we have to give any relief to the private and denominational schools. There are many well-established institutions which will have to close their doors unless this amendment is adopted. In my own district there is the Salina Wesleyan University and Business College; the latter supplies business education quite largely for one part of my district. One member of the committee in opposition to this amendment stated that the pledges to the schools are unpaid. However, they are unpaid because of the depression, but the people who made those pledges made them in good faith; and as soon as the depression has passed, those pledges will be paid. There is also unpaid tuition due every one of those institutions. The students intend to repay those tuition fees, and those institutions will go on thereafter if we give them some temporary relief. Of course, the objection is going to be made that these are denominational schools and that we have a separation of church and State. That is all well and good and must be continued as a permanent policy, but this is temporary emergency legislation, to meet a time of stress. We owe a debt of gratitude to those splendid denominational schools that have furnished such fine, well-educated citizens in the past, who have become great leaders and statesmen. We should not permit those institutions to close their doors when all they need is a temporary loan from the Government. The money is bound to be repaid, and the students in those institutions will have an opportunity to complete their education.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In the denominational colleges of West Virginia at the present time most members of the faculties are actually serving with their salaries 6 months in arrears. They are actually giving service at great sacrifice, because as members of the teaching profession they continue at their posts in an hour when the Nation needs such consecrated persons to guide and direct those young men and young women who are preparing to become active members of society.

Mrs. McCARTHY. That condition is prevalent in denominational schools throughout the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTINGTON) there were—ayes 68, noes 77.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PRALL and Mr. WHITTINGTON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 68, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEIDEMAN: On page 21, after section 9, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. —. That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law at an interest rate not to exceed 1½ percent per annum, said loans to be made upon such security in the form of tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates, or other collateral, as the Board may deem adequate to secure such loans; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to purchase the tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates, or other collateral of the municipalities and governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law, for the purpose of aiding such municipalities and governmental subdivisions in maintaining the necessary and essential governmental expenditures and services."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the so-called "municipal loan amendment" upon which the subcommittee took testimony.

This amendment is approved by the Municipal Council of Mayors, an organization composed of the mayors of approximately 2,000 municipalities.

The bill upon which the original hearings were held did not contain a limitation on the interest rate which could be charged the municipalities for their refinancing needs either through short-term notes, tax-anticipation warrants, or by any other means. It was only after Mayor LaGuardia, of New York; Mayor Wamsley, of New Orleans; the mayor of Newark; and representatives of the mayors of San Francisco and various other cities said that no substantial good could come to municipalities unless there was a limitation upon the interest rate that could be charged them for these loans that such a provision was inserted.

This amendment will authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions at an interest rate not to exceed 1½ percent, said loans to be secured by tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates, or other collateral as the R.F.C. Board may deem adequate.

The passage of this bill would save many municipalities and other governmental subdivisions from bankruptcy, and would enable cities, townships, and so forth, to pay up their indebtedness and not default on their obligations, and would guarantee the payments of municipal and county bonds heretofore issued.

Take, for example, the city of Detroit, whose bonded indebtedness amounts to approximately $400,000,000. The city of Detroit has now balanced its budget and is living within its income, but it has an inherited deficit of $13,000,000 which it is carrying on its budget from year to year. In order to carry on the city's business it is necessary for the city to issue scrip bearing interest at the rate of 5 percent per annum. Each time the city has script printed there is a printing cost of about $35,000. Therefore, the yearly cost to the taxpayer to carry this scrip, which is used because the bankers claim they cannot loan the city the necessary money through short-term obligations, is $650,000 for interest and $35,000 for printing, a total of $685,000. If this amendment is passed, the R.F.C. could loan money to the city of Detroit and other governmental subdivisions and cities at the rate of 1½ percent per annum. Under this bill, the cost to the city of Detroit would be $195,000 per year, a saving of $490,000 per year. If municipalities were loaned money at the same rate as the Federal Reserve banks are loaned money, the cost would only be $68,500 per year.

The point I want to make is this: The additional payment of interest is nothing but a bonus for the bankers, paid for by the taxpayers, for which they are rendered no service, and for which they receive nothing in return.

The exorbitant interest demanded by bankers is the reason for the high taxes now levied; it is the reason why, in the name of economy, the salaries of teachers, policemen, firemen, and city employees have been generally reduced; so the divisions of government could live within their income, so they could continue to pay their tributes to the bankers.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, we shall have to get through

Think what a saving it would mean to the people of the country could the municipalities of the country avail themselves of this reduced interest rate, a saving of money which ordinarily would go to the private bankers. This amendment will accomplish something substantial. The President of the United States has said that interest payments must be pared down. You are not going to help municipalities by lending money to them at a greater interest rate or a greater premium.

The United States Government can print money for the Federal Reserve bank at a cost of from one twenty-sixth to one thirty-fourth of 1 percent, the differential being due to the fact that a few years ago bills were printed in the denomination of $10,000, whereas today they are printing bills of smaller denominations, which has slightly increased the cost. If we can finance the Federal Reserve banks at a cost of one thirtieth of 1 percent, there is no reason in the world why we cannot extend similar aid, perhaps in a somewhat lesser degree, to the cities and municipalities of the country; there is no reason in the world why we cannot help the taxpayers of the country by charging the municipalities 1½ percent, or, in other words, 50 times as much as we charge the Federal Reserve bank for printing its notes.

You have authorized loans to school districts. Let me read you what is happening in some of these cities: In Toledo, Ohio, the policemen and firemen have had their wages cut in half. In Youngstown, Ohio, the police department is receiving only one-half pay. In Dayton, Ohio, the funds are in closed banks. In Cleveland the police and fire departments are receiving only half pay for full time, street lights are cut off, and the garbage-collection force is idle.

In San Antonio, Tex., the policemen and firemen are being paid only $75 per month. Wichita Falls is in a serious condition. In Flint, Mich., the operating expenses have been cut in half.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield for a motion?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, that is not fair.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. Chairman, we shall have to get through with this bill and the next bill by tomorrow night.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we have some important amendments to offer.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I modify my motion. I move that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. May I impress upon the membership of the House that you are not giving away anything. If we eventually want to solve the problem of the welfare of municipalities, there is only one way to do it, and that is by reducing the interest cost which we have to pay to the bankers for financing. You cannot do it any other way. In the village of Lincoln Park, Mich., the policemen and firemen are on welfare and there are many other municipalities in the same condition.

We are bound to come out of this depression that we have had. We are on our way out of it now, but you cannot help the situation if you are going to pile upon these municipalities interest debt upon interest debt, which benefits only the bankers. You could use these interest savings, if necessary, to pay the school teachers, to pay the policemen and firemen, or you could use it for garbage collection and for other city purposes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. In the reading of the amendment, I did not catch what rate of interest was provided for.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. One and a half percent.

Mr. MAY. There is no law which compels a banker to make a loan. If the rate of interest to municipalities is reduced to one and a half percent, will this not result in the bankers loaning their money to somebody else?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. This is Government money. If the Government can lend its own money to the Federal Reserve banks and that private banking system at one thirtieth of 1 percent, which you gentlemen know is the rate they pay for printing the money, why can we not loan it to municipalities at fifty times that rate?

Mr. DONDERO. How much does this amendment propose to make available for loans to municipalities?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. That is left to the judgment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They may loan anything they want to, but this will not hurt the people of the United States. It will only hurt the bankers, and I suspect they are violently opposed to this amendment. They are opposed to anything which will cut down the interest rate. Interest produces nothing and consumes everything. If we buy an article for $1, 25 cents of that $1 goes for the payment of interest. Our interest bill on public and private debts amounts to three times the amount of our normal Federal Budget.

Mr. DONDERO. Other moneys would have to be appropriated for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to meet these demands.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. We have not had much trouble in that direction in this Congress.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What interest rate does the gentleman expect to charge municipalities for the lending of this money by the Federal Treasury?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. One and one half percent.

Mr. RICH. If we loan money at 1½ percent what does the Federal Government have to pay for the money?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The Federal Government should not have to pay a penny if they furnish the same kind of money that I have in my pocket, and that they issue to Federal Reserve banks. I have here a $5 bill, which was issued in 1929. I wish you would examine your money. This money has behind it Insull bonds, foreign bonds, and cats and dogs. This is national currency. All the national-currency bills do not have this on them: "Or by like deposit of other securities." They have Insull bonds, German bonds, Brazilian bonds, and so forth, deposited with the Federal Reserve banks, and they are given these brandnew United States national currency notes. This is the same kind of money and the same privilege that I propose to give to municipalities.

Mr. RICH. The Government in securing its funds must pay 3 percent, we will say, for the money that they borrow. How can they furnish money to these municipalities and pay 3 percent, unless it is fiat money?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Well, if this is fiat money or if what the gentleman states is true, we are on fiat money now.

This same kind of money issued to bankers is called sound money, but when we advocate the identical kind of money backed by the faith and credit of municipalities, the sound-money men would make you believe that it is not as good as money backed by Insull bonds, German bonds, or by mere promissory paper of an individual, or of even a foreign commercial house.

The taxpayers and citizens of cities and villages should be given the same opportunity as is given to the Federal Reserve bank and to international private bankers.

We have given the power over the issuance of money to the private bankers; this power must be restored to the people in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. It is the duty of the Government to come to the rescue of these distressed cities whose people are being oppressed by the tremendous demands of interest payments to the bankers.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEY to the Weideman amendment: Page 21, after line 10, insert a new section, as follows: "That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation"—

Mr. GOSS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understood the gentleman was offering an amendment to the amendment and not a substitute.

Mr. KENNEY. I am offering an amendment to the amendment striking out the rate of interest and adding at the end of the amendment the words:

Provided, That the aggregate of such loans shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $300,000,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. KENNEY for the Weideman amendment: Page 21, after line 10, insert a new section, to be known as "section 9a":

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law, said loans to be made upon such security, in the form of tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates, or other collateral as the Board may deem adequate to secure such loans; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to purchase the tax-anticipation warrants, short-term notes, delinquent-tax certificates, or other collateral of municipalities and governmental subdivisions organized pursuant to State law, for the purpose of aiding such municipalities and governmental subdivisions in maintaining the necessary and essential governmental expenditures and services: Provided, however, That the aggregate of such loans made direct to municipalities and other governmental subdivisions outstanding shall not at any one time exceed $300,000,000."

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: On page 21, after line 10, insert a new section, as follows:

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, out of funds of the Corporation, to any public or private hospital organized under the laws of any State upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations as are applicable in the case of loans to financial institutions specified in section 5 of such act as amended."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on February 8 I introduced a bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to hospitals. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PRALL] very kindly granted me a hearing upon this bill. Gentlemen came as far as a thousand miles to appear before the committee in support of the measure which is the amendment I am offering. The witnesses showed the subcommittee that the average value of a hospital in this country in round numbers is $900,000, and they also showed that the average outstanding indebtedness of a hospital is $300,000. Can anyone conceive of better collateral for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation advanced to a railroad with headquarters in my city $14,000,000, and they took it to New York and paid it to J. Pierpont Morgan. Not long afterward they came back and applied for another loan. I had not been home for 5 months, but I knew that this railroad was in distress financially, but despite this fact the Reconstruction Finance Corporation advanced $3,000,000 more to this railroad, and the following month it went into the hands of a receiver.

I read in this morning's paper that the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation said that 47 percent of the loans had been repaid.

My amendment specifically provides that this money shall not come out of the $300,000,000 to be advanced to industries. I do not want this to come out of the $300,000,000 that we desire to so advance. What I want to do is to give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the power to lend to hospitals the same as it has to railroads, banks, and other corporations, and the collateral it will receive will be far superior to the collateral it has already received for the loans it has advanced.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The reason the railroads are in such bad shape is because they have watered their stock so much and the interest payments on their watered stock eat them up and they cannot possibly get out of their present condition.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I may say to the gentleman that I think the country would have been better off if we had let the railroads in distress go into the hands of receivers and refinanced on a proper valuation and then they could earn an amount sufficient to meet their indebtedness. [Applause.]

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I agree with the gentleman, because, in that event, the interest would not eat them up.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I repeat, the sooner you take the watered stock out of the railroads the sooner they can earn a sufficient amount to pay the interest on their indebtedness.

I think I have received 500 telephone calls from Members of this House or their secretaries asking me the status of my bill, which indicates that the Members have heard from the hospitals in their districts and have been urged to help pass this legislation.

I know the amendment is sound, and I hope the Membership of the Committee will support it.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the gentleman's amendment apply to private hospitals and city-owned hospitals?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Private hospitals. I do not provide for city-owned hospitals. The amendment provides for private institutions that are owed millions of dollars by citizens of this country who went to the hospitals ill and could not meet their bills but who will pay as soon as they are financially able to do so. The hospitals have done their share during this depression; and as we have helped others, why should we not help them if they can submit proper collateral in support of a loan?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER of Tennessee). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TERRY of Arkansas: Page 21, line 10 after section 9, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 9 a. That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, for not exceeding 25 years, to or for the benefit of school districts duly organized pursuant to State law for the purpose of enabling such districts to reduce and/or refinance their outstanding indebtedness: Provided, That the aggregate amount of such loans shall not exceed $75,000,000. Such loans shall be secured by a pledge of such part of the revenues of such district derived from taxes or assessments heretofore or hereafter imposed pursuant to State law and/or such other assets of such district as may be acceptable to the Corporation; and such loans shall be made under such terms and conditions and in such amounts as the Corporation may prescribe. No such loan shall be made until the Corporation shall have been satisfied that an agreement has been entered into between the district and the holders of all or a major portion of its outstanding bonds or other obligations, under which the district so applying for such loan will be able to purchase or refinance all or a major portion of its bonds or other obligations at a price approved by the Corporation, and which will, in the opinion of the Corporation, result in a substantial reduction in the outstanding indebtedness of the district.

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation may set up or designate such agency in each State as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. LUCE. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCE. The Committee has already adopted an amendment relating to loans to school districts. It is difficult to determine by listening to the reading whether this amendment differs from the one adopted or not. So I raise the point of order in order to have that ascertained.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER of Tennessee). The Chair will state, with regard to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that an examination discloses that there is a substantial difference between the proposed amendment and the one adopted by the Committee some time ago. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LUCE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCE. If this amendment contradicts the other in any particular, what would be the effect of the adoption of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Naturally that would be a question of consistency on which the Chair cannot rule. That would be a matter for the Committee to determine whether it wanted to adopt an amendment that was inconsistent with some other amendment that had previously been adopted.

Mr. LUCE. What would be the effect if we adopted an amendment that was inconsistent with the other?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question for the Committee.

Mr. LUCE. Would the last action of the Committee prevail over the former action of the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot answer that. That is naturally a question of law, and the Chair cannot rule on that.

Mr. LUCE. I realize the difficulty involved, and I suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas point out whether this is consistent with the amendment previously adopted by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto has been exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial to which I referred in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14) is amended by inserting before section 6 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5c. With the approval of the President, the Corporation is authorized and directed, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, to establish or to utilize export or import trading and banking corporations in which the United States shall own, directly or indirectly, the entire beneficial interest, and to subscribe for and purchase the common and preferred stock and obligations thereof, for the purpose of aiding in financing and facilitating exports and imports between the United States and other nations or the agencies or nationals of either of them."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Goss: Page 21, line 24, after the word "them", insert "Provided, That corporations in which the United States owns or controls, directly or indirectly, the entire beneficial interest, shall report to Congress annually and include in the report a complete financial statement."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to require, under section 5 (c), which we have just read, any corporations in which the Government owns all of the stock to report to Congress annually and submit in the report a complete financial statement. So far during this whole program we have formed many corporations which are entirely or partly owned by the Government of the United States. In none of the bills have we required reports to be made annually to Congress, although these corporations have been authorized by this body. When the permanent appropriation bill was on the floor of the House, the able and distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations interrogated me in the course of the debate, and this is one of the questions which the chairman of that committee would like to have had solved. Inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations cannot offer legislation on appropriation bills, I have felt it appropriate to offer this amendment for the consideration of the House at this time, because the very subject involved in the amendment is under discussion in this section.

It seems to me ridiculous, when the Government organizes and owns all of the stock of a separate corporation, that that corporation is not required by law to make an annual report to Congress; and here is where the trouble comes in. I have discussed this matter with the distinguished Chairman of the Subcommittee on Permanent Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], and also with the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and both are in favor of the amendment, because when these subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations come back to Washington in December and start writing up the appropriation bills none of this information is available to these subcommittees. This seems to me a reasonable request, to have these reports in so that your appropriation standing committees will have the benefit of the information contained in the financial statements of these Government corporations. We come here early in December to mark up these appropriation bills. In the subcommittee on independent offices we have dozens and dozens of departments. A few days is given to each department, and it would be physically impossible to prepare those bills with the coming of Congress in January without the necessary financial statements. If the House does not order these corporations to submit annual and financial statements giving the status of their finances, it would be impossible to know whether we should or should not appropriate money.

I have offered this amendment at this time so that these corporations which, with the approval of the President in this particular section, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may acquire and may organize to do a banking business or an import and export business, will report to Congress annually each year and give a complete financial statement. I trust the House in its wisdom, to help one of the committees it itself has organized, will require this information to be given. It is bad enough to have the United States Government owning and operating these corporations, but without a proper financial statement, how can your committees of Congress function?

Mr. KVALE. Is it not merely an ordinary business procedure?

Mr. GOSS. That is all it is. I cannot conceive why the House should deny members of its committees an opportunity of having a financial statement of corporations of which the Government owns all the stock.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the committee feels there is no objection to this amendment. It feels it will be conducive to the proper handling of funds. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Beginning in line 11, page 21, strike out section 10.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, this bill which has for its main purpose the loaning of money through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to industry, or was supposed to have that for the main purpose, evidently includes a great many other purposes. One of them is to set up an export and import bank with practically no limitation as to the money that bank is to expend or whether they are to loan 100 percent on American goods that we are to ship to some foreign nation. There is apparently no restriction whatever in this section. It is improperly written and might be construed to mean anything. It might convey to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation full power to loan 100 cents on the dollar to any amount whatever to ship goods to Soviet Russia or any other nation.

I listened with much interest to the colloquy between the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and the equally distinguished gentleman in the chair with regard to their interpretation of consistency and inconsistency and where one began and the other ended. This question of setting up a bank and loaning money out of the Treasury to either sell or give away American goods is totally inconsistent with the speech made by Franklin D. Roosevelt in Ohio on August 20, 1932. In a revised version of the Alice in Wonderland story, the Governor, now President, told the Ohio Democratic platform convention:

It has been suggested that the American public was apparently elected to the role of Alice in Wonderland.

White knights had great schemes of unlimited sales in foreign markets and discounted the future 10 years ahead.

A puzzled, somewhat skeptical Alice asked the following simple question:

"What if we produce a surplus?"

"Oh, we can sell it to foreign customers."

"How can the foreigners buy it?"

"Why, we will lend them the money."

"I see", said Alice, "they will buy our surplus with our own money."

Now, that is exactly what is proposed by this administration in this section, an absolute and total repudiation of the statement of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. Mocking and decrying the Republican administration which never loaned any money to any foreign country, Candidate Roosevelt ridiculed Herbert Hoover and his policies. Now this administration, with the same man who made that speech a year ago last August, as President comes here and proposes to loan money to sell our goods to foreign nations, to be paid for with our own money. The great American game of fleecing the American taxpayer is about to reopen on another vast international scale. We have always been mulcted when it came to making loans or extending credit to foreign nations.

If we want to become the international Santa Claus of the world, the nations of the world will buy all the goods we have just as long as we put up the money; but where is that money coming from? Is it coming out of the $300,000,000 authorized in this bill, or is it coming out of the general funds already appropriated for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

No matter what we may think of Lenin, the founder of communism, he was a pretty wise man when he said "the capitalists will commit suicide for temporary profit." That is exactly what we propose to do here with only this difference, that there will be no profit at all. We just commit financial suicide for no profit whatever, not even temporary profit. If we are going to give away any money or any goods, let us give it to the American people rather than to the Communists in Russia. There are plenty of people in this country who have no means of support, who are destitute and hungry, and there is need for relief throughout the Nation. So I should like to have a vote on my amendment to strike out this section and have it brought back here in proper form and not as an unlimited proviso as it is now. I am opposed, moreover, to lending one cent of cash or credit to Soviet Russia or any other foreign nation when our people back home need every penny themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended by inserting before section 6 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5d. For the purpose of maintaining and increasing the employment of labor when credit at prevailing bank rates for the character of loans applied for is not otherwise available at banks or the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which the applicant is located, the Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any industrial or commercial business established prior to January 1, 1934. Such loans shall, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation, be adequately secured, may be made directly, or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions, or by the purchase of participations, shall have maturities not to exceed 5 years, shall be made only when deemed to offer reasonable assurance of continued or increased employment of labor, shall be made only when, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation, the borrower is solvent, shall not exceed $300,000,000 in aggregate amount at any one time outstanding, and shall be subject to such terms, conditions, and restrictions as the board of directors of the Corporation may determine. The aggregate amount of loans to any one borrower under this section shall not exceed $100,000.

"The power to make loans given herein shall terminate on January 31, 1935, or on such earlier date as the President shall by proclamation fix; but no provision of law terminating any of the functions of the Corporation shall be construed to prohibit disbursement of funds on loans and commitments, or agreements to make loans, made under this section prior to January 31, 1935, or such earlier date."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the section at the bottom of page 22 there is the following provision:

The aggregate amount of loans to any one borrower under this section shall not exceed $100,000.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Are we now considering section 11, on page 22?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. I suggest that I should like to have 2 minutes.

Mr. COX. I wish to offer an amendment and I should like to discuss it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I wish to offer an amendment, and I should like to have 5 minutes to discuss it.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, on the bottom of page 22 is the following provision:

The aggregate amount of loans to any one borrower under this section shall not exceed $100,000.

Yesterday, in some remarks I made, I stated it was my conviction that that amount was too low to be of any real help to many industries which needed help. I did not believe that any industry with a million dollars net assets, for instance, could be helped substantially by a loan of $100,000, so as to put men back to work. I realize there is the other school of thought, that because this money should be widely distributed, the amount of $100,000 should be reduced to a lower sum. The Senate bill carried $1,000,000 as the limit. I believed the limit should be $300,000 or at least $250,000, to finance many businesses that could be called "small" businesses, and I intended to offer an amendment to that effect, but because I believe there is considerable sentiment in the committee for an increased amount, and believing it will be worked out in conference, that this amount will be increased to at least $250,000, and hoping that result will occur, I do not at this time propose to offer any amendment increasing the amount, and I hope and trust that when the bill comes back it will have a larger amount as the maximum.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: On page 22, line 11, after the word "commercial", insert the words "or other."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to extend the benefits of the direct-loan provision of this bill to all business. It will be noticed that as now worded this section confines the benefits to industrial or commercial business. Because of the interpretation placed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation upon the original act, the fishing industry would be unable to get the benefits of this section, nor could the mineral business obtain the benefits of the provisions of this section of the bill.

I do not want to go into detail. I have talked this amendment over with the chairman of the subcommittee and I do not think he will object to it. If he so states I can see no necessity for taking further time of the House.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, may the amendment be read again by the Clerk?

There being no objection, the Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot agree with the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I regret very much to hear the chairman of the subcommittee make that statement.

Mr. PRALL. I wonder if the gentleman could not connect this amendment with the amendment already passed making provision for the fishing industry; could not this amendment be referred to that section? The amendment suggested would open up the section to every line of business.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman from New York agree to the amendment modified so as to make the section read, "to make loans to any industrial or commercial business which shall include the fisheries industry"?

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would remind him that the fisheries industry has already been taken care of by a previous amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. No. The amendment to which the gentleman refers was an amendment of existing provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. This provision of the measure authorizes direct loans to industry between now and January 1, 1935. The amendment to which the gentleman refers was of existing law, which will be in effect after the expiration of this provision on the 1st of January 1935. Between now and January 1, 1935, the fisheries industry could not obtain the benefit of the direct loans provided in this particular section. The purpose of my amendment is to open the benefits to the fisheries industry.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York if the modification of my amendment meets the approval of his subcommittee?

Mr. PRALL. I am sorry to advise the gentleman from Massachusetts that the committee does not feel that it cares to make any further changes in the bill; that it is opposed to any further amendments or any further changes.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Would not the fisheries business be considered a commercial business and come under the present wording of the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. It ought to, but it does not. The original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act provided for loans to agriculture, commerce, and industry, as I remember it. Certainly the fisheries business is either commerce or industry; but it has not been so construed; it has been held to be neither commerce nor industry.

Mr. DONDERO. What is it, then?

Mr. McCORMACK. I consider it either commerce or industry, preferably commerce.

Mr. DONDERO. Fishing is carried on for commercial purposes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly; but the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not so construed it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. COX. Is not the amendment the gentleman now proposes necessary to carry out the effect of the amendment already adopted with regard to the fisheries industry? Is it not necessary to make effective what has already been done?

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend is correct. It is necessary to make effective, so far as direct loans are concerned, the amendment heretofore adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment so that it will read, "to any industrial or commercial business which shall include the fisheries industry."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified; and the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 22, line 11, after the word "business", insert "which shall include the fisheries industry."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that this ties in with the action already taken by the committee with reference to the fishing activity.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. This is simply a perfecting amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely; it is a perfecting amendment and is essential if those engaged in the fisheries industry are to obtain the benefits of this section of the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEEDY: On page 22, line 8, after the word "banks", strike out "or the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which the applicant is located."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any objection to this amendment which really perfects the language of the section, and I shall ask for a vote if it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to proceed for about 2 minutes.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. PRALL. Then this portion of the section would read, "is not otherwise available at banks, the corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans."

Mr. BEEDY. Yes. In other words, I fear that many of these loans will never get as far as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if they are turned down by the Federal Reserve bank in the first instance.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say just one thing more to clear up the situation about the $300,000,000. There is no money appropriated by this bill; let us be clear about that; nor is there any mandate to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend a dollar to industry. We do say that whereas prior loans have been made on sound and adequate security, we will now open the door a little wider, and if the R.F.C. is satisfied that the loan can be made on a reasonable basis the loan may be made. But once the R.F.C. starts making such loans, it may never lend more than $300,000,000. There is no amount earmarked here; there is no amount set aside from the general funds of this Corporation; but out of their revolving fund they may start loaning where they see fit under this broader power and within their discretion, but they may never exceed $300,000,000.

I think that makes clear what has been said this afternoon about the power to loan $300,000,000 direct to industry.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. An amendment was passed this afternoon which authorized loans to school districts and other school authorities. Is it the gentleman's interpretation that the R.F.C. may loan to some city that operates its schools or is a city or other municipality precluded so that only school districts may take advantage of the amendment?

Mr. BEEDY. I may say to the gentleman that I would not want to go off half-cocked on an interpretation of that amendment.

Mr. KENNEY. It looks to me as if cities are not included, and that the city of Chicago could not get anything for the benefit of its school teachers under the amendment as passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: On page 22, line 25, after the word "exceed", strike out "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman make that 15 minutes?

Mr. STEAGALL. No.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. STEAGALL. The motion is that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, may I have your attention for a minute, and I will not take more than 1 minute. I dislike to offer any suggestion that looks to the modification of a bill that the Committee on Banking and Currency is sponsoring, but may I call your attention to the fact that members of the committee handling this legislation have time and time again on the floor during the debate made the statement that the legislation was intended to take care of the smaller industries of the country. The Senate bill authorizing loans up to $250,000,000 fixed the maximum loan to any one borrower at $1,000,000. This would mean there would be but 250 concerns accommodated under the act if each of them borrowed up to the maximum.

The House committee modified this language of the Senate bill and fixed the maximum amount that any one borrower might obtain at $100,000, and increased the sum that might be loaned under the bill from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000. Under the bill as it is written if all borrowers were accommodated or obtained loans to the maximum amount, but 3,000 concerns could be taken care of. Reducing the amount from $100,000 to $50,000, it would be possible to make maximum loans to as many as 6,000 borrowers.

Here is what I wish to direct the attention of the Membership to particularly, and that is that there is precious little, if anything, in this bill of benefit to any other than a few of the highly industrialized sections of this country. You Members coming from the outlying States of the country will find that under the bill as drawn there will be nothing for an industry in your State and the only promise of benefit to any industry in a great many of the States as carried in the bill will be to reduce the maximum loan from $100,000 to $50,000 or to some amount considerably less than $100,000.

Mr. BURNHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BURNHAM. What is the gentleman going to do with an industry that is not considered a large business but which comes within the purview of the term "smaller industry", an industry employing 300 or 400 people, which desires to expand its business? It desires to renew its equipment and perhaps employ an additional 200 or 300 people, but cannot get along with a loan of less than $500,000.

Mr. COX. Any operator with assets sufficient to secure a loan of $100,000 is not, to my mind, in the class of small industry. Large industrial operators are able to take care of themselves. Let us keep to the spirit of the proposal and give our concern to the small man.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL: Page 23, after line 7 insert a new paragraph as follows:

"SEC. 11½. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended by inserting before section 6 thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 5e. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, upon full and adequate security, for periods not in excess of 20 years, to private corporations to aid in constructing and maintaining facilities for the growing, harvesting, marketing, storing, warehousing, and/or processing of forest products: Provided, That such loans shall be made only when the board of directors of the Corporation is satisfied that the borrower will apply the proceeds of the loan only in connection with a program of reforestation under which the forest involved will be rendered self-perpetuating, and the project is recommended by the Forester of the Forest Service and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, after due study and investigation, as technically and financially sound: Provided further, That loans shall not be made for the construction of new plants if existing domestic plant capacity is substantially in excess of domestic market requirements.'"

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCREYNOLDS). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I made a motion that all debate on the section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment that forms a new section. The Chair is informed that the motion the gentleman made only applied to a section and amendments thereto. This is a new section.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. This amendment is consonant with the purposes of the bill as presented by the committee. In other words, it is to help industry.

The manufacturing and processing of forest products is an industry and no doubt comes within the purview of the act as an industry under the general provisions of the bill as they now stand.

However, we are asking in this amendment that you couple with the industry of growing, harvesting, and manufacturing of forest products a program of reforestation, so that the timber from which the products are taken will be self-perpetuating. In other words, we seek by this amendment to provide for employment not merely for the short period of time that is required to cut the standing timber at a given time but also to provide employment for all time for the community by perpetuating the growth of timber through the financial aid that this amendment offers, and for that purpose we are asking that the time of the loan be not to exceed 20 years.

This amendment is of interest to every State and community which has commercial timber and is interested in perpetuating its supply of timber. Its importance will be brought home to you when you realize the fact that within the 2 decades immediately preceding the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act we imported from outside sources timber products of greater value than the amount you appropriated under the Public Works Act, or greater than $3,300,000,000. By perpetuating our own timber supply and by perpetuating the employment necessary to the reforestation of our denuded and dwindling forests we shall at least save to our own people the employment which is given to foreign people who supply us with the timber products that are brought into this country from the outside.

Now, you may say that there is already provision for this kind of loan, and there is legislation looking toward this kind of loan, but it is absolutely unworkable, and I am so advised by the representatives of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

This amendment, favored by the United States Forester, is a workable amendment, would provide employment for many thousands of people throughout the country, would perpetuate a natural resource which would last not only for this generation but for future generations. I therefore present it for your favorable consideration.

This amendment is in the interest of conservation not only of the timber as a commercial product, but it is equally important from the standpoint of watershed conservation and from the standpoint of preventing soil erosion, and, also, as I have said, from the standpoint of furnishing employment to the various communities in which these commercial timber products may be produced. I therefore respectfully urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by adding after section 13a thereof a new section reading as follows:

"SEC. 13b. When it appears to the satisfaction of a Federal Reserve bank that an established industrial or commercial business located in its district is unable to obtain requisite financial assistance on a reasonable basis from the usual sources, the Federal Reserve bank, pursuant to authority granted by the Federal Reserve Board, may make loans to, or purchase obligations of, such business, or may make commitments with respect thereto, on a reasonable and sound basis, for the purpose of providing it with capital, but no obligation shall be acquired or commitment made hereunder with a maturity exceeding 5 years.

"Each Federal Reserve bank shall also have power to discount for, or purchase from, any bank, trust company, mortgage company, credit corporation for industry, or other financing institution operating in its district, obligations having maturities not exceeding 5 years, entered into for the purpose of obtaining capital for any such established industrial or commercial business; to make loans or advances direct to any such financing institution on the security of such obligations; and to make commitments with regard to such discount or purchase of obligations or with respect to such loans or advances on the security thereof, including commitments made in advance of the actual undertaking of such obligations. Each such financing institution shall obligate itself to the satisfaction of the Federal Reserve bank for at least 20 percent of any loss which may be sustained by such bank upon any of the obligations acquired from such financing institution, the existence and amount of any such loss to be determined in accordance with regulations of the Federal Reserve Board: Provided, That in lieu of such obligation against loss any such financing institution may advance at least 20 percent of such capital for any established industrial or commercial business without obligating itself to the Federal Reserve bank against loss on the amount advanced by the Federal Reserve bank: Provided, however, That such advances by the financing institution and the Federal Reserve bank shall be considered as one advance, and repayment shall be made pro rata under such regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe.

"The aggregate amount of loans, advances, and commitments of the Federal Reserve banks outstanding under this section at any one time, plus the amount of purchases and discounts under this section held at the same time, shall not exceed the combined surplus of the Federal Reserve banks as of July 1, 1934, and all operations of the Federal Reserve banks under this section shall be subject to such regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe.

"For the purpose of aiding the Federal Reserve banks in carrying out the provisions of this section, there is hereby established in each Federal Reserve district an industrial advisory committee, to be appointed by the Federal Reserve bank subject to the approval and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, and to be composed of not less than three nor more than five members as determined by the Federal Reserve Board. Each member of such committee shall be actively engaged in some industrial pursuit within the Federal Reserve district in which the committee is established, and each such member shall serve without compensation but shall be entitled to receive from the Federal Reserve bank of such district his necessary expenses while engaged in the business of the committee, or a per diem allowance in lieu thereof to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board. Each application for any such loan, advance, purchase, discount, or commitment shall be submitted to the appropriate committee and, after an examination by it of the business with respect to which the application is made, the application shall be transmitted to the Federal Reserve bank, together with the recommendation of the committee."

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few observations about the experience of the Government of the United States in the banking business.

One of our first experiences was playing the role of an international banker. In this experience we lent about $18,000,000,000 and then we found we could not collect that, and we whittled it down to about $11,000,000,000 and now we find that our debtors are repudiating this debt. So the great experience of Uncle Sam in international banking has cost him $18,000,000,000.

Not content with this, we wanted to try some private banking. So in the Seventy-second Congress we started the R.F.C. and said we were going to limit it to furnishing credit for banks, insurance companies, and railroad companies, and that we were simply going to take care of financial agencies which had the privilege of rediscounting paper. This has not worked out. We should have known better. In a Republic there is no way to use public credit for private purposes and limit it to certain classes. So now we find the R.F.C. branching out into all manner and forms of loans.

According to this morning's papers, the R.F.C. has made loans something like $5,500,000,000 and, in addition to that, $800,000,000 of advancements as to which there is no hope or claim of recovery. This is a total of $6,300,000,000. So through the R.F.C. the Government of the United States is today the greatest banker in the world.

In addition to this, we have also gone into the mortgage business, and we have $4,000,000,000 worth of farm and city mortgages, which is only a starter. Just a few days ago I was talking to a member of the Home Loan Board and he told me that they had applications in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation today for over $4,000,000,000 worth of loans, with a limit of $2,000,000,000 of bonds. This means that at the next session of Congress we are going to increase that limit by another $2,000,000,000 or another $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000.

As of this day, beginning with the enactment of the R.F.C. law, Uncle Sam is a banker to the tune of $10,000,000,000 in the R.F.C. and the two mortgage corporations. This is a total of $96 for each man, woman, and child in this country.

Now, this bill today makes the R.F.C. an out-and-out banker. There will be no end to the classifications added to it in another session.

Let me say this. We cannot have socialistic banking and not have socialistic business. No Congress ever enacted a more socialistic measure than this Congress when it enacted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Both political parties are to blame for the R.F.C., but the Democrats are more to blame than the Republicans for the international banking. The Republican Party with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is into the tar up to its eyes, just as deep as is the Democratic Party.

The truth is that the present overwhelming demand for public money for private purposes is to be dated back to the enactment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. That act gave the idea to the American people that every citizen had the right to thrust his personal financial troubles upon the Government. Of course, no government can long bear such a burden.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 16, after the word "Board", strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall"; and, in line 17, after the word "or" where it occurs the second time, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to put industry on its feet. The committee that wrote the provision pertaining to the Federal Reserve Bank Act, in saying what they were going to do for industry, concluded by saying "it may do it."

I do not know what you gentleman may think of it, but the only thing that will do any good for business in my section is the word "shall." It will not do them a dime's worth of good to grant the banks the privilege of saying they "may" do so-and-so. They have that privilege now, and they do not do it. My amendment proposes to write in the word "shall" instead of the word "may." You provide for an advisory committee appointed by the Federal Reserve Board, and then when you get through passing on the safety and security of the loans you leave them to the tender mercies of the Federal Reserve banks.

Since the Federal Reserve banks have had the privilege of issuing currency on bonds instead of actually loaning to private business, they would rather buy the Government bonds and issue currency than take a chance on local or private industry.

If you are in earnest about doing something for private industry, you will strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall." I remember what was said in reference to the bill passed 2 years ago in regard to loans to industry.

It never was done and it will not be done now, unless you write in there a mandatory provision instead of a permissive clause.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard criticisms of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation because, as alleged, it has made loans recklessly. We are now told and advised by my good friend from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] that unless we insert a mandatory provision requiring Federal Reserve banks to loan the funds authorized by this act, no loans will be made by the Federal Reserve banks. I am surprised at the contention of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, that Congress should pass an act requiring banks to make loans. There are only about $140,000,000 more that will be available for these loans under the provisions of the act which limits loans to the amount of the surplus of the banks as of July 1 of this year. It would be folly to require the banks to make such loans. All the Federal Reserve banks could do would be to proceed to lend on demand the amount of money on hand and then their relief activities would be terminated. It would be a case of first come first served and funds soon exhausted. The Federal Reserve banks under this section are expected to use this fund within their discretion and upon the advice of a board of business men, selected from the industrial world and from the communities from which applications will come, and to pass on applications and the merits of each borrower, and to purchase or make commitments through loaning institutions upon that basis.

The Federal Reserve officials told the committee they thought that substantial relief might be afforded by Federal Reserve banks acting in cooperation with other lending institutions by making commitments which would enable other institutions to extend necessary loans now being withheld. For the purpose of supplementing the service that may be rendered by the Federal Reserve banks, the bill has a provision authorizing applicants who are not able to secure desired accommodations from Federal Reserve banks to turn to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and have their case reviewed—reviewed as it were in an appellate court, where the application may again be passed upon. Of course, it would be an act of folly for the Congress to undertake to say that banks shall make loans. We are obliged to trust the officials of these institutions to discharge their duties. Of course, they do not always conduct their transactions and their business in a way satisfactory to many of us. I have found fault, as many of us have, with things that have happened in the past in the conduct and operation of Federal Reserve banks. But surely we can only authorize the banks to make loans. There must be exercise of discretion in each case in order that justice may be done all worthy applicants.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, my time has expired. I move that all debate upon this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 24, line 24, after the period, insert another paragraph, to read as follows:

"No salary in excess of $17,500 annually shall be paid to any person connected with any Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve Board."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that there is nothing in the bill relating to the salaries of members of the Federal Reserve Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Yesterday I wired the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank at Dallas, Tex., and asked him to furnish me at his earliest convenience the names, the position held, and the salaries drawn by each person connected with the bank and receiving more than $3,000 annually.

I also wired the same to the Federal Reserve bank in New York. I did not hear up until this morning, so I wired them again, and I have just received this reply from Dallas, Tex., from the governor of the bank there. He says:

Wrote you in reply to your telegram of yesterday advising it is policy of Reserve System for Federal Reserve Board only to give out information of the character desired and suggested that you direct your request to that Board, which has full information with respect to all the Federal Reserve banks.

Of course, I requested the Federal Reserve Board to give me that information first, and I was told by the secretary, Mr. Morrill, that they did not have the information, that they could not furnish it, that the only way that I could get this information was through each Federal Reserve bank. The Federal Reserve banks now claim that the information is here and that the Federal Reserve Board should give it out. It just goes to show in connection with this secret money system that we have what I intimated in my remarks yesterday, and that is inability to obtain this information in any way.

CREDIT OF NATION USED FREE OF CHARGE

The Federal Reserve banks use the credit of this Nation free of charge. They do not pay one penny for the use of it. They pay unlimited salaries. You do not know how much they pay. I happen to know that one or more officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York receive a salary of $50,000 annually and other benefits in addition. Last December a committee of big bankers tried to persuade the Federal Reserve Board to allow the $50,000 salary to be raised to $75,000 annually. I commend the Board for denying the request. It is the people's credit they use and it is the people's credit they spend. Yet you do not know how much it is, and it occurs to me that we should have a restriction upon the salaries. We have it as to insurance companies when they borrow money from the R.F.C. We have it on railroad-company executives when they borrow from the R.F.C.

So why should there not be restriction on Federal Reserve banks? I serve notice now that although this amendment has been held out of order, I expect to insist upon the adoption of this amendment on every bill that comes up where the amendment will be in order, and I hope it will be adopted.

We have in this country today 12 Federal Reserve banks. Each of those banks has a governmental monopoly, an exclusive monopoly on the use of the Government's credit. Those 12 banks hold two and one-half billion dollars' worth of United States Government bonds. They purchased those bonds with Government credit; and after they used the Government's credit to purchase those bonds, they continue to charge and the United States Government continues to pay interest upon those bonds which were bought with the Government's credit. Last year the Government of the United States paid those banks $37,000,000 in interest upon those bonds. The total expenses of the Federal Reserve System amounted to $29,000,000, so they made a profit of $9,000,000 right there, using the Government's credit to buy and hold Government obligations, and nothing else.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does not the gentleman particularly favor the House bill in preference to the Senate bill, because the House bill goes into Government banking more than the Senate bill?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman from Kansas should favor it, because he said public credit should not be used for private corporations. That is exactly what the Federal Reserve banks are doing. They are owned by private corporations. A Federal Reserve bank is worse than a private corporation in this—individuals own a private corporation. Individuals do not own the Federal Reserve banks, but they are owned by private corporations. Not a dollar of stock is owned by any one individual. Not a dollar of stock is owned by the Government of the United States. It is a corporation owned by private corporations. So if the gentleman is consistent in his remarks, he will certainly stand for any amendment that will restrict the power of this corporation.

Mr. McGUGIN. Oh, no; the gentleman knows the Federal Reserve bank is a quasi-public corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has expired.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were ayes 166 and noes 0.

So the substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special rule the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3487, and, pursuant to House Resolution 388, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of a Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. STOKES. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STOKES moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 21, line 11, strike out section 10, "to establish or to utilize export and import trading and banking corporations, etc."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. Only one motion to recommit is in order, and that is a general motion to recommit under the rule under which the bill was considered.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. An amendment has already been adopted by the House.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 178, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to correct section numbers.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill that has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, there exists in many of the communities of the United States a very real need and desire for loans to be made direct to industry, in order to provide working capital to deserving firms whose plants are idle or operating part time and are unable to resume or expand operations for lack of funds and cannot obtain loans from local banks and mortgage companies.

Public Works and Civil Works projects giving employment to millions of citizens, in addition to the vast sums granted to aid agriculture and refinance the mortgages on the farms and homes of the Nation are very worthy and furnish a striking contrast to the failure and refusal of the last national administration to furnish such aid. I hope that the Public Works and Federal Emergency Relief Administration programs will be continued just as long as they are needed, and I do not believe that we should at the present time seriously consider abandoning these or any of the other agencies for national recovery. However, I am firmly convinced that we should go a step farther and render it possible for the small factories throughout the Nation which are now closed to again operate, and those operating part time to run full time, and give jobs to their former employees, as will be accomplished by this legislation.

BILL H.R. 6527

Mr. Speaker, I introduced on January 8, 1934, my bill, H.R. 6527, dealing with this most important subject, which was one of the first bills to be introduced and considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency, the body of which reads as follows:

To further aid in the resumption and carrying on of normal business and industrial activities, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make direct loans to approved firms and corporations, such loans in all cases to be made under proper safeguards, and to be based on security that is adequate reasonably to insure repayment of principal and interest in full: Provided, That such loans shall be limited to providing funds for pay rolls and working capital.

The principle of my bill will be carried into effect by the bill which is now before the House, and I feel certain that the enactment into law of S. 3487 will do much to revive industry, create employment, and increase the prosperity of the American people.

LOANS TO OYSTER INDUSTRY—SCHOOL DISTRICTS

I strongly favored the amendment to render the fishing industry eligible to receive loans, as it will also qualify the oyster or shell-fish industry in southwest Washington to receive such loans. Also, I actively supported the committee amendment to provide $75,000,000 for loans to school districts, which will enable the schools to remain open and pay the delinquent salary warrants of school teachers, and it is hoped in some cases restore their salaries or at least prevent any further reduction in the same.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Speaker, as a direct and natural result of our unemployment crisis, to which I have just referred, much thought and study have properly been given to the subject of unemployment insurance.

President Roosevelt, when Governor of New York, called a conference to consider plans and systems of unemployment insurance and a joint commission was appointed by Governor Roosevelt of New York and the Governors of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, which rendered a favorable report on February 14, 1932. Since then a number of States have legislated on the subject, notably Wisconsin and Ohio, and the American Federation of Labor and numerous large employers of labor have indicated their friendly interest, and the subject is now being considered by committees of the House and Senate.

In view of this situation, I deem it in order to invite the attention of my colleagues in Congress, and our constituents, to a discussion and analysis of unemployment insurance.

WHY ADOPT UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE?

In a recent number of a magazine widely circulated among employers a prominent counsel of the largest manufacturers' organization in the United States said:

All the testimony of European authority is to the effect that unemployment insurance does not cure unemployment.

The absurdity of such a statement is as glaring as a similar statement concerning old age and old-age pensions would be. No thinking person regards old-age pensions as a cure for old age, nor widows' pensions as a way of bringing back dead husbands, nor life insurance as a means of preventing death. It is just as fallacious to hold that unemployment insurance should cure unemployment. It never was devised for that purpose. It is frankly a measure devised primarily to relieve the suffering caused by the devastations of unemployment. And, it should be added, even the best of all possible measures can relieve only a part of this suffering. There is still an enormous toll taken from society in the form of undernourished, diseased bodies, sick minds, disrupted families, vagabondage, begging, crime, lowered standards of working conditions, bitterness engendered by continuous suffering, and many other evils due to the breakdown of our economic machine, many parts of which originated in the "one-hoss shay" we used in a former and simpler age and did not scrap as we scrap the parts of physical machines when they are out of date.

WHAT IS A DOLE?

Probably the most effective weapon of attack on proposals to establish unemployment insurance for the involuntarily unemployed in this country has been to use a word which seems to have the unique power of causing as many chills to play up and down the spines of the timid as certain other words burdened with connotations they ill deserve. That word is "dole." It is used, as a rule, wholly incorrectly, sometimes by persons who maliciously and purposely wish to damn unemployment insurance by that small but powerful word and at other times by the stupid and ill-informed who are addicted to expressing opinions concerning things of which they know little or nothing.

Now, a dole is supposedly something a person gets for nothing, something involving no system, no contract nor responsibility declared or undeclared. In plain and simple terms, it is a charitable gift. When we have said that we have described what has been going on in every corner of the United States during this entire depression and every preceding depression. We have been doling out rations, money, gifts of one kind or another to the unemployed, and while we have been doling we have been shuddering at what we are determined to call "Britain's dole."

In Great Britain a recent investigation has shown no less than 35.2 percent of the persons continually insured during the 7¼ years between 1923 and 1930 had drawn no benefit at all and another 38 percent had received benefit less than 10 percent of the time, despite an average unemployment rate of 13 percent, which sometimes mounted as high as 20 percent.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Great Britain was the first country to establish a national compulsory unemployment-insurance scheme. As we have said, it was the outgrowth of dissatisfaction with existing ways of relieving distress due to unemployment. At present 18 countries have adopted insurance to meet this hazard. Approximately 35,000,000 workers are covered by compulsory insurance and 3,000,000 by voluntary insurance, including trade-union benefits supplemented by government subsidies. Next to the British scheme in size and importance is the German scheme, established in 1927. It, too, has been in operation during a period of unprecedented depression and has consequently been subject to extraordinary buffeting. It comprises not only a set-up for ordinary unemployment insurance, but also for emergency or extended unemployment benefits and for welfare support, or what we would term "relief." Benefits are graduated according to average earnings of 11 wage groups. The duration of standard benefit is 20 weeks, except in the case of insured persons with means who are entitled to benefit only during 36 days.

The most significant thing about all the unemployment-insurance schemes in other countries is that authoritative opinion is invariably favorable to the principle. By authoritative opinion one does not mean the passenger on a trans-Atlantic boat who regales his fellow passengers with the story of someone who knew personally someone else who knew personally a lazy chap who preferred the dole to a job. Like any other institution subject to controversial attack, such as marriage, prohibition, and the eternally recurring question of the delinquencies of the latest generation, unemployment insurance suffers from the human tendency to generalize. Only by an honest and objective review of factual material and authoritative opinion based on wide experience and impartial judgment can any fair estimate be made. For example, one may find superficial magazine articles based on a running acquaintanceship with the British unemployment-insurance scheme, which may or may not be adversely critical. But no one who has made a thorough and exhaustive study of it, comparing it with far less satisfactory contemporary methods of relieving unemployment in the United States, has condemned the principle of unemployment insurance.

ATTITUDES AND ACTION IN THE UNITED STATES

Various objections to introducing unemployment insurance in the United States have been made. In the first place we have played up our individualism, our ability to handle social and economic questions without Government intervention. After the President's Unemployment Conference in 1921 some hope was entertained that numbers of industrialists would establish unemployment reserve funds to cover their workers, just as they provided funds to cover the depreciation of plant and machinery during times of depression. But what happened? In spite of all the interest aroused and the wide discussion of the subject, the mountain labored and brought forth a mouse. A few of the more progressive employers did get plans under way, but all during the years when we were living high employers were more absorbed in expanding productive capacity and planning for an endless prosperity than in providently laying aside funds to protect their workers from being drenched by the rain which history should have demonstrated to them always falls sooner or later in the kind of artificial climate we have invented.

As a result, less than 100,000 workmen are covered by these voluntary plans. Some of them have vanished in the present depression, unable as individual plans to stand up in a situation demanding industry-wide if not Nation-wide and world-wide treatment. A negligible number of workers are also provided for by varyingly generous schemes out of their trade-union funds and others out of funds provided by employers and trade union cooperating. But probably not over 200,000 workers are provided for by all these schemes and as time goes on and the depression eats into their funds it is obvious that these individual plans can have little effect on the problem of providing relief for 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 unemployed. It is worth noting that progressive employers who have tried to work plans of their own acknowledge the necessity of compulsory legislation if there is to be any adequate coverage of workers. They realize that our anachronous American philosophy of individualism cannot possibly meet the situation.

Another monkey wrench thrown into the machinery for compelling provision by legislation for the involuntarily unemployed has been the opposition of the rank and file of manufacturers. Sometimes perhaps a hall of fame will be erected to honor manufacturers who have supported any measure enacted for the purpose of improving the lot of the worker. Robert Owen would have a place there. So would the Earl of Shaftesbury and a few other brave men who dared to desert their backward and selfish fellow employers in the interest of the worker. Today, too, one finds occasionally an employer who is sufficiently interested in protecting workers from exploitation to appear in legislative councils in the interest of shortening hours of labor or to support some other piece of labor legislation which would not undermine and destroy society as his associates claim.

And so, down through the dismal history of the exploitation of workers during the industrial revolution of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries and this even more terrifying industrial revolution of the twentieth century, one finds the rank and file of employers organizing opposition to every form of legislation enacted for the protection of workers. The first labor law in England provided that children under 9 years of age could not work over 12 hours a day in cotton mills and it was considered viciously radical and subversive by the majority of employers. Each generation looks at such acts passed in another age as obviously good, but certain groups of manufacturers almost automatically rise up in protest against any legislative measure proposed today in the interest of improving the status of the worker. So it is to be expected that employers in general will oppose the introduction of unemployment insurance just as they opposed the introduction of accident compensation. It is also to be expected that while their opposition will be troublesome, it will only retard and not prevent the introduction of unemployment insurance just as in the past it only retarded the law preventing children under 9 from working over 12 hours a day.

Until lately the American Federation of Labor has opposed unemployment insurance, but at the annual conference of November 1932, this policy was reversed. This is a significant step, for the Gompers tradition was against legal provision of anything which a militant trade-unionism could provide for itself by its own weapons. In both England and America a considerable number of trade-unionists would like to have the unions provide all the plums to their members such as health benefits, out-of-work benefits, and old-age pensions. But in the face of an increasingly complex and interdependent economic structure they are fast yielding to the inevitable.

In spite of our vaunted though anachronous individualism, and in spite of organized and unorganized opposition, unemployment insurance will probably be introduced in some of the States of the United States in the near future. Three years of acute depression, with all the attendant suffering that it implies, the demand for larger and larger relief funds, the growing dissatisfaction with the uncertainty of obtaining these funds and with the ways of distributing them will serve to convert the obstructionists and to awaken the apathetic. It did not take very long to break down opposition to Federal relief. Some of the States which were loudest in their opposition are now gladly reaching out their hands to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In like manner opposition to unemployment insurance will fall away as present sources of relief are exhausted and already unsatisfactory methods of testing for need become, in the face of overwhelming numbers, less and less adequate.

The first State to propose unemployment insurance legislation was Massachusetts, in 1916. Since then numerous bills have been proposed in various States. In the special session of 1931 the Wisconsin Legislature enacted an unemployment insurance law with the provision that it should become conditionally compulsory July 1, 1933. If by June 1, 1933, the employers (many of whom had declared they would prefer to establish their own voluntary plans) of not less than 175,000 employees have voluntarily established plans complying with standards prescribed by the State, the compulsory system will not take effect. Otherwise it will go into effect on July 1, 1933. This plan provides for contributions by employers only.

Following a conference on unemployment insurance, called by Governor Roosevelt, a commission was appointed by the Governors of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania to report on compulsory unemployment reserves. On February 14, 1932, they reported in favor of establishing such reserves. In the Seventy-second Congress Senator Wagner introduced bills providing for the encouragement of compulsory legislation by States. This was to take the form of permitting employers to deduct a portion of the payments they made to reserve funds when paying their income and corporation taxes. Bills based on the interstate report advocating compulsory reserves are being introduced in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, and several far western States. The California bill is very similar. This ought to insure a large degree of uniformity in State legislation.

The Ohio bill, introduced in the State legislature in January 1933, provides for a reserve fund to be maintained by contributions from the employer amounting to 2 percent of his total pay roll and from employees amounting to 1 percent of their weekly earnings. Provision is made for reducing or increasing employer contributions according to the merit rating established by experience. This is in accordance with industrial accident compensation laws and is designed to distribute the cost of insurance more equitably and provide incentive for stabilizing work and preventing unemployment as far as such a relatively unimportant factor in employment stabilization can aid in prevention. Benefits are not to be paid until after a 3 weeks' waiting period and will amount to 50 percent of the unemployed man's normal weekly wages, not to exceed $15 a week. Benefits would be payable not more than 16 weeks and only after a worker had paid in contributions for 26 weeks during the 12 months preceding his application, or for a period of 40 weeks in the 2 preceding years. Administration is provided for by the appointment of an unemployment-insurance commission of three members by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the senate. The chief groups excluded from coverage are interstate commerce employees, farmers, farm laborers, teachers, Government employees, employers and workers in small establishments of less than three employees, short-time casual laborers, and nonmanual workers with annual salaries of $2,000 or more.

In the Ohio plan the State is to assume the function of trustee, with no financial liability because the framers of the bill are strongly convinced that one of the most important functions of unemployment insurance is to relieve taxpayers of the burden of supporting able-bodied unemployed. This is a far cry from the demand of the Independent Labor Party of Great Britain which insists the state should bear the entire burden of caring for able-bodied unemployed. The Ohio Unemployed Insurance Commission stresses the place of charity as distinct from unemployment insurance in dealing with the unemployed, stating that "insurance is designed to help those who are normally self-supporting to remain self-supporting" and assigning workers who are physically and mentally deficient, certain classes of casual workers, and others who do not properly fall in the insurance categories to charity, public and private. The commission points to the fact that by relieving the charities of the burden of caring for the majority of unemployed workers (who are victims of industrial depression and should therefore not be recipients of charity) they are making it possible "for case workers to deal much more efficiently and effectively with the unemployable and partially employable."

Aside from the difficulties in regard to interstate competition, other problems in relation to unemployment insurance are given an exaggerated importance. For example, opponents insist that unemployment cannot possibly be an insurable risk. This seems to be an academic red herring even though its parentage cannot be traced to academic cloisters. It is unquestionable that the incidence of the risk shows great variations, that unpredictably severe depressions furnish serious hazards and that it is impossible to calculate rates on an actuarially sound basis from experiential data. Even if we acknowledge the truth in these observations it should be observed that life, health, and other forms of insurance first had to be tried in order to make the data available with which actuarially sound modifications could from time to time be made. Moreover, there is a large body of employment and unemployment data now available which would enable some States, at least, to compute fairly accurately the amount of contributions necessary in order to provide a given amount in benefits, with restrictions as to preliminary employment in the State, waiting period, duration of benefit, and other requirements for the receipt of benefit.

It should be kept in mind that rates must be based on experience in many industries, with large groups of persons and over a long period of time, in order to cover years of depression as well as prosperity. When one considers the unpredictability of epidemics, hurricanes, floods, earthquakes, and other disasters against which insurance may be taken, it seems within reason to plan for unemployment insurance. It is primarily a matter of how much a group is willing to pay for benefits of a stipulated amount over a limited period of time. As we have pointed out, Great Britain discovered she could not afford to pay for the extention of benefits to the chronically unemployed, just as many persons who carry accident insurance cannot afford to pay the higher premium for total disability.

HOW SHOULD AN UNEMPLOYMENT FUND BE SUPPORTED?

As to the question of how an unemployment-insurance fund should be supported, there is variance of opinion. In European countries the state usually makes some contribution, although in Germany employers and workers support the standard benefit fund and the government, national and local, supports only emergency benefit funds. In Great Britain, as we have said, the state contributes to the insurance fund and pays the entire cost of the transitional benefit cases. The Wisconsin act provides for contributions by employers only, which is also the recommendation of the Interstate Commission, composed of the representatives of the Governors of the States of New York, Ohio, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Connecticut. The Ohio bill provides for contributions from employees as well as employers. The bill introduced in Illinois in January 1933 provides for contributions from employers only, unless employees wish to have greater benefits by making voluntary contributions. Much may be said both for and against contributions from workers. Employees contribute in all foreign countries which have unemployment-insurance funds.

The chief argument for such contributions is a psychological one, the claim being that workers have more self-respect when they help to pay for what they get. Against contributions by the workers we find it stated that such payments eventually come from industry and are passed on to the consumer, and that it is more practicable to avoid deductions from the pay envelops. There is much to be said for Federal contributions in the United States not only to spur the States to action but also in order to insure some degree of Federal supervision in the interest of uniformity and excellence of practice on the ground that our Federal Government is in most cases more capable than our various and overlapping local governments.

Whether individual plants or groups of plants in an industry should have separate funds or whether there should be a general pooled fund depends on how much importance is attached to the possibility of using unemployment insurance premiums to bring pressure to bear on employers to regularize employment. Considering the far greater significance of such losses as are incurred by idle plant and equipment and the retraining of personnel, unemployment-insurance premiums would probably play a small part. While it might be worth while to add this small factor, it may be even more important to observe sound insurance practice in spreading risk over as wide a number of contributors as possible, thus building up greater financial strength. The final report of the recent Royal Commission report states,

> It is, in our view, impracticable to provide within the scheme for differentiation between industries in the rates of contributions or rates of benefit or periods of benefit because of a risk of unemployment above or below the average. * * * So long as the scheme itself does not encourage unsound organization and undesirable methods of working, we are of the opinion that the best way of dealing with an industry which fails * * * to make satisfactory arrangements for the engagement and employment of labor, is by measures outside unemployment insurance.

It would be quite possible in any case, when sufficient data are accumulated through experience, to arrange for lower premiums for industries with good employment records and, indeed, even for individual employers. It is interesting to note that the reason Great Britain discarded the provision for refunding a portion of the employer's contribution, according to his rating for keeping workers steadily at work throughout the year, as "partly because the actual financial effect was an appreciable additional charge rather than a saving to the fund, and partly because the administration of the provision was found to be both difficult and expensive."

The Interstate Commission on Unemployment Insurance claims that by starting with an attack on persistent unemployment and irregularity of operation by providing for compulsory reserves by individual firms and groups of employers, it should prove possible to assess responsibility for avoidable irregularity. With this information secured they regard the possibility of formulating a more comprehensive plan more practicable than at present. This Commission claims that the pooling of reserves may result in perpetuating careless management and, consequently, in a failure to spur employers to regularize employment. On the other hand, the Ohio Commission on Unemployment Insurance recommends a merit-rating system, following the example of workmen's compensation, but insists that separate reserve funds maintained by individual employers for their own employees conflict with the principle that sound insurance depends on covering the widest possible spread of persons subject to the risk insured against. The new Mastick bill, proposed in the New York State Senate January 4, 1933, gives the commissioner of labor power to compel pooling either by industry or by locality. This makes it possible to arrange to cover the irregular trades such as the building and garment trades as well as small communities where a pooled fund would have obvious advantages.

The question of coverage is largely one of protecting those workers least able to provide for their own protection; although some persons favor stretching the coverage to include fairly prosperous groups in order to spread the risk. It would probably be advisable to exclude nonmanual workers earning more than $2,500 to $3,000 a year, Government employees, and other fairly well-assured steadiness of income, self-employers, and certain other groups. Prof. Paul H. Douglas thinks it probably both advisable and necessary for political and administrative reasons to exclude agricultural and domestic workers, although certain compromises might be effected when unemployment insurance was well under way and other difficulties had been ironed out. The question of seasonal and part-time workers, age limitations, and other matters would be decided in the light of the wealth of experience with such groups in other countries.

In the limited scope of these remarks, it is impossible to go into the question of the amount of contributions and benefits for different age groups, the very important part an adequate system of Federal employment exchanges plays in testing for willingness to work and in serving as clearing houses for employers and workers, and numerous other matters related to unemployment insurance. There are numbers of details to be considered by any group contemplating the installation of this form of insurance. But once it was set up, with a system of relief to supplement it, the machinery would be there and improvements and modifications could be effected from time to time. The importance of having a definite, businesslike system, understood by employers and workers alike, would do away with much of the uncertainty and chaos resulting from our American dole giving.

CONCLUSION

Once more let us emphasize the importance of regarding unemployment insurance as a method, the best possible method developed thus far, of relieving and not curing unemployment. Efforts to devise a more smoothly coordinated economic organization, geared more adequately to a civilization which has long since burned its pioneer bridges behind it, must be unremitting. But, as we have indicated, it may be a considerable length of time before such efforts are effective. In the meantime we must seek better ways of handling relief of the unemployed than our present highly unsatisfactory ones; unsatisfactory from the point of view of expense, of proving the worthiness of applicants, and of preserving the self-respect and morale of the involuntarily unemployed. The concensus of authoritative opinion in countries which have adopted compulsory unemployment insurance is in favor of retaining it. The United States needs to supplant its chaotic dole giving by a dignified system of unemployment insurance to insure the payment of benefits as a matter of right and justice to involuntarily unemployed workers for a stipulated period of time. A supplementary system of relief on the basis of need would prevent the insurance system from carrying burdens too heavy for it. The majority of workers, however, would be carried by the insurance scheme and case-work treatment would be applied only to persons not qualified for benefits under this scheme. It goes without saying that if case work were necessary in only the second- and third-line trenches and not in the first-line trenches it could be far more effectively applied than under the present overwhelming circumstances. As a matter of simple justice, "It is possible", says Mr. R. H. Tawney, the British economist, "for a society, by making the fullest possible provision for common needs, to abolish, if it pleases, the most crushing of the disabilities, and the most odious of the privileges which drive a chasm across it."

I am indebted to Miss Mary B. Gilson, the author of Unemployment Insurance in Great Britain, which has recently been published as one of the series of public policy pamphlets issued by the University of Chicago Press, for many of the facts which I have presented.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, the subject of direct loans to industry has been one carefully and thoroughly considered by the committee, and comes as the result of a wide-spread demand by industry throughout the entire land. Some industries have been badly crippled because of the depression that started with us in full force in the spring of 1930. Many of these industries have undertaken to hold their capital and organization intact, and in most cases have exhibited a fine spirit of loyalty to the country by keeping their men employed in far too many instances when they lost money by so doing.

It looks like a better day for labor and for capital now employed in these small industries that they are to have access to the resources of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and likewise the Federal Reserve banks. I call your attention to the two outstanding provisions of S. 3487. The object of this legislation, in the main, is to broaden the powers of R.F.C., to facilitate exports and imports; to empower it to extend credit; to maintain and increase employment; to assist in refinancing and reducing of existing commercial and industrial burdens; and to further facilitate the extension of credit to small industrial concerns; and to amend the Federal Reserve Act relative to loans to industry proposed by Federal Reserve banks.

There are two important provisions in this measure, the first of which is to make accessible to industry the resources of R.F.C. We are all of the impression that the R.F.C. is a division of the Government set up to meet an emergency, the length of its life to be determined by Congress from time to time. One of the first things we did in this session was to extend the functions of the organization to July 1, 1935, and undoubtedly these extensions will be authorized from time to time as long as the emergency exists, and they accomplish faithfully what was intended when the organization was authorized. However, there is a feeling that this is temporary and as industry is a vital part of our national well-being, a more permanent form of financing is desirable.

To this end for the first time the resources of the Federal Reserve banks, through the use of their surplus, have been opened to make direct loans to industrial enterprises, and I have a feeling that this will meet a situation so much desired that it will become a permanent part of the Federal Reserve System.

This bill provides for the establishment of 12 intermediary-credit banks, corresponding with the districts where the Reserve banks are now established. The bill further provides for the selection of a board, which shall not be composed of less than three or more than five outstanding business men who are to act in an advisory capacity in conjunction with the Reserve Board with reference to loans. It is hoped and expected that when the capital structure of the banks of the country has been rebuilt, they will again be in position to grant credit to worthy institutions upon adequate and sufficient security.

It is not the wish of any Member of Congress to usurp the functions of the banks of the country. We want them to continue to serve us, but we have reached a place where we do not want them to be our masters. There is no community so small that it does not have need of financial assistance. Farmers must be financed. Merchants must be financed. Every type of industrial program will depend on this assistance, and I for one feel that by authorizing the Federal Reserve System to take over this part of the banking function at this time is of outstanding importance and value, and in the end will be so regarded by a large majority of the people, even the banking institutions themselves.

We learn by experience, and if all the poorly secured loans made in the past had been handled in a conservative and constructive manner for the benefit of the people, rather than profit of unscrupulous individuals, we certainly would not have had to pass through the terrible ordeal such as the last 3 years have been. We are making progress. Money is flowing back into the channels of trade. Men are being reemployed; and when we are in position to put labor to work, then it will be that the farmer's product can be sold; and whenever the farmer begins to make money and comes back into the market as a purchaser we will then be far out on the road to recovery and we can look back upon it as a time of hardship by profitable experience.

The committee has labored long and faithfully and held hours of hearings with some of the outstanding industrialists as witnesses before the committee. Newspapers of the land have given the project their support in a very sympathetic and helpful manner.

I am indebted to an article in a recent issue of the Washington Post for the fine résumé of the past year's activities in the administration. I have taken the liberty in a former article to quote some of their statements of this progress.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, that no more constructive piece of legislation has been passed, and I compliment you for the very fine spirit in which this legislation has been put on the statute books.

Mr. WALDRON. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure (S. 3487) is a moral victory for those of us who more than a year ago insisted that direct financial aid to industry through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was the surest means of providing jobs and accelerating economic recovery.

The workers of my district, the largest industrial section in Pennsylvania, want jobs and not charity. Steady employment and an assured income each week, in my opinion, can only be obtained by opening the mills and starting the wheels of industry humming.

In the last session of Congress, when the President's recovery program was being finally enacted, I pointed out to the country that the one flaw in the plan was the failure to provide the proper credit facilities for commerce and industry. Millions of dollars of credit had been pumped into insurance companies, banks, mortgage companies, and other lending institutions, without any assurance that these agencies, in turn, would use it to put new life into industry. The farmer, the home owner, the destitute, and others were provided for, but the job-producing employer in our large cities and industrial centers was left completely out, and he was supposed to "take up the slack" of jobs when the relief appropriations were exhausted.

As it became apparent that nothing was going to be done about it by the administration, I introduced three bills providing for direct loans to industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Efforts to secure administration support of these measures failed and Congress adjourned without taking any action thereon.

What followed is history. The credit intended to accelerate recovery through the established lending agencies did not reach the job-producing industries. Much of it was frozen in bank vaults, which, while making those institutions 100-percent liquid, was not loaned out to business. Mortgages were impossible to obtain, even on the best security. Needed working capital was denied, except upon a greatly reduced basis, and then only for impractical periods of time. Concerns operating under the N.R.A. with increased labor costs and overhead, were compelled to go along on a hand-to-mouth basis rather than to move forward with steady precision. Instead of more jobs, there frequently were less jobs, and when the C.W.A. and other relief agencies ceased activities recently through exhaustion of appropriations, there was not enough industrial jobs available to absorb even a small percentage of those released. We are now facing another unemployment situation which, it is hoped and believed, this form of relief will overcome and would certainly have overcome, in large part, had it been applied last year.

Those of us who saw this situation last June sought by every honorable means to change the administration's viewpoint. Some recognition of my proposal was given last fall when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation attempted to set up mortgage-loan companies to meet the pressing need for credit fo rthe smaller concerns. The plan has not furnished the relief needed. The agitation, however, has continued throughout this session of Congress, and administration approval has been finally won for the measure now before you. I am happy to have been a leader in this fight for the thousands of men and women in our industrial sections who abhor charity and seek only the right to toil at their regular trades at a fair living wage.

After I introduced my bills last year, thousands of letters poured into my office, and to the Committee on Banking and Currency, from all over the United States urging that some action be taken upon my proposal. The story these letters told of the heroic struggle of industry to hold its ground or to advance with consequent benefits to unemployed workers and the communities served is too long to be repeated.

However, a few instances from my own district will illustrate the situation. One concern whose credit rating, under normal conditions, was in excess of $100,000 had that rating reduced to $10,000 by the banks with whom they formerly did business. Several others complained that loans were called when such loans represented only a fractional part of the present value of buildings and equipment which was free and clear of encumbrance. One manufacturer with orders ahead that would furnish employment for 60 people was compelled to operate with only 7 employees when his working capital was tied up in a closed bank and additional capital could not be obtained from any other lending agency. Another large firm, with realty worth several million dollars and not one penny against its property, shut its doors, throwing several hundred people out of employment for a period of several months, because it could not obtain a small loan to carry on in the off-season. Scores of other instances of hardships these business men have encountered in their effort to obtain credit might be cited.

In September last I directed a letter to a selected list of several hundred firms in my district embracing every class of business and manufacturing, all of whom were in existence and doing business on January 1, 1933. Replies were not received from all of them, but of this group 25 firms had closed their doors, throwing out of employment approximately 1,300 people. A few weeks ago I covered the same group, and at this date find that 31 additional firms are out of existence, involving nearly 800 employees. These concerns ranged in size from the small merchant, employing two or three people, to a factory, employing 678 persons.

If my bill, H.R. 6124, had received the recognition to which it was entitled at the last session of Congress, many of these concerns would be flourishing today and there would be some 2,100 fewer mechanics and artisans walking the streets of Philadelphia seeking employment.

The pending measure, S. 3487, recognizes the justice and fairness of my proposal and should be the means of pumping credit into industry, which will provide jobs for many who are now unemployed. While it does not go as far as my bill would have gone in the matter of the amount that may be loaned to an individual borrower, I shall vote for it, since I believe it will greatly assist the small concerns and open up employment. It is a step which should have been taken a year ago.

Briefly, S. 3487 provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans to any industrial or commercial business established prior to January 1, 1934, when credit at prevailing bank rates for loans of such type is not available at banks or the Federal Reserve bank of the district of the applicant. The loans may be made directly, or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions, or by the purchase of participations, for a period of not to exceed 5 years. The sum of $300,000,000 is authorized to be used for making these loans, but the amount of a loan that may be made to any one individual borrower is limited to $100,000 by the House provision.

While I believe that $100,000 loaned to any single borrower will take care of the needs of the smaller business concerns, many of whom will not require anything like that amount, I do not believe it is sufficient to take care of the larger concerns needing working capital, who should be given the same consideration and who are capable of putting back to work a much larger number of employees. There are some long-established concerns to whom a million dollars or more might be loaned without any great risk. The bill as it came from the Senate had a limitation of $1,000,000 in the case of any individual borrower, which limitation I believe would be more nearly proper. The measure I introduced (H.R. 6124) would have permitted much larger loans if the security furnished came within the scope of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

I shall vote for the House proposal, however, in order to speed the legislation to an early conference in the hope that the conferees will increase this limitation to the individual borrower to somewhere near the amount contained in the Senate bill.

I congratulate the administration and its leaders in the House and Senate for their final recognition of the merits of this job-providing proposal, which I consider one of the most important steps in economic recovery taken at this session of Congress.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, the meat of the pending bill is that provision that provides for furnishing loans to industry. There are other sections in the bill that are amendatory of existing laws, the object of such amendments being to make the said legislation more workable.

All the Members of this House can testify to the fact that there is a wide demand throughout this country for governmental assistance to industry. Up to the time of the present industrial crisis, and even since the first dark days of October 1929, the banks had rendered the necessary assistance to industry and business in general. But since the banking holiday in March 1933, industries in this country, and particularly small industries, have been suffering for a lack of legitimate financial assistance.

It was hoped that the bill passed at the last session of Congress providing for the guaranty of bank deposits would make it possible for the banks of the country to be more liberal in taking care of the demands of industry, but it does not seem that such legislation has in any substantial way liberalized the loan practice of the banks.

Some of the bankers claim—in fact, many of them—that they are prohibited from making loans they would like to make because of the rigid rules laid down by bank examiners. Whether or not this statement is universally true I do not know, but I do know that many of the bankers in my district state that they would gladly make more loans to industry if the bank examiners would not compel them to write off such loans.

This bill provides for two methods for affording financial relief to industry. One provision enlarges the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by permitting that organization to make loans to industry or commercial institutions where the needed credit cannot be obtained from the usual channels or through the banks.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been attempting in a mild way to administer to the financial demands of small industries by making loans to the extent of about $17,000,000. These loans have not been made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation direct to the industries, but through financial set-ups in the different communities. These financial set-ups or corporations are subject to local control. They require a small initial capital, and to this organization the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned that amount I have referred to.

Under this new legislation the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be at liberty to loan $300,000,000. These loans are to run for a period of not to exceed 5 years. A survey has recently been made by the Federal Reserve System to find out just how much money could be used along the lines proposed in this bill, and it was estimated that there was a loaning demand for about $600,000,000 to provide the necessary financial assistance to industry, which at the present time cannot obtain relief from banking or money institutions.

This bill also provides that the Federal Reserve banks may loan to industry a sum up to the amount of their surplus. All the Federal Reserve banks have at the present time surpluses of about $150,000,000. Of course, the Federal Reserve banks may also render greater assistance to industry by making commitments and extending loans already in existence.

This bill contemplates that the Federal Reserve Board and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will cooperate with the banks in meeting this demand for working funds, particularly by the small industries of the country. For instance, both of these institutions may propose to the banks that if the banks will advance 50 percent of the amount of money needed by an industry they will advance the balance. In other words, these two Government agencies may join with the banks in going 50–50 on needed industrial loans.

Of course, these advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board are not to be in the nature of gifts to industry. The loans are required by this bill to be adequately secured and only such institutions that show vitality and life, and a possibility of working out the required loan, will be granted assistance from either one of these lending bodies.

That some industries are to be disappointed in their attempts to receive working loans under the terms of this bill is to be expected. Many industries seeking such loans have been turned down already by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and there will probably be others disappointed in receiving loans after this bill, broadening the loaning power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and putting the Federal Reserve Banks into the loaning picture, has become a law.

It is hoped, however, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks will be as liberal as possible in executing this law.

Our factories must be kept running in order that men may be employed. There can be no doubt at all but that the lack of finances has closed many factories since the breaking of the panic; factories that had orders in sight and factories that in the old days had ample banking credit.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has done a good work. It has loaned out about $5,000,000,000 to banks, insurance companies, railways, and other corporations. Of this sum, $1,500,000,000 has already been paid back, and it is expected that in the final wind-up the Corporation will not lose $1; that is, the interest received on the loans will more than pay the operating expenses of the Corporation and such losses as it may suffer.

Many banks, industries, and corporations have been saved by loans received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and it is hoped that through the passage of this bill many industries will be saved and the army of the unemployed reduced.

BANK-DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the majority leader, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. The next order of business on the calendar of the majority leader is the immediate consideration of the extension of the bank-deposit insurance bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency. A rule providing for the consideration of this bill has been presented, but in order to expedite consideration of the bill I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to consider the bill under the terms of the rule we expected to present, and ask that the resolution be read.

House Resolution 303

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3025, a bill to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be adopted.

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution we have just adopted provides for a motion to recommit. Earlier this afternoon we were working under a rule identical with this one which provided " without intervening motion except one motion to recommit."

Will the Chair kindly explain how this provision can be made of any value in the application of the rule under which we are about to proceed?

The SPEAKER. The rule just adopted grants the usual permission to offer a motion to recommit; but when the House has adopted a substitute for the entire bill, a motion to recommit with instructions would not be in order.

Mr. LUCE. What type of motion would be in order?

The SPEAKER. Just a simple motion to recommit.

REVISION OF AIR-MAIL LAWS

Mr. MEAD submitted the conference report on the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the request contained in the resolution of the Senate of May 22, 1934 (the House of Representatives concurring therein), I return herewith House bill No. 3673, entitled "An act to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 23, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 19, the Clerk of the House will enroll the bill with the changes contained in the concurrent resolution.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—LOTTIE BRYANT STEEL (H.DOC. NO. 381)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill no. 177, entitled "An act for the relief of Lottie Bryant Steel."

The bill provides for the payment to Mrs. Steel, remarried widow of Col. Montgomery Bryant, a former officer of the United States Army, of $105.07, as pension at the rate of $8 per month from May 22, 1902, to the date of her remarriage, June 26, 1903.

Colonel Bryant's death occurred June 17, 1901, some 7 years after he was placed on the retired list of the Army, and was not the result of service-connected disability. Having been on the retired list at the time of his death, no pension was allowable under the laws then in force applying to pensions for service only.

It was not until May 1, 1920, approximately 19 years later, that the law was amended so as to have permitted of the allowance from that date of a service pension to Colonel Bryant's widow. Prior to that time, however, she had remarried, which remarriage precluded the application to her of the benefits of the amendatory law.

Should the beneficiary of this bill again become a widow, she will have a pensionable status under the law of May 1, 1920. I fail to see any justification for the proposal to now place her in a pensionable status for a period during which the law then in force precluded the allowance of pension.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1934.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RADIO MESSAGES

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain radio addresses I have delivered during the session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio messages broadcast over Station KASA, Elk City, Okla.:

THE PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY PARTY AND THE DOUGHTON DINNER

(Feb. 6, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans and friends who are listening in over radio broadcasting Station KASA at Elk City, much time has elapsed since so many persons of the Nation have assembled on one evening to celebrate an occasion as one week ago when more than a million joined in what was estimated to be about 6,000 receptions of the country to assist in raising funds for the Warm Springs (Ga.) Foundation for Crippled Children by helping President Roosevelt to enjoy his fifty-second birthday.

Thirty-five thousand dollars was raised in Washington alone, and I can think of no finer purpose than the will to aid these helpless little crippled children.

Like a super-Hollywood opening, but with more flare and color and greater names than Hollywood could ever possibly muster, the birthday reception, which surpassed anything that Washington remembers, included 10 tables which sold for $1,000 each. One of these tables was purchased by an anonymous contributor, who sent $1,000 for a table for 10 World War heroes—5 from each of two hospitals in Washington—and they were there, engulfed in happiness.

Another sent $2,500 just as a contribution. It didn't get anybody in, not even himself. And a third sent $1,000 to purchase tickets for 500 marines, soldiers, and sailors.

In Washington it was like New Year's Eve, in a way, but a little more thoughtful. President Roosevelt was 52, but the city seemed to be just turned 21—joyous in new strength.

Meanwhile the White House was completely snowed under by the tens of thousands of telegrams, cablegrams, and letters which poured in to wish the President a happy birthday. They came from every nook and cranny of the United States, from the crowded tenements of New York to the lone prospector in Montana. They came from every foreign country—from Americans away from home and from aliens who watched his mighty task from afar. It was the most spontaneous outburst of good will the White House has ever seen.

Ray Baker, chairman of arrangements for the Washington celebration, who brought Mrs. Roosevelt, the lovely wife of the President, to the party, and who comes from Idaho, spent much of his early days in the mine, and at night by the aid of a coal-oil lamp studied law. He was finally admitted to the bar, held a number of offices in connection with his party, one of which was being Director of the Mint, and was selected by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson to write the life of President Wilson, selecting much of his material from the private files of the President.

Will Rogers, the radio star and humorist, who comes from our own State, was master of ceremonies, and arrived late for the President's party, maybe due to the informal reception which he held in the Speaker's reception room at the Capitol earlier during the afternoon, at which time he was assisted by his lovely daughter, Mary, and in which reception all members of the Oklahoma delegation participated. Many others also came in to listen to the cornfield logic by Will, which, when all summed up, seems to be a lot of hooie, but in fact is a lot of good common horse sense.

As a climax to the eventful day, during which time the good will of a nation swept like a rising tide through the White House, over the greatest hook-up in radio history President Roosevelt spoke to the Nation at large and particularly to the millions attending the 6,000 banquets to raise funds for the crippled children. This great leader perhaps understands the need for such a fund for the children more than many others, and as a message of hope for the sufferers from infantile paralysis, from which President Roosevelt recovered before he entered the White House, it is the President's confident belief that medical science will be able to do for the victims of infantile paralysis what it has already done to abate tuberculosis, eliminate yellow fever, and to restrict the ravages of many other human ills.

We are indeed glad that the citizens of southwestern Oklahoma took part in this celebration by holding banquets in various towns on this evening for the purpose of participating in the worthy cause. We were very sorry that it was not possible for us to be in attendance for at least one of the banquets in the district in that section of Oklahoma, but we did the next best thing by notifying a representative in each of the 11 counties of the district to purchase a ticket for us for each of the entertainments held there, since we were especially glad to be able to take part with the citizens of the home State and President Roosevelt in such a worthy cause as helping to raise funds for the crippled children.

One of the nicest dinners that it has been my privilege to attend for a long time was the one given to the Ways and Means Committee a few nights ago by Chairman DOUGHTON, of North Carolina, at which all of the members of the committee were present. This organization has a history that is not known to many of our citizens, as when George Washington, as Commander in Chief of the Continental Army was successful in defeating the British and our form of government took shape, then it was that it became necessary for the first Congress, serving under George Washington, our first President, to find some way to obtain the means necessary to carry on the affairs of the Government. It is generally conceded that President Washington recommended to the leaders who were cooperating with him that such a committee be formed, and from that date until the present time this organization has looked after the principal duties and legislation necessary for the maintenance of the Government.

For a long time this was the only committee in the House of Representatives; however, as the Nation increased in population and activity, in connection with all kinds of business, it became necessary to create other committees, such as Banking and Currency, Army, and Navy, and the various others that are now functioning. There may be some of you who do not know that all bills for the purpose of raising revenue always originate from this source, and when it is taken into consideration that there will be a turn-over this year of more than $10,000,000,000, one can have a conception of the duties of such a committee.

At present, sessions are being held morning and afternoon for the purpose of shaping into form the numerous provisions that have been worked out by a subcommittee that spent the greater portion of the summer and fall here in Washington preparing amendments to the present laws in the hope that those who are termed "big business" and have been escaping paying their proper proportion of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of this Government may be compelled to do so in the future. I do not know of anything that is more disgusting to our people than the realization that Mr. Mitchell, with the National City Bank; Mr. Wiggins, with the Chase National Bank; and J. P. Morgan made profits that amounted to many millions of dollars and were able to escape paying a thin dime in the way of income tax. When it is taken into consideration that J. P. Morgan Co. collected many millions of dollars in the way of dividends on noninterest taxpaying Government securities, and in addition purchasing a yacht that cost more than $2,000,000, one can realize the necessity of changing the law so as to compel every kind of a money tyrant to do his part.

I was especially pleased at this dinner when the newest Member, Hon. CLAUDE FULLER, who was recently elected, stated that his assignment to this committee was considered such a high honor by the people of Arkansas that over 500 individuals wrote him letters of congratulation. Inasmuch as the State of Oklahoma has never before had representation in this organization, I feel very proud that our district has a voice on many matters concerning certain vital questions of importance to the citizens of the Nation.

To give you some idea of the interest that is taken in any provision that relates to a commodity, recently when publicity was given to the fact that the committee had adopted an amendment levying a tax of 5 cents per pound on coconut and sesame oil, which is a product of a seed imported from the Orient that contains many of the properties that can be substituted for butterfat, it brought the largest response of individual telegrams that I have ever seen in all my public life. During one whole day Western Union and Postal messenger boys averaged bringing a telegram to my office every 2 minutes, presenting arguments both for and against the inclusion of such a provision in the new revenue act.

Chairman DOUGHTON is a Scotchman from North Carolina; his ancestors were pioneers of this great State. He is by temperament and other splendid qualifications exceptionally well fitted to look after the duties of his position, and at this dinner expressions of affection came from members of both parties in testifying as to the high regard and esteem in which he is held. One member in speaking on this occasion made bold the statement that no member of this committee had ever voluntarily retired from the same unless he was promoted to some higher position. Vice President Garner, Speaker Henry T. Rainey, and Judge Green, of the Federal court, served as members of this committee prior to their elevation to more important assignments. In addition, this committee makes up all the other committees of the House of Representatives, and for this reason is conceded to have more power than any other in Congress.

We are highly gratified because of the support given to President Roosevelt's money bill and believe it will furnish the means of stabilizing finance in the majority of countries of the world. We know that the taking over of all the Nation's gold will provide a metal base to issue at least $15,000,000,000 in currency, and this will be a sufficient amount to keep the old ship of state on an even keel, also to provide funds to give employment to every deserving person until normal conditions are restored.

The former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ogden Mills, who belonged to the Mellon group, took a pot shot at President Roosevelt's policy in his recent speech delivered in Kansas. It did not even create a ripple of interest here in the Capital. It was timed to happen just before the birthday receptions held in honor of the President; however, no one to speak of paid any attention to his wild utterings, as he was one of President Hoover's trusted lieutenants, and everyone knows that enough damage was done by this crowd to pretty nearly destroy the Nation. I am proud of the honor of cooperating with President Roosevelt, for if there ever was a man who has given his efforts on behalf of our citizens it is the man who is now in the White House.

LEGISLATION

(Feb. 13, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, again I wish to express my appreciation to station KASA for the opportunity of providing my friends information relative to what has been going on in Washington. I realize that some of you do not have the opportunity of keeping up with the various events and happenings that are published in our splendid daily and weekly papers, and it is for this reason I often refer to items that have been given some publicity.

I am sure that our friends—and especially those who reside in Ellis, Dewey, Roger Mills, and other counties in the northern part of the district—have been made happy because of the passage of a bill in the House which will make livestock a basic commodity and will set aside $200,000,000 to be used for this purpose. This subject was brought to my attention by a number of our prominent citizens when I was at home during the holidays, and I promised to contact the Honorable MARVIN JONES, who is chairman of the committee that has jurisdiction over this subject and who is also our neighbor on the west, being the Representative from the panhandle district of Texas, and if possible, secure the passage of such a bill. I am sure that there are many listening in who are acquainted with this most distinguished gentleman, and by the way I am pleased to say that there never was a finer or more conscientious worker in behalf of those whom he represents. This bill reads as follows:

"To amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the word 'hogs' a comma and the word 'cattle.'

"SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, as follows:

"'To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to finance, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, surplus reductions and production adjustments with respect to the dairy- and beef-cattle industries, and to make advance rental and/or benefit payments with respect thereto, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000,000.'"

Another measure that will be of special interest and benefit to many of those residing in the district is the one which provides the sum of $35,000,000 to be used as a fund to loan the farmers during the year 1934 for the purpose of planting, fallowing, and cultivation of crops; also providing $1,000,000 which shall be available to purchase feed for livestock in drought- and storm-stricken areas. The aggregate amount of a loan, under the provisions of this act, is $250; however, it contains a provision that the President of the United States, in an emergency, may make loans without regard to limitations under such regulations as he may prescribe.

It has been a privilege on my part to support these most meritorious bills, and I am proud that the administration has sponsored such measures, which shows conclusively that we have in the White House a President who is just as much interested in agriculture and the production of livestock as he is in any other occupation.

There has been a lot of activity in Washington during the past week with respect to the production of oil. Oil is today one of the largest industries in the Nation, and there are more people directly or indirectly affected by oil and its byproducts than any other commodity. The total value of the production of oil and its byproducts in 1933 amounted to approximately $540,000,000. In addition there are 20 States that are now producing this commodity. A number of unethical citizens have deliberately violated the State and Federal regulations with respect to running hot oil, and this situation resulted in breaking the market until crude oil sold as low as 10 cents per barrel. This situation brought about disaster to a large number of independent producers, to the extent that some were forced out of business and others were taken over by larger companies, who are always able to weather a storm.

One of the first acts of President Roosevelt was to put into effect an oil code which came under the jurisdiction of Secretary Ickes, thus providing the kind of regulations which it was thought would stop the production of illegal oil and at the same time maintain a fair price so that the industry could survive. Soon after I returned to Washington, numerous complaints came to me regarding illegal production; and being interested in protecting the citizens who have tried to obey the law, I prepared and introduced a bill which if enacted into a law would cause all of those who had obtained profits from the sale of illegal oil to pay an income tax and at the same time provide an informers' fee of 50 percent of the penalty named in the legislation.

I never dreamed that when this bill went into the legislative hopper that it would cause the Secretary of the Interior to immediately make an investigation, which, according to the information brought to me, showed that in the east Texas field practically no attention was being paid to proration orders, the existing law that relates to interstate shipment, or the provision of the code; and the amount of illegal oil being produced daily amounted to between forty and seventy-five thousand barrels, which means that over 2,000,000 barrels per month were being thrown on the market and sold at a price practically one-half of the posted price.

The Secretary of the Interior came before the Ways and Means Committee and said that unless something was done to provide new legislation to stop the production of illegal oil, the code jurisdiction would break down and become ineffective within 2 weeks. I have secured the adoption of two amendments to the existing law, which will in the future provide a tax of 0.1 of 1 cent per barrel on all crude products derived from wells and 0.1 of 1 cent per barrel on crude delivered to the refineries, in order that sufficient funds may be had to enforce necessary regulations in connection with the production of illegal oil.

It was my privilege to represent the administration in presenting these three amendments to the committee, and, of course, oil being one of the major industries of the State of Oklahoma, I am very happy that the committee has accepted these amendments relative to this subject.

Another contributing effect of this legislation is that it will cause many of those who have interests in royalty and have been defrauded in the past, to have a means of finding out the amount of oil that has been run from the properties in which they are interested, thus giving them sufficient data to collect that which is rightfully due.

Evidence was presented to the committee which showed that at one time from 85 to 100 train loads of illegal oil was daily being shipped north from the east Texas field, and when it is taken into consideration that a very large amount of this oil went into Canada, unless an informative fee was provided for the purpose of identifying those who were engaged in this illegal transaction, several million dollars would be lost to the Government, that should have been collected by the Income Tax Bureau.

The east Texas field is so large, it is beyond the comprehension of a person unless he actually visits the same, and it is said that there are over 300,000 miles of various kinds of pipe lines and that the practice in the past has been to attach many kinds of bypasses, so that meter readings would not give any correct information as to the amount produced or run from a well. The committee realizes that as long as illegally produced oil is sold at a price far below the posted figure, it will soon demoralize the industry to the extent that many of the little fellows will have to go out of business, thus giving the larger companies an opportunity to form the kind of monopolies that would bring about a much higher price for the different products that are sold to the public.

The recent law that was passed by the Ways and Means Committee, prohibiting oil from going into interstate shipments, has been violated by causing such oil to go into refineries where a very small amount was skimmed from the top and then the crude was reshipped as processed oil to refineries outside of the State, where it was rerefined and practically the same amount of gasoline recovered. It is now believed that with the inclusion of the three amendments which have been accepted by the committee, the industry will be far more healthy in the future, and that all of those who are obeying the law will receive the protection to which they are entitled.

The person who introduced English sparrows into this country many years ago, nearly every day in Washington is given severe criticism because these little fellows have increased in number until they have become the worst nuisance of anything the National Capital has to combat. When the sun goes down great droves of these little fellows come from distances of 50 miles or more and practically cover the public buildings, and because the Humane Society will not allow them to be killed, every kind of a plan that one can think of has been used for the purpose of scaring them away. At first the C.W.A. workers were employed to climb trees and ring cow bells. The birds simply abandoned the place where all of this noise was going on and then returned after the racket ceased. The War Department was then called on to furnish gases, in the hope that the birds, when detecting the odor, would depart for other sections.

This proved ineffective, as the birds would abandon the premises until the wind had blown the gasses away and then give the onlookers the ha-ha. Then stuffed hawks and owls were borrowed from the museum and perched at various commanding positions, but this did no good; then, as a last resort, a shotgun squadron was called out, and under orders from the commanding officer volleys of blanks were fired at intervals, but the birds soon learned that they had nothing to fear from the noises.

This brings me to the thought that there are a large number of our splendid citizens interested in the subject of wild life and the disaster caused by predatory animals, and I expect to devote my next radio message, which will be delivered at this same hour 1 week hence, to this subject. I feel sure that all of the Waltonites and others who are interested in this particular subject will be interested in listening to an excellent experience had by the present New Mexico secretary of the game commission on a lion hunt, and a method that is now being used in a portion of this congressional district with respect to a study of prairie chickens and the way they are trapped for propagation purposes.

WILD LIFE

(Feb. 27, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, each week at this hour I am endeavoring to bring to the listeners a message from Washington dealing with questions of interest.

I am sure that everyone realizes that game, birds, fish, and animals, are real factors in the daily lives of millions of our people. This being true, Congress has provided annual appropriations to be used in the enforcing of protective laws and the setting aside of game preserves. The importance of this subject can be realized when it is taken into consideration that 6,000,000 adults take out licenses annually, which amount to over $7,000,000, and it is estimated that hunters and fishermen spend approximately $650,000,000 per year in participating in this class of pastime. The Izaak Walton League has been performing a most wonderful work in this connection. Members of this organization are to be commended for their fine efforts to provide the kind of protection that will make possible the preservation of our wild life in their natural haunts.

Since 1929 game refuges have been established as follows: Montana, 26,669 acres; Oklahoma, 19,985 acres; California, 15,733 acres; Nevada, 17,902 acres; South Carolina, 33,000 acres; Florida, 21,076 acres; Colorado, 5,500 acres; North Carolina, 20,000 acres; Nebraska, 39,000 acres; Wyoming, 3,318 acres; North Dakota, 4,000 acres; New York, 2,274 acres; Maryland, 10,000 acres.

And, in addition, public-spirited citizens in Louisiana and other States have purchased large areas which have been turned over to the State authorities for this purpose. It will also be interesting to know that the waters adjacent to the District of Columbia are fully protected for this purpose. If this kind of action had not been taken, wild life of many kinds would have long since disappeared. One of the most interesting publications relating to this subject that is free for distribution is Farmers' Bulletin No. 1719, and should any of my constituents desire a copy of the same, I shall be glad to take care of your requests for such publication.

It will be interesting to know that many of our most prominent citizens are interested in the propagation of various kinds of wild life. Some time ago I had a conversation with Speaker RAINEY concerning this subject, and he advised me that the most profitable enterprise conducted on his farm in Illinois was the growing of deer. He stated that on one occasion he received an order from Mr. Phillips, a prominent oil producer in Oklahoma, for a solid carload of such animals, and that the same were shipped by express to him without the loss of a single animal. In addition, there are hundreds of small-game farms located throughout the Nation for the purpose of supplying suitable stock to the various States that are interested in this subject.

When one visits the Capital, should he take a trip down the Potomac River, he will see small clusters of evergreens located every few miles apart, which are duck blinds built for the purpose of being rented to those who desire to participate in this kind of sport. The law does not allow a person to shoot ducks or geese from the bank or in an open boat, and unless the game swims within shooting distance of such blinds, they have the kind of protection that prevents extermination.

I do not know of any place in the Nation where more different kinds of wild fowls can be seen than on the Potomac River, and for the first time in many years the species of the heron family known as "egrets" took up their abode in this river during the past summer. These are big white birds whose feathers were formerly used to adorn ladies' hats, and because of the enormous demand, had it not been for a Federal law, this species of wild life would have been completely destroyed. The Potomac River is likewise a fisherman's paradise, as at different seasons both salt- and fresh-water fish can be caught in large quantities, thus giving to the residents of the District of Columbia a pastime that is enjoyed by many.

At present Congress is appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 per year for the purpose of supervising the many refuges and the carrying on of the work of propagation. The Bureau of Fisheries looks after the distribution of various kinds of fish suitable for the waters in every State in the Union, and anyone desiring a supply for their own ponds can obtain the same by writing to their Representative in Congress.

I am sure our listeners will be pleased to know that wild life is increasing; however, there are natural enemies in the way of predatory animals that have to be fought every day in the year, which take a terrible toll of certain kinds of domestic animals, as well as other kinds of game. Recently the Members of Congress who were interested in the discussion of such animals met in the Capitol for the purpose of bringing pressure on the Budget officer in order to secure funds to be used for this purpose.

It is estimated that the damage caused by wolves and coyotes in Oklahoma alone amounts to $250,000 per year. We have in the Wichita Forest Reserve 450 deer, 316 buffalo, and 325 elk. The calves of these animals are more subjected to destruction by wolves than any other kind of animal, and the Representatives in Congress who are interested in this subject by taking united action were able to get the appropriation restored which has been available for several years to provide this kind of aid. The Biological Department has caught 2,130 wolves in our State, and they report 356 destroyed in the year 1933. When it is taken into consideration that there are many other States affected by this kind of evil, one can realize the necessity of carrying on the kind of work that will protect the livestock industry and the many kinds of wild life.

I promised to give an account of a lion hunt, in which the participant was the present secretary of the Game Commission of New Mexico. At the time of the hunt he was employed by the owner of the Vermejo Park, a large area in northern New Mexico, to kill the animals that were destroying young deer, elk, and wild turkeys. In his letter to me he calls attention to some of his accomplishments along this line, with a statement that the United States Biological Survey estimates that a lion will kill 50 deer per year. He further estimates that the work he has accomplished in this connection has been worth $20,000 to the owner of the large tract of land where he was employed. Continuing, this is his story:

"I have had several exciting chases after lions and some that you would have enjoyed"—I am not so sure about this, as lions are one kind of animal that I had an experience with when a young lad that has made a lasting impression on my memory, but I will not go into detail as the recollection is not very pleasant. "Recently, late one afternoon my dogs hit the trail of five lions and together they followed them to their kill, which was a buck deer, very much like the one you shot some time ago. The dogs treed one after another of these lions until I had killed four of them. In treeing the fourth one the dogs separated on the track and one followed the fifth, while the two other dogs treed the fourth. After killing the fourth lion I was unable to find the dog, though I was certain he had treed his lion. I stayed until after dark hunting him, but had to give it up and came on in to the ranch. The dog returned sometime that night.

"The next morning the foreman said, 'I heard your dog barking, indicating that he had treed, for 2 hours about sundown and he appeared to be back of the clubhouse, not over 1 mile away.' I went back next day and sure enough he had treed his lion within a mile of this place, and for the reason no one went to him, the poor worn-out dog quit and went home.

"We again took the track and, after a hard chase through rough country, the lion, a medium-sized female, took to a tree, a scrub piñon bush not over 4 feet off the ground, but overlooking a 20-foot ledge of rock, and in this position was holding her own against the dogs when I came in sight, about 200 yards away. When I saw them I whistled encouragement, as I usually do, to let the dogs know I am coming; then my young Airedale jumped into the bush and grabbed the lion by the under jaw and then the fur began to fly, as the lion dug her claws into the dog's face and head and with a backhand stroke threw him end-over-end down over the cliff. No sooner had the dog hit the ground than he came back around the rocks, bleeding and crippled, but looking for more.

"At this instance the old dog, who has been in dozens of lion fights, did exactly the same thing and received the identical treatment. I rushed up a bit closer and finished the lion with a lucky shot in the heart, and, had I not hastened to shoot, I think those two fool dogs would have fed themselves to the lion until nothing was left of them. They were so bruised and badly injured as to be unable to hunt for a week.

"I have found that these hunting dogs, particularly Airedales, once they are warmed up in a chase, will go in on anything regardless of the odds against them, thus showing remarkable courage, but often unwise."

The gentleman who gave this account is one of the finest sportsmen in the Nation. Alone, for a long time, he rode the mountain ranges with his Airedale dogs chasing and destroying the kind of animals that cause more disaster to wild life than any other that I know of. I am sure that his efforts have resulted in great good to that section of the country.

For the reason our congressional district has more prairie chickens than is to be found in any other section of the United States, and the same are now being caught for propagation purposes, I am sure you will be interested in knowing something about that kind of bird. It is said that they cannot live with civilization, and I am indebted to Mr. Verne Davidson, of Ellis County, for a very interesting report, relative to the method he now uses in catching and branding this very wild species of game. Recently he was kind enough to give me the following facts in this connection:

"Our method of catching prairie chickens is a unique one developed by rangers of our own State game department over a period of 7 or 8 years, by use of fish seines. The original start, I understand, was made by carrying an unaltered fish net about 6 feet wide and 40 feet long between two horses and the capture made by dropping the net on the young birds while feeding. This was soon followed by using cars, which proved to be far less disturbing to the birds and enabled the trappers to cover more territory. I am sorry that I cannot give an accurate report on the numbers and trials encountered in those first attempts. Needless to mention, it was many days work to obtain a few for exhibition at the State fair.

"Observations made during these trips into the chicken country eventually led to some changes in the make-up of the net and the manner of setting it for the catch. I have had personal charge of all the work for the past 3 years, when the principles had been laid out in a general way as we pursue them now. I had helped the 2 years before in company with the usual set of expert net men who had developed the method to establish a record of chickens caught by 4 rangers, using 3 cars, during the whole month of August and several days in September. The past season the capture of 73 in 1 day with the use of 1 car and 2 men will apprise you of the fact that refinements are nearly perfect.

"Today's method and procedure is this: Using a 60-foot (1-inch mesh) seine, 10 feet in width, with a stout rope along the bottom on which iron stakes are spaced about 6 feet and an opening in the center 3 feet in diameter to which a hoop net several feet long is attached. In the heat of the day, when temperatures are above 100 degrees in the shade, the old mother hen and her chicks find relief bathing in the dust under the shade of the taller oak clumps, which we call 'oak motts' or 'shinnery clumps.' Those in which the cattle are in the habit of using as fly bushes present the ideal set-up for chicken as well as trapper, as there is plenty of dust and less leafy obstruction to the cooling breeze for the chickens, and visibility is best for the trapper. Moreover, the taller bush provides the best place on which to erect the net which is soon to be aflutter with impatient birds seeking their usual method of exit—by wing.

"When the covey is located, the car is usually only 5 or 10 yards away, and by careful maneuvering, the birds may be driven from under their favorite portion of the 'mott' to the opposite side or completely away if the mott is too small. Then the net is set over the dusting holes with the sides shaping in a V and the upper edge brought over as much as possible to form a roof. The roof need be little more than an eave—something to prevent the birds walking up the net and flying on over. The bottom is staked to the ground after being stretched tight. There are technicalities to watch, too numerous to mention. When the net is set, the men climb aboard their car and make a wide circle calculated to allow the birds to return to their dust baths. If the mott were large and the sun quite hot, all will be in the edge and return easily. If it is small, they are out in the shorter cover with mouth open and panting greatly. Providing they are not too old, all will slowly walk back until all are again coveyed together."

I realize that the information given you today is a little different from that which you have been accustomed to hearing over the radio; however, diversification is often the spice of life, and next week I intend to report as to the progress Congress is making under the leadership of our great President, who is interested in the welfare of all of our citizens.

LEGISLATION

(Mar. 6, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, each week at this hour I am permitted, through the courtesy of Station KASA, to bring you a message from the Nation's Capital. I want to express my thanks to our friends who have been good enough to write me during the past week, and especially those who were kind enough to send me a copy of a local Elk City newspaper which contains an article that attempts to take me to task by one of your local citizens, on the grounds that I have been delivering appointments to a number of deserving citizens in western Oklahoma; also that only my friends are the ones who participated. Although his charges are not exactly correct, I am glad to plead guilty to helping our friends, and I am proud to say that the seventh congressional district has probably received as many appointments as any other district in the State of Oklahoma; also that as long as I am in public life I am going to continue to help every person who cooperates with me in the best manner possible. This week I announced the appointment of 11 ex-service men—1 from each county in the district—who are to be given employment in connection with surveying parties in several of the Rocky Mountain States. This means that one from each county in the district will have this opportunity, and it so happens that Mr. Fay Nichols, of Elk City, is one of those who is to receive this consideration. It is too bad that my lovely friend, who takes me to task for appointing quite a number to responsible positions, did not mention the ex-service men who will be given appointments. Anyhow, I had rather be criticized for being able to do something that is meritorious from every standpoint than to have it said, "He did not have any power or prestige in the city of Washington."

Some very interesting things have been happening in Washington lately. The Senate of the United States has been busily engaged in discussing the pay cut and an amendment relating to the Spanish-American War veterans and others. The bill as passed in this body restores certain items, which in aggregate means that the bill has added increases to the extent of about $340,000,000.

I wish it were possible to obtain a sufficient amount of money to enable every class to obtain the amount of assistance it is entitled to. However, there is one fact that must not be overlooked, and that is, the money has to be obtained from some source, and whenever the load is piled on so heavy that it breaks the wagon down, then everyone will be denied receiving anything. I am sure that every person in the District realizes that this is a fact and can have some conception of the great problem that is confronting the United States Congress and the President at this very critical hour.

One hundred and forty-five signers have been added to the petition on the Speaker's desk, which causes the so-called "bonus measure" to be taken away from the committee and brought straight to the House for consideration. This measure, in my opinion, will pass the House; however, the Senate has already gone on record as being against it; therefore, unless the proposal is limited in some way, a point of order may lie against the bill in the Senate, and this means that no action could be taken during this session, regardless of how the House Members voted.

I was down at the White House a few days ago, and, in discussing this subject with a person who is very close to the President, I suggested that there should be presented some method whereby the needy could be paid that which they are entitled to receive, and that I felt sure those who now have a good salary or a certain amount of property would not complain if a compromise were effected on this basis. So I am making a guess that such a plan may be worked out; anyhow, one-half of a loaf is always better than no loaf at all.

The air-mail scandal still grows and nearly every day some person becomes enmeshed in the net that is gradually being drawn together for the purpose of uncovering all of the various individuals who dealt the cards under the table in order that a few persons could have air-mail contracts without competitive bidding. What a terrible thing it is for a young man, like the son of ex-Senator Smoot, to have his reputation blasted into tiny bits by being forced to admit that when he was working for his father he was charging different companies, one of them being an air-mail corporation, large fees for using his influence in order to bring about certain results.

Then there is the question of up-to-date planes that is receiving a lot of discussion in both branches of the service. It is claimed that there have been no competitive bids on planes to be purchased for a number of years, and it has been shown that profits up to 40 percent have been made by some of these companies. This gives rise to the charge that these planes were not up to date, they lacked some of the material necessities in the way of up-to-date appliances in order to reach the highest point of efficiency, and the implication has been made that this fact has made the planes incapable of performing the same kind of service as others, thus causing the death of a number of Army pilots during the time when the weather was bad. Also, this thought is in the minds of a great many: If the Army aircraft is not able to function during stormy weather, what would happen to this Nation in case we were involved in a war? Both committees of Congress claim that they are going to the bottom of all this in order to find out who has been responsible for all of the irregularities in the years gone by.

A grand jury in Washington has been in session for several weeks in order to hear witnesses who have inside information relative to some of the alleged crooked contracts made for the purchase of uniforms and supplies in the War Department, and men high up are being asked to waive immunity from prosecution and come before the same. Would it not be a fine thing if there could be found some way to keep crooks from using unethical methods and mulcting the Treasury of the United States?

I made a speech last week calling attention to the big corporations that have obtained their capital by selling stock to the public which in a little while stops paying dividends; however, the officials of such companies instead of reducing their salaries continue to pay themselves bonuses and in some cases the same amounts to as much as $200,000 per year. This is nothing but inside robbery. I have a lot more respect for "Pretty Boy" Floyd, or any other bank robber who only takes a few thousand dollars from time to time, than I have for one of these inside robbers who often takes as much as $100,000 at a time from his stockholders by being able to collect enough proxies to keep himself in office. Therefore, I am proud that it was my privilege to vote for a bill that brought all of this information out to the front during the last few days; thus showing to the public, the companies, and giving the names of the officers who have defaulted and cheated their stockholders in order to enrich themselves. There is one thing sure; if there is not enough money available in the Treasury to take care of our ex-service men, Spanish-American War veterans, and to provide employment for the meritorious, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee I will glady vote to confiscate all salaries in excess of $25,000, and in addition raise the inheritance and other forms of taxation sufficiently high to keep the Budget balanced.

I am highly pleased that President Roosevelt has announced that he intends to provide means sufficient to take care of certain classes of the unemployed after May 1. We were somewhat disturbed because we were afraid that normal industry would not furnish a sufficient amount of employment to take care of those who are now working under the Civil Works Administration; however, the President announced that the $950,000,000 recently appropriated would be a sufficient amount to carry on activities until normal recovery will be able to absorb those who are entitled to be given employment.

We are glad to announce that money conditions are still improving. Very few people have a proper conception of what Uncle Sam was up against when the various nations of the world began to slide off the gold standard—and what would have been the effect if some radical changes had not taken place with respect to our currency system. At this minute every nation in the world is engaged in financial warfare; they realize that if their currency can be made a little cheaper than some other countries that it will cause such nations to have an advantage when it comes to commerce. This being true, several nations—before the United States went off the gold standard—actually formed a money pool for the purpose of keeping the American dollar so high that their nation would have a distinct advantage in selling manufactured articles for export trade, and because of this situation our export trade was practically ruined when President Roosevelt came into power, and it is to his credit that he had the nerve to smash right between the eyes all of these so-called "international bankers" who were enriching themselves at the expense of our Nation by putting into effect the kind of a monetary plan that has been very beneficial.

One of the Washington papers this week called attention to the fact that a banker said to a customer who desired to deposit $1,000, "We can't take your money. We have to limit the deposits of some of our customers." Another institution will not take deposits unless a person is able to furnish good references. Actually, the guarantee bank law which our district started years ago, has brought about flushed conditions when it comes to cash, which is absolutely beyond the comprehension of an ordinary man. Our dollar has been cheapened about 40 percent, yet I have not felt it in any way, and I don't believe that many of our citizens will ever know that this sleight-of-hand performance has been brought about. In fact, most of the difference in price has been absorbed by the middleman; anyhow, it has produced a wonderful effect, causing this Nation now to have nearly as much gold as all of the other nations of the world, and there is one thing certain, we are going to come out of this bad situation in some way that will be satisfactory to practically all of our people.

AIRCRAFT

(Mar. 13, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, again through the courtesy of Station KASA at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

The subject of aircraft is once more uppermost in the minds of not only the lawmakers but a large number of the citizens of the United States. An investigation has been started by the grand jury of the District of Columbia for the purpose of finding out something about the methods of letting contracts for planes by the War Department, and the names of men high up in different avocations of life have been mentioned in connection with influence favorable to various organizations. One of the most startling disclosures was the fact that 3 days prior to the close of Mr. Hoover's administration the sum of $5,000,000 was expended for Army plane parts, causing to be purchased large supplies that were not needed, and it is evident that the reason for such haste was to give to certain favorites this class of business, prior to the time the authority would go to others. The House of Representatives has passed a resolution authorizing an expenditure of $10,000 to be used in defraying expenses in connection with the payment of witnesses and to employ an attorney to make an investigation of all Army purchases. The statement was made on the floor of the House that the Military Affairs Committee, under the leadership of Chairman McSWAIN, had promised that they would go to the bottom of this matter and "let the chips fall where they may."

In this connection, it will be remembered that profits as high as 50 percent were made by many of those who were favored with contracts to supply airplanes; and it is the thought of many of our people that when profits of this kind are made that oftentimes the finished planes do not embody all of the latest improvements, and that this may be the cause of a large number of Army pilots losing their lives when called on to perform service in carrying the mail under strenuous conditions. Similar charges have been lodged against naval contracts, and the standing committee in charge of legislation of this kind attempted to hold a hearing for the purpose of finding out why some concerns were paid profits as high as 50 percent.

Some of you may not know it, but the Naval Affairs Committee is a partial organization, as nearly every member represents some district that either has a navy yard, shipbuilding plant, or some other activity owned and controlled by the Navy. Therefore, unless a Member is willing to carry out the wishes of the admirals who determine the policies of the Navy, his district is liable to be punished by having such activities withdrawn or smothered to death, and, of course, such Members feel obligated to do just exactly what they are told to do. This hearing was conducted under the leadership of the same Member of Congress who was appointed by the authority of a special House resolution to investigate the Akron disaster. Speaker RAINEY appointed me to serve on that committee, but when I found out that two of the members were connected with the Military Affairs Committee and the other two the Navy I respectfully declined, because I believed it would be impossible to obtain any kind of a report unless it met the approval of the Navy Department.

Therefore, after a rather extensive hearing, in which the committee had access to practically all of the records relating to the disclosures that have recently been brought out, a report was submitted to the House, which completely exonerated the Navy. Anyhow the Akron is no more. This same gentleman has again given out to the press a statement to the effect that there is nothing wrong with the conduct of the officers in the Navy, relating to the purchase of airplanes in the past. We have a neighbor on the south of us, Congressman MCFARLANE, of Texas, who advises me that there is no justification for such action, and that he will file a minority report, in which the public will be given what we sometimes call "the low down."

The revival of this question and the bringing to the surface of a lot of bad practice and irregularities has brought Gen. William E. Mitchell, the deposed head of the Army aircraft during the World War, into the limelight. This general has maintained for a period of 12 or 14 years that the officers in the Army were not in any way favorable to the development of this branch of the service, and has continuously called the public's attention to the fact that the planes furnished to the Army and Navy were far inferior to those owned by many nations of the world. Everyone remembers that General Balboa, of Italy, flew 21 ships across the ocean, encountering Arctic weather and every other kind of situation, and he only lost 1 plane during the entire trip. There isn't another record in the world that compares with this one, and it tends to substantiate the charges that have been made by General Mitchell relative to the efficiency of aircraft of other countries.

I have been a strong advocate for many years of changing the present set-up with respect to national defense, by having three branches of this service. One in charge of air, one of land, and the other the sea, thus establishing the policy that is now carried out by England, France, Japan, and practically all of the other major nations of the world. However, there is in this Government a perpetuation of old Army and Navy officers, who look with disfavor upon any new invention, and who are satisfied to carry out the traditions of the days gone by, feeling and believing that that which was good enough to protect this Nation in the past will be sufficient in the future. It is to be regretted that the citizens of this country apparently are powerless to break down the enormous influence that is maintained by those in control of these two branches of the service to the extent that our country cannot have the most up-to-date weapons of defense and offense that human ingenuity can provide.

I have a distinct recollection that soon after the World War, when I became a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, that most of the members, with the exception of myself, were apparently against expenditures and authorizations for aircraft. On one occasion it was proposed that a debate be held at one of the public theaters in Washington, at which I was to affirm the virtues of aircraft and a distinguished gentleman from California, one of the members of the committee, was to take the opposite view. This talk would not be complete unless I made the statement that before my promotion to the Ways and Means Committee, every single opposing member, serving in this capacity had completely changed his viewpoint.

In this connection it will be remembered that for a period of about 3 years, while serving on the Naval Affairs Committee, I advanced the idea that the old obsolete battleships that were hid up the James River during the World War to keep them from being sunk by submarines could be used as an instrument of warfare, if a small second deck were built on each ship for the purpose of carrying bombing planes, thus making such ships their own airplane carrier, enabling them to send projectiles several hundred miles instead of depending upon old obsolete cannons. Finally, when the press carried a sufficient amount of information to arouse interest, it became necessary that an investigation be made, and Admiral Moffett sent one of his trusted officers to my office for the purpose of convincing me that the plan was impractical and should not be put into effect. After a conference, which lasted the greater portion of a day, the officer became convinced that a ship of this type could be constructed and carried such a recommendation to Admiral Moffett.

Then, when the London Conference was held, this admiral had included as a part of the agreement an amendment which allowed nations to develop such a new type, and the Naval Affairs Committee of the United States was the first body of this kind in all of the world to recommend such construction. Admiral Moffett is dead; I am no longer a member of the committee; and, apparently, there is no one in Congress who has sufficient power to break down the opposition of those who favor new ideas. When the new appropriation bill passed the House it carried an authorization for nearly a billion dollars, and there was not a single word in the bill to make certain that any of this money would be utilized in constructing this, the most outstanding type of airplane offense and defense that can be provided.

At present we depend upon large, cumbersome airplane carriers, such as the Lexington and Saratoga, that cost naked more than $50,000,000. These were constructed under some of those wartime 10-percent-plus contracts, thus enabling the builders to carry on the work of construction for an indefinite period of time and to pay salaries sufficiently high as to make the finished ship the most costly of any of its class in the world. I offered a resolution providing for an investigation; however, there was not an official connected with the Navy Department who was willing to render any assistance; but, on the other hand, everything possible was done to keep the subject smothered, as, in my opinion, they knew that the facts when brought to the light of day would not stand inspection, and every statement I am making has since been substantiated.

When the United States Navy constructs this new type of ship, then no more will we have to construct airplane carriers and it will reduce the cost of maintaining this branch of service at least one-third and, at the same time, give the Navy 50 percent more efficiency.

The reason I have gone into this subject is that the United States, and especially Oklahoma, is air-minded. The major percent of its citizens feel and know that the air offers more possibilities for future development than anything else and that the time is not far distant until planes will be circling the globe; then nations will lay aside all types of obsolete weapons of offense and defense and unless we have the newest and most up-to-date instrumentalities that can be provided by mankind, we cannot hope to carry on in a successful way.

Ladies and gentlemen, I was chairman of the subcommittee that first investigated the Akron. It was my privilege to be in charge of the committee that went to Lakehurst for the purpose of flying on the Akron the day it crashed. I offered the first resolution in the House asking for an official investigation of this disaster. It was in my office in Washington that the first agreement was made that brought about the establishment of the first school in the world to teach aircraft. My colleagues have given me credit for promoting the new combined cruiser and aircraft carrier, and I am hoping that the result of all of this publicity will cause an awakening in this country of the citizens to the extent that our country can have both on land and sea the kind of aircraft that will enable the Nation to carry on all activities in the most efficient manner possible, and as a last word, I want to pay tribute to Gen. William E. Mitchell, who was court-martialed for giving the public the true situation with respect to what was taking place, and the old adage has been exemplified, "Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

COTTON LEGISLATION

(Mar. 20, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, again through the courtesy of Station KASA at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

The legislation affecting the great cotton industry has occupied a very prominent position in legislative channels during the past week and none can tell what the final result will be until the Senate acts on the same. This bill is designed to save the cotton industry and because of its particular application to a large number of those whom I have the honor to represent I feel that correct information concerning this subject should be interesting to every individual in a cotton-producing area.

The United States exports more cotton than any other nation in the world, and of all commodities produced cotton represents in dollars and cents the most important crop grown in the United States. Our Nation is confronted at the present time with one of the most serious situations that the Government has ever been called on to solve and this is because practically all of the other nations have changed their legislative authority to the extent that they are able to levy prohibitive taxes against any kind of commodity instantaneously; this means that nations can over night levy a tax so high that it would, in effect, be an embargo against shipments that happen to be in transit on the seas. The Ways and Means Committee during the past week has been holding hearings for the purpose of rewriting our law relating to this subject, in order that the President of the United States may have the right to bargain or make trades with such countries, thus enabling him to increase rates on imports or to levy embargoes by using the quota system in order that our commerce may not be wiped off the seas.

If something is not done to bring about a better readjustment of conditions affecting our exports and imports, the United States will continue to drift into a situation where it will be impossible for our people to enjoy the profits of trade from other nations.

Let us compare cotton with wheat as a stable commodity produced in large quantities in the United States. Testimony has been given to our committee by prominent citizens to the effect that the export trade, relating to wheat, has practically ceased, and the figures show that the total value of wheat exported in 1933 amounted to only $4,768,000. What does this mean? The answer is that England, Germany, Italy, France, and other nations have caused a sufficient amount of virgin agricultural lands to be planted in wheat to produce a yield practically sufficient to take care of their own citizens, thus wiping out the market that we have enjoyed in the past to a large degree. It is for this reason the Government has put into effect a plan for the curtailing of the crop, and it means that a percentage of the soil used to grow wheat must be utilized for some other purpose, as we, as a nation, cannot hope to export but little of the surplus wheat that is grown in the future. Let us look at cotton. The United States, as a nation, exports about 50 percent of the normal yield per year. Because of the cheapness of labor in other nations where cotton can be produced, if such countries increase their acreage, the inevitable result will be that cotton can be placed on the market for a much lower price than we can produce it in the United States.

At present foreign nations are planting 26,000,000 acres in cotton and, according to the figures, they are proposing to increase this acreage to the extent of 20,000,000 acres. If such new acreage produces one-fourth of a bale per acre, it will mean an additional yield of 5,000,000 bales, which will be in competition with the cotton produced in the United States. This will have a disastrous effect upon the cotton-producing sections of the United States, to the extent that further reduction in acreage will have to be made or new uses for cotton will have to be found within our borders.

Brazil has, at the present time, 222,000,000 acres of land that can be planted in cotton. Concessions have been made by this country to Japan, and in 1930, 30,000 Japanese citizens came to Brazil for the purpose of growing cotton. Egypt, the Soudan in Africa, and other countries in South America can enlarge their acreage to the extent that our export cotton business may be wiped off the map. At present India produces more than 3,000,000,000 yards of cloth from cotton each year, from its 278 cotton mills. England, Japan, and other countries are providing a sufficient amount of spindles and looms for the manufacturing of the amount of cotton goods that is necessary to supply their own use.

In view of the fact that the majority of the major nations of the world owe us large sums of money, which cannot be paid at the present time unless there can be found some way to balance the economic conditions, the citizens of our country will have their export market severely curtailed. This brings us to the thought that there must be an economic readjustment within the borders of the United States to the extent that our citizens will realize the necessity of using our own products in preference to those that are shipped from abroad.

The so-called "Bankhead bill" is designed to protect the cotton producer and to bring about a fair disposition with respect to yield, so that the large landowners may not take an unfair advantage of those whom we term "the little fellow." It provides that the provisions of the same shall apply to cotton produced in 1934, 1935, and 1936; also, that the President, if it is desirable, can apply it to the crop produced in 1937. Also, should it be decided that the provisions of this act shall not apply to the cotton produced in any crop year, the President may issue a proclamation proclaiming this fact. It is the intention of the author of this bill to, as nearly as possible, comply with the wishes of those who produce cotton, and the bill specifies that the President, when convinced that two-thirds of those who own, rent, or control land suitable for the production of cotton are favorable to the provisions of this bill, he can cause to be levied a tax equal to 50 percent of the selling price of cotton, not to exceed 5 cents per pound.

In addition the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized 60 days prior to each crop period to make an allotment of bales of cotton to each county in the cotton-growing area in such a manner that the individual owner of land may know the exact number of bales of cotton that he can produce within a crop year in order that the total production may not exceed 10,000,000 bales.

It is provided that each producer of cotton may receive a tax-free certificate covering the number of bales of cotton that he may produce, and, if I read the bill correctly, should there be a storm or any other kind of disaster that would make it impossible for a person to market the number of bales of cotton that has been allotted, such person is privileged to dispose of his tax-free certificate or to utilize the same in a succeeding year.

The ginners of cotton will be charged with the responsibility of making monthly reports to the collector of internal revenue, remitting such tax as may be collected on surplus production. It is also provided that cotton produced in surplus may be stored for a period of 1 year without the necessity of paying the tax, and this provision will give added protection to those who might suffer a loss brought about by crop failure or other situations that cannot be foreseen.

One of the most important provisions contained in this act authorizes the President to enter into agreements with foreign countries to fix the amount of cotton that may be exported by the respective countries entering into agreements and to make all rules and regulations for the carrying out of such agreements, which can be construed as a power to negotiate for trade quotas.

At the present time the United States has an organization known as the "Tariff Commission" and the provisions of existing laws make it possible for the President to increase rates after an investigation has been made and recommendations presented to him covering rates applicable to any commodity, unless the same should be on the free list. This provision of law cannot effectively give to any authority of our Government quick means of coping with new situations that exist in practically every country of the world; and unless something is done to provide new machinery for the handling of such crops as cotton and wheat, the producers in this country are faced with a situation that may destroy completely our export market. Everyone that is posted realizes that the United States has a carry-over of approximately 10,000,000 bales, and that this is a factor that has a disastrous effect upon the price of cotton. Two years ago the product of the cotton farmer was sold at a price less than one half of that which it is now bringing. In my opinion the cotton producer cannot hope for a continuation of the ruling price unless new uses can be found for cotton and the yield be controlled to the extent that this surplus can be cut down. I am of the opinion that if the Government had not agreed to withhold from the market the so-called "option cotton", that which the Government loaned 10 cents per pound on, and the number of bales that were taken over from other activities, that the price could not have been kept up to the present figure.

I have always taken the position that it is far better to bring about a regulation of a commodity by causing the interested persons to agree on some voluntary plan; yet, when it is taken into consideration that there are certain foreign investors who are interested in large cotton plantations in the South who will not enter into any voluntary agreement for the reduction of acreage, it means that the "land hog", or the unfair producer, would gladly take advantage of any situation to produce more cotton in case the success of the plan rested upon voluntary agreements. In view of the fact that our export trade is threatened with extermination and we do not consume in the United States only about one half of the normal yield, it leaves this great industry in a predicament which makes it necessary that the Government put into effect some regulation that will be fair to all concerned—and this is the basis upon which the great Agricultural Committee considered this subject and reported favorably to the House the so-called "Bankhead bill."

I think it would be interesting to those who are listening in to know that Congressman FULMER, of South Carolina, a member of the Agricultural Committee, made the statement when speaking on the floor of the House that of all the witnesses that appeared before the committee to give testimony on the Bankhead bill, there was only one who opposed the same, he being Mr. Johnson, of the State of Mississippi. The following quotation relates to his testimony:

"Mr. Johnson on the witness stand.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. I believe you say that you have about 48,000 acres in cotton?

"Mr. JOHNSON. No; I said that we have about 48,000 acres in the plantation and about 25,000 acres in cotton cultivation.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, is that not all tenanted by share-croppers?

"Mr. JOHNSON. Practically all of it; yes.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. They are all colored tenants, are they not?

"Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; practically all.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. Have you no white tenants on the farm?

"Mr. JOHNSON. Probably two or three.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. How many families are on that farm?

"Mr. JOHNSON. On the 3 farms, about 1,600 families; fifteen or sixteen hundred families.

"Mr. BANKHEAD. Who owns that property, Mr. Johnson?

"Mr. JOHNSON. The property is owned by a corporation; a part of the stock is owned in this country, but about 60 percent of it is held in England, a majority of it. About 40 percent of the stock is held by various persons in America, including myself."

In addition to this class of foreign investment, I personally know that in the so-called "delta country" of the Mississippi Valley there are thousands of large plantations whose principal crop is cotton and that the owners of the same will not cooperate in a voluntary manner with the Government for the purpose of taking out of production a certain number of acres. They know that if a sufficient number of the "little fellows" can be induced to sign up an agreement for the purpose of reducing the yield that if they refrain from taking such action that it will enable them to produce a 100-percent crop and be given the benefit of the increased price.

It is unfortunate in life that our citizens always have to contend with an element that is not willing to cooperate for the purpose of bringing about a very much needed result, and the so-called "Bankhead bill" provides a prohibitive tax on cotton produced in a surplus which will force such unethical landowners to do their part. I am intensely interested in protecting the grower of every commodity in the Nation, and have always supported every bill that has had this result for its purpose. Therefore, in view of the intensive study I have made of all of the conditions surrounding this one crop that so vitally affects the largest one area in the United States, it seems apparent that this is the best policy for the Government to pursue at the present time.

PHILIPPINE LEGISLATION

(Mar. 27, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, again through the courtesy of Station KASA at Elk City I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

The subject of Philippine independence is one that has been brought to the attention of Congress for a number of years, and during the past week the House considered and passed a new bill for the purpose of extending the time for acceptance by the Philippine Legislature; in addition amended the same in order to meet certain objections of the Filipino citizens.

The United States Government has always declared to the other nations of the world that our people did not seek additional territory nor to compel the citizens of our insular possessions to give special recognition to the United States when they were capable of self-government. Every President since McKinley has announced as being in favor of giving to the Filipinos their independence as soon as its citizens were capable of providing a satisfactory form of government; and in addition, the platforms of both parties have been specifically in favor of such a principle. The Filipino race is one of the oldest in the world; their civilization dates back much further than that of our country, and they were proficient in many of the arts and sciences a long time prior to those of many nations. It will be remembered that in 1519 Magellan, a Spanish commander, was killed in a battle by being struck with a steel instrument, which shows that they had a knowledge of manufacturing this metal long before the same was perfected in many nations of the world. In fact, other articles of domestic use show conclusively that they were as progressive as the citizens of Japan in some respects.

The Philippine Islands are peopled with several distinct races, which differ in many characteristics. The Irogotes were possibly the most difficult to subdue, and after the Spanish-American War had been concluded, it was necessary to maintain military control in these islands in order to subdue this tribe, and the struggle was not completed until after several years of intense guerrilla warfare.

The Philippine Islands embrace a territory that is greater than all of New England, including the State of New York. They have a population of over 14,000,000, which exceeds the Republic of Mexico; and, in addition, is greater than 10 of the South American republics. The progress made during the time the islands have been under our flag is very marked. This has been brought about in a large degree because of American capital invested to the extent of $247,000,000. Many of those who opposed this legislation did so on the grounds that the Filipinos were not sufficiently advanced to be able to maintain a stable government; yet, the facts show that the Filipinos have an educational system that compares favorably with many of the nations of the world. At present there are over 8,000 public schools, employing more than 28,000 teachers. It is an interesting fact to know that the University of Manila was founded in 1611, which was 25 years prior to the establishment of Harvard University, one of the oldest colleges in our Nation. It is said that approximately 80 percent of its citizens, at the present time, have a knowledge of the English language, and can read and write. One of the chief causes for advancement in these islands is the splendid Public Health Service which maintains 105 hospitals and has been established for a period of 15 years, and is entirely under the control of Filipinos.

The judicial branch of the Government is represented by a supreme court, with 28 lower courts, and in addition there are nearly 1,000 justices of the peace who have a jurisdiction similar to those within the United States. I am sure that many of our listeners will be interested in knowing that 92 percent of the Filipinos are Christians, 4 percent pagans, and 4 percent Mohammedans, thus showing that Christianity has gone hand in hand with the development of the new civilization in these islands.

The provision of the legislation that relates to independence provides: First, for the formation of a constitution; second, limitation of exports, and after 5 years the tax to be applied on the bonded indebtedness; third, an immigration quota of 50 individuals; fourth, the creation of the office of American High Commissioner; fifth, after a period of 10 years, on July 4, the withdrawal of American sovereignty; sixth, the relinquishment of all Army bases, including some 300,000 acres of land that is now occupied for this purpose; seventh, negotiations as to naval bases.

I desire to briefly comment on some of the provisions that relate to this subject. The Army officials in Washington have always opposed the relinquishment of any kind of territory now under the jurisdiction of the United States for the reason they realize that if activities are to be curtailed it will mean a reduction in their appropriation that is provided annually by Congress, and any policy that would have the effect of reducing the number of officers or men in the Army is always frowned on. As to naval bases, in my opinion, the maintaining of the same in a country very near Japan will be an eyesore to this great nation and may result in a controversy which can cause embarrassment in the future. Therefore, it would seem to me that if the Army bases are to be given up that the same policy should be put into effect with respect to the Navy, as any policy maintained by the United States that is liable to embroil us in a difficulty with a major nation, in my opinion, is unwise.

There are those who feel free to express an opinion that the time may come when Japan will feel that it is within her power to take the Philippine Islands and, should this happen, the United States would be severely embarrassed if we continue to maintain any kind of military activities within this possession. This being true, I have always felt that the interest of the 120,000,000 citizens of the United States was more important than those of a citizenship located some four or five thousand miles distant and that whatever policy was adopted by this Nation should first take into consideration the rights of our own people.

The main opposition to the so-called "Philippine independence" has always come from those who have large investments in this nation and who are more interested in commerce than in the rights of humanity. Under the present agreement, with respect to commerce, the Philippine industries are allowed to export sugar, copra, sisal, and other products in the United States without paying a duty. This is a differential that has enabled certain industries to make many million dollars and the beet-sugar people of our Nation have severely complained because of such regulations on the ground that their industry is being confronted with the kind of competition that makes the growing of beets unprofitable.

I am practically sure that it would not have been possible to pass this legislation without giving consideration to this subject, and the present bill allows 50,000 tons of sugar and 800,000 unrefined tons to come into the United States in the future for a period of 10 years without paying any duty. Also, opposition came from those who are interested in the production of coconut oil, and it was agreed that 200,000 tons of such oil should be admitted free during the 10-year period. Similar provisions were provided to take care of cord, rope, and other products, which, to say the least, is fair to those interested in such occupations.

During the past week the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, the President of the Philippine Senate, has been in Washington with a commission for the purpose of ironing out existing differences and promoting this new legislation. It was my privilege to serve with this distinguished Filipino in the years gone by, and I think he is one of the best educated and probably the most forceful character ever produced by his race. Therefore when a message was presented to Congress from the Philippine Legislature, stating that the terms of the new bill would be acceptable to the Filipinos, the opposition folded up and the bill was passed practically unanimously.

According to the provisions of this legislation, direction is given to the form of a constitution that shall be adopted by the Philippine people, and it is further provided that within a period of 4 months the same shall be submitted to its citizens for ratification; then when action is taken, the Philippine Legislature will prescribe new legislation with respect to the calling of elections for the purpose of allowing their citizens to fill such offices as are necessary to maintain their government. In other words, this Nation provides that they shall have a period of trial, and during the same the United States will appoint a High Commissioner as an observer with certain powers for the purpose of rendering service to the officials of this new proposed republic until the time arrives when they can have absolute freedom.

It is significant that their day of independence is to be on July 4, which is the day that we celebrate for the same reason; and when these 14,000,000 people become an independent nation, they will have the same rights as are accorded to other nations of the world with respect to commerce and to be represented at the capitals of the other nations.

In summing up the results of our wars in the past, a lesson is taught to our people when it is taken into consideration the number of those who gave up their lives and the terrible cost in dollars and cents, that never ceased until the participants and their dependents had passed on to the beyond. The Philippine Islands cost us in money, according to the Treaty of Paris, $20,000,000, which is a clear loss to the taxpayers of this Nation, which is in addition to the millions of dollars that this Government has expended in appropriations for the purpose of maintaining our Army and Navy and the various officials who look after the welfare of the Government. In addition, the privileges given to exporters of different commodities have had a disastrous effect upon articles produced in the United States; and when a comparison is made with Cuba, Puerto Rico, Haiti, and our insular possessions, one is bound to come to the conclusion that territory conquests are expensive follies and that in the end saddle upon the taxpayers a burden that carries on pretty nearly indefinitely. Therefore, it would seem to the person who is acquainted with all of these facts that our citizens should be taught the lesson that territory acquisition by force is the most expensive policy that can be put into effect, and nations that continue this kind of programs are always subjecting their citizens to baptism in blood. I am hoping that the time will never come when we as a Nation will allow ourselves to become embroiled in another foreign difficulty, and I feel that President Roosevelt and the members of his administration are to be congratulated for taking this forward step in order that our Nation may be free from the kind of entangling alliances that might engulf our people in the greatest war that could be fought on the globe.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

(Apr. 10, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, again through the courtesy of Station KASA, at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

I am sure that all of those who are listening will be pleased to obtain information concerning the bill which was enacted into a law over the President's veto, as there are some who do not know that President Roosevelt, in his message sent to Congress, first presented an argument stating why he could not approve the legislation, and then specifically used the following language, which showed that he was in sympathy with most of the provisions contained in the act:

[From President Roosevelt's message]

"A few weeks ago I gave approval to an amendment the purpose of which was, pending the determination of their appeals, to restore to the rolls at 75 percent of their compensation those veterans in whose cases the presumption of service connection was disallowed by the local boards. I intend now by regulation forthwith to direct an appeal by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in each and every one of these disallowed 29,000 cases, with the further direction that in the final determination of these cases every reasonable doubt be resolved in favor of the veteran, and every assistance be rendered in the preparation and presentation of these cases. While these cases are pending the veterans will be paid 75 percent of their compensation they received prior to the time they were removed from the rolls. If the appeal is allowed, they will receive back compensation. Only in cases disallowed by the Board of Appeals will the veteran thereafter be permanently removed from the rolls. This regulation will be put into effect at once."

In regard to Spanish-American War veterans, he stated as follows:

"I come now to the provisions of the bill relating to Spanish-American War veterans. To this group of ex-service men I have devoted much thought. Because of their age they command sympathy. Nevertheless, we must recognize also that many abuses have crept into the laws granting them benefits.

"I am today directing the restoration to the rolls of those Spanish-American War veterans who in 1920 were receiving pensions as a result of having sustained an injury or incurred a disease arising out of their war service.

"By regulation 12 a presumption of service origin was extended to Spanish-American War veterans on the rolls on March 19, 1933. In order to take the same action which I am taking in regard to World War veterans, I am directing the restoration to the rolls, as of this date, at 75 percent of the amount they were receiving on March 19, 1933, all Spanish-American War veterans pending a final determination of their cases before the Board of Appeals."

Continuing further, he said: "It goes without saying that I shall not hesitate to make further changes if the principle of justice demands."

I am sure that the American Legion's viewpoint on this subject will be very interesting, and National Chairman E. A. Hayes gave out the following statement prior to the passage of this bill, which is self-explanatory:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The morning newspapers state that President Roosevelt proposes to veto the independent offices appropriation bill, containing amendments to the veterans' disability laws which incorporate, in substance, three points of the Legion's four-point program.

"Inasmuch as the President plans to leave Washington today, it is likely that the House of Representatives will vote upon the veto prior to his departure. In this event we believe the Congress should understand the points at issue affecting World War disabled from the viewpoint of the American Legion. There being insufficient time to address a letter to each Member of the House, I would appreciate your securing permission to read this letter from the floor for the information of the Members.

"There were originally three points at issue affecting the disabled. The hospitalization point has already been substantially granted by Presidential regulations, so all that has remained on this has been to enact it into law. This has left two points, contained in the bill before you, which have not been granted by Presidential regulation, and concerning which differences of opinion have existed.

"The first point has had to do with restoration of the payments received by the entire service-connected World War disabled group. This cost has been estimated at $31,308,000 by the Veterans' Administration, although the Legion has believed that the cost would be substantially less than this sum.

"The second point concerns eligibility to service connection for World War disability, and affects some 29,000 so-called 'presumptives.' The first year's cost of this proposal has been estimated by the Veterans' Administration at $10,900,000.

"I will now discuss briefly the first point, that affecting restoration of the rates of pay received by the World War disabled group, concerning whom everyone admits there is no doubt that World War service disabled them. The types of afflictions which have disabled this group can be roughly subdivided into four groups, which are veterans suffering from tuberculosis, from neuropsychiatric disease, from general medical and surgical afflictions, and the amputation cases.

"I think you gentlemen will recall that during the debate of the Economy Act a year ago, it was repeatedly stated in the Congress that nobody planned and nobody desired that the veterans who had been admittedly disabled by their World War service should have one cent taken away from their disability compensation. Yet we find now that, notwithstanding the increases which have been made by Presidential regulations, that the substantial amounts have been taken away from the war disabled, which I have just set forth.

"The Legion does not now believe, nor have we ever believed, that it was the desire of the American people or the American Congress to so sharply reduce the Government's payments to the admittedly World War disabled.

"President Roosevelt in addressing our national convention at Chicago last October told the Legion the following in connection with this group: 'Furthermore, it is my hope that, insofar as justice concerns those whose disabilities are, as a matter of fact, of war-service origin, the Government will be able to extend even more generous care than is now provided under existing regulations. It is to these men that our obligation exists.'

"So much for the restoration of service-connected disability payments which the Legion has sought and provision for which is made in the independent offices bill now once more before you.

"This bill, however, contains certain exceptions to a blanket restoration of payments, exceptions which the Legion itself has advocated. So, as a matter of fact, although the bill would in theory restore the old payments, it would not do so in all cases.

"I now come to the second point at issue, which is the third point in the Legion's program—that of restoration of eligibility to service connection as it existed prior to the Economy Act.

"This concerns the 29,000 so-called 'presumptives', 90 percent of whom are World War veterans suffering from tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease, men whose disabilities had been connected with their service under laws in existence since 1921, subsequently twice amended insofar as the presumptive date was concerned.

"Senator BYRNES, of South Carolina, who was in charge of the bill in the Senate, offered to restore these men to the service-connected rolls at 75 percent of their former payments. This offer was made presumably on behalf of the administration. It proposed a temporary restoration only, with payments to be made until review of the cases on appeal could be had by the newly created Veterans' Appeal Board.

"The cost of this proposal was estimated at $10,900,000 a year, or the exact same yearly cost which would be incurred to restore this group to the rolls permanently. The point at issue between the administration's plan and the Legion's plan was this: Under the administration's plan the Appeals Board would pass upon the veterans' eligibility to service connection, under the very same rigid and restrictive rules and regulations of the Economy Act, through the operation of which they had their service connection broken a year ago.

"Service connection is difficult to establish 10 or 12 years after a disability has developed. Thousands of these men are insane and are confined in the Government hospitals. Other thousands now lie upon their backs upon beds for the tubercular. There is small opportunity for either class to now prove their direct service connection. It was this very difficulty which the Congress had in mind when on its own initiative it enacted the presumptive legislation, for the Congress realized even then the difficulty of proving service connection in many thousands of cases."

It has been the policy of this Government ever since the Revolutionary War to take care of the disabled, the widows and orphans, and the dependents of those who performed service in the Army. This same policy has been in effect with respect to the Civil War veterans, Spanish-American War veterans, and, in part, to the World War veterans. It is known that every time there is a war certain financiers are enabled to manipulate their business affairs in such a way as to reap millions of dollars in profits. I remember very distinctly that Daniel Drew, who was the partner of Jay Gould during the Civil War, said that because he was able to bribe certain Army officers and other officials of the Government it was possible to obtain the result of the Battle of Antietam 3 or 4 days prior to the time the news went to the public, and because of this inside information he was able to manipulate stock markets in such a way as to make enough profits in dollars and cents to buy new uniforms for every soldier in the Civil War. Of course, he didn't buy any.

Everybody knows that prior to the World War every kind of propaganda possible was put out in this country for the purpose of molding influence and that the only ones who profited were the big munitions factories, shipbuilding corporations, steel companies, and others that took advantage of every situation to charge unheard-of profits for the various articles that had to be used by the Army and our citizens. The Government paid bonuses to its civilian employees throughout the Nation and, in addition, allowed one class of women known as "Yeomanettes" to have the same status as a soldier when it came to pensions, hospitalization, and other kind of considerations.

The poor private was forced to go to war. He was paid $1 per day for his service in the United States and a little more abroad. He made a genuine sacrifice, oftentimes giving up a lucrative position; and when it is taken into consideration the amount the disabled are now being paid, and compare that with the millions of dollars that were made by big business in this Nation, there is not anyone who can successfully say that he is not entitled to the consideration provided for in this legislation.

The World War will go down in history as the "foolish war." The United States was made the goat because we furnished the other countries a sufficient amount of money to enable them to buy munitions of war and the other necessities that had to be provided from some source. Today we are holding the sack while the foreign nations that owe us some $12,000,000,000 refuse to pay even the interest that is past due.

It has been my privilege, as many of you know, to visit the battlefronts in Europe from the Toul sector clear up to Mount Kemmell, and I say, without fear of contradiction, that anyone who has witnessed the various conditions that our lads had to go through cannot take any position other than to be willing to provide the comforts of life to those who were incapacitated to the extent that they are unable to provide a livelihood.

I know that there are some who feel that inasmuch as the acts performed under the economy bill had since been remedied or modified and that the President stated in his message that he was willing to restore, by Executive order, practically all that the measure called for—in fact, the difference in dollars and cents amounted to less than $90,000,000—that surely Members of Congress were justified in keeping their obligations to aid the disabled ex-service men wherever the opportunity presented itself.

Everyone knows that whenever the Nation is in the red that some method must be found to balance the Budget; also that those who make profits sufficient to pay any income taxes are the ones who, in a large way, support the Government. This being true, I propose, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, that is charged with the responsibility of providing revenue, to lift the income-tax rates sufficiently high to take this money away from those who made enormous profits during the World War, and, in addition, I want to see Congress pass an authorization which will allow the people to vote on a constitutional amendment in order that interest on tax-exempt securities shall be subject to an income tax.

There may be those who will complain because of legislation favorable to the soldiers, yet when the Nation is confronted with a serious situation no thought, as a rule, is given to what may happen in the hereafter. Every citizen should be interested in adopting the kind of a measure that will prevent our Nation from entering into another war. There should be some measure which would make it possible to conscript incomes and wealth just the same as there will be to take our boys away from their mothers; and regardless of how others may view this subject, I am always going to carry out my campaign pledges, as I have felt that it was my duty to do on this occasion. I want it distinctly understood that in doing what I thought was right, it was intended in no way to cast a reflection on the great President, as I will continue to stand by him in sponsoring every measure that relates to the rehabilitation of the Nation.

DR. WIRT AND THE REVOLUTION

(Apr. 17, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans, again through the courtesy of Station KASA at Elk City I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

I am sure that every person listening in has heard of the charges made by Dr. William A. Wirt, of Gary, Ind., who is employed in that city as superintendent of public schools, which related to a plan to overthrow the Government, which he claimed was being sponsored by members of the President's so-called "brain trust." This subject was first given wide publicity by one James H. Rand, Jr., when testifying before the House Interstate Commerce Committee on March 23 of this year. According to the developments made by the investigating committee, it was shown that Dr. Wirt caused to be sent to a number of leading newspapers and others copies of his statements in this connection. The House of Representatives passed a special resolution creating a committee of five to make an investigation of the alleged charges, and Speaker RAINEY appointed as members of this committee Congressmen BULWINKLE, O'CONNOR, ARNOLD, LEHLBACH, and MCGUGIN; the 3 first Members named are Democrats and the last 2 Republicans.

The first hearing was held in the new Ways and Means Committee room, which is located in the New House Office Building. According to the information given to me, this apparently is the first hearing that has ever been held by a legislative body in the United States for the purpose of investigating a movement that some thought was launched for the purpose of overthrowing the Government, and, of course, every news-gathering agency in the United States and many representing papers abroad were represented for the purpose of advising those whom they represented as to all of the facts brought out.

On this date the largest crowd of spectators that ever assembled in this spacious room were present. In fact, there were two or three times more visitors on the outside trying to gain admittance than were on the inside.

The Ways and Means Committee room has a large rostrum on an elevated platform at one end of the building capable of seating 25 individuals, which is sufficient to take care of those who constitute this committee, and behind these elevated seats is sufficient room to accommodate a row of chairs, which were occupied on this occasion by Members of Congress and every other person who could squeeze his way in.

The photographers who represent the different newspapers and other agencies were there by the hundreds, and, in addition, the sound-recording instruments that supply Pathé and other similar agencies occupied one entire corner of the room with their instruments, which in some respects had the appearance of a battery of machine guns. The two major broadcasting companies caused to be placed in positions of advantage a sufficient number of microphones so as to catch every word that was spoken by the witnesses and the members of the committee.

It was my privilege to have a seat on the rostrum immediately behind Chairman BULWINKLE, who headed the investigating committee, and seated on each side of me were as many of the Members of Congress as could obtain a place where they could see what was going on.

When 10 o'clock arrived, the hour scheduled for the fireworks to begin, every person there received a thrill when the silver-haired ex-Senator from Missouri, the Honorable James A. Reed, walked into the hall, then came up on the rostrum for the purpose of shaking hands with his old colleague whom he had served with so long in Congress; and when it became known that he was there to act as counsel for Dr. Wirt everyone came to the conclusion that it would be a real battle before the hearing was concluded.

Chairman BULWINKLE rapped for order and the proceedings started. Dr. Wirt's name was called, and from the audience arose the individual whom all present came to see. Taking his position at the place reserved for the witness, every cameraman made a wild leap for the purpose of gaining a position of advantage in order that he might focus him, and for about 10 minutes the snapping of bulbs and the buzz of the different kinds of machinery very nearly disrupted the entire procedure. Senator Reed arose and addressed the committee, stating that he appeared as Dr. Wirt's counsel, and requested that a full examination be made and that his client be given complete authority to make a full statement concerning all of the alleged facts which had been given out by him to the press. It was at this point that the members of the committee clashed over procedure.

The Democratic Members, realizing that there were always certain individuals who would make a mountain out of a molehill, and that any statement made would be misconstrued by many, were determined that only the facts should be brought out, and the motion of Congressman O'CONNOR limited the hearings to such statements as had been printed. This action brought a severe protest on the part of the Republican Members, who were charged with desiring to play politics; however, the matter was soon settled and Dr. Wirt was placed under oath.

Senator REED protested against the decision of the committee when he was advised that it was not necessary for his client to have counsel, as the hearings were not held for the purpose of bringing out any information other than that which related to Dr. Wirt's charges that certain members of the so-called "brain trust" were ready to start a revolution, and Senator REED was advised that should he care to bring to the attention of the committee any particular information, he would be given the opportunity of presenting the same in writing to the chairman of the committee.

The sound-recording instruments and the Klieg lights again pretty nearly disrupted the proceedings as the witness began his testimony. Senator Reed finally complained to the chairman, stating that his eyes were a little weak and that he could not face the chairman until this part of the proceeding was stopped. The operators of the machines were on their knees begging the chairman and members of the committee not to put them out of the building, and for about 30 minutes they were allowed to continue, during which time Senator Reed kept his hands up to his face for the purpose of shading his eyes. The operating of these machines increased the heat within the room, and in addition it seemed that nearly every man and woman was either smoking a cigarette or a cigar, and had it not been for the person in charge of refrigeration filling the room with blasts of cool air, I am certain that the hearing would have had to be postponed, as conditions became pretty nearly unbearable.

The chairman of the committee read into the record a portion of Dr. Wirt's statement, calling attention to his charges, and then asked him to give his authority and all facts pertaining to the reason why he had given out such a statement to the press. Then Dr. Wirt told of a dinner that was given across the Potomac in Virginia, at which was the representative of the Soviet Government and five or six Government employees, stating that at this meeting information was given to him, principally by a woman, an employee of the Department of Agriculture, relating to those who held key positions in the Government and who were willing to join in the kind of planning that would establish a new order in this Nation, which, of course, was construed by many to favor Communism.

At each point in his testimony he was asked who made the statements referred to, and his answer in practically every instance referred to a Miss Kneeland. In his testimony he referred to Speaker RAINEY as having made a statement that could be construed as giving doubt as to how long this Government could stand, and such statement was promptly denied by the Speaker of the House. The name of Mrs. Roosevelt, the wife of the President, was also mentioned in connection with a colonization plan for the purpose of allowing deserving people to buy a small tract of land in order that they might have the opportunity of providing for themselves a livelihood, and Dr. Wirt stated that such a movement was the beginning of a plan which would depopulate cities and cause owners of the property to suffer losses. Mrs. Roosevelt promptly gave out a statement to the press ridiculing his viewpoint and, in addition, stated that the cost in money of what she was sponsoring was only a drop in the bucket when compared to the amount that is being expended for other humanitarian purposes.

Dr. Wirt laid great stress on different articles that had been published in a book by Dr. Tugwell. In fact, as I viewed the entire controversy, Dr. Tugwell's theories and pronouncements were the ones that seemed to inspire Dr. Wirt to make the charges with respect to the so-called "brain trust", although Dr. Tugwell was not present at the meeting held in Virginia. To say the least, Dr. Wirt, when called on to give the names of the members of the so-called "brain trust" who were fomenting a movement which might bring about a revolution, completely fell down, as the only names mentioned were a few employees of the Government who were carry-overs from the old administration in part and who held more or less minor positions with the Government, and it is the consensus of opinion that his charge was not substantiated.

It is interesting to know that practically all of the persons named by Dr. Wirt as being interested in a movement which might be termed communistic immediately gave out statements denying the testimony that referred to them, and in addition stated that Dr. Wirt at this meeting did practically all of the talking, discussing an entirely different subject, the same being the money question, and one person who was there described the meeting as a wash-out.

At 12 o'clock the meeting adjourned for the day. Dr. Wirt was asked if he could remain over until the next morning, and replied that he could. He returned to his hotel, and according to the press refused to answer the telephone or to admit anyone for a conference. In fact, the committee was not able to communicate with him for the purpose of advising that it had been decided that he could go home, and a telegram was sent him to this effect, thus bringing to a conclusion his part in this great melodrama.

It is always unfortunate for anyone to give out a statement alleging a fact which in truth is based on a rumor, and it is to be regretted that this educator apparently did not use good judgment in alleging statements which could not be proved to be true; anyhow, he can console himself in the thought that there never was a person in the United States who received as much free publicity as was given to him, and while his station in life was more or less obscure, he is now known to all our citizens as a person "who strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel."

The special committee will probably call the persons named by Dr. Wirt, who were present at the dinner, in order that they may under oath refute the testimony which has, more or less, placed them in an uncomfortable position, and if they make the same statements as have been printed by the press, the committee will conclude the investigation and the country will be saved. So much for Dr. Wirt, the "brain trust", and all others who have been named, which has resulted in clearing up a mystery which apparently was nothing but a myth.

RELIEF AND SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS

(May 1, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans: Again, through the courtesy of station KASA at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

During the first session of Congress under the Roosevelt administration, the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member, favorably reported the National Recovery Act, which made available more than $3,000,000,000 to be used as a fund to assist in the rehabilitation of the Nation. At that time no one could have a proper conception of the needs of our citizens, yet it was known that such a depressed condition was in evidence everywhere that it was necessary to change the order of the day by putting into effect new ideas with the hope the result would be an entire change in our economic situation.

The Nation was confronted with an overproduction of foodstuffs and other commodities of many kinds, and at the same time there was not a sufficient amount of employment to take care of the needs of our citizens, which resulted in millions being out of employment, to the extent that the morale of our people was at its lowest ebb.

In order to balance production and consumption in view of our decreased foreign business, it was necessary as one of the steps of recovery to curtail overproduction of various agricultural products in order that the price paid to the producer might be increased, and to bring this about at the earliest moment possible a policy was put into effect which would cause our farmers to take out of production a percentage of their tillable land and to bring about other forms of curtailment. This program at first was viewed with suspicion by many, as it was a wide departure in the way of an experiment from anything that had ever been tried out by Government agencies in the past. This program caused our farmers in 1933 to receive over $200,000,000 from the Government, and it is estimated that before the end of 1934 the amount they will receive for reducing acreage and production will be over $1,000,000,000. It will be interesting to know that the producers of corn and hogs will receive over $367,000,000; wheat growers, $148,000,000; tobacco growers, $35,000,000; cotton growers, $173,000,000; dairy farmers, $150,000,000; loans on corn, $111,000,000; loans on cotton, $110,000,000; and in addition $150,000,000 will be paid to dairy farmers and the producers of livestock.

It will be of interest to many to know that notwithstanding cotton acreage was reduced approximately 30 percent in 1933, because of the increased market price the total amount received by the cotton grower exceeded that which would have been paid him if there had been no reduction made in acreage, and when it is taken into consideration that corn sold as low as 15 cents per bushel and wheat at 25 cents per bushel prior to the time that this policy was put into effect, I am sure that the reduction program has had a corresponding effect upon other agricultural commodities.

The taking out of production a certain percentage of acreage will naturally cause some of the smaller farmers to seek other kinds of employment, and in many instances there will be those who will move to the cities with the hope of securing employment in factories and other kinds of industrial work. President Roosevelt, being intensely interested in the problem of providing an adequate living for every class of humanity, came to the conclusion that providing subsistence homesteads to those who were working in the mines, factories, and other occupations in or near industrial centers would take care of many who have left the farm and moved to the city; therefore, on October 21, 1933, he issued an Executive order as follows:

"EXECUTIVE ORDER

"By virtue of the authority vested in me by the act of Congress, entitled 'An act to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes', approved June 16, 1933 (Public, No. 67, 73d Cong.), in order to effectuate the intent and purpose of the Congress as expressed in section 208 under title II thereof, I hereby authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exercise all the powers vested in me, for the purpose of administering all the provisions of section 208 under title II of said act, including full authority to designate and appoint such agents, to set up such boards and agencies, and to make and promulgate such regulations as he may deem necessary or desirable.

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

In order to provide the necessary funds for the establishing of subsistence homesteads, the sum of $25,000,000 was made available to be loaned to local organizations set up for this purpose, and a unit in the Department of the Interior was created to have full jurisdiction. In addition, an advisory committee was created with Senator JOHN M. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, as its chairman for the purpose of establishing a policy that would be suitable and fair to every section of the Nation.

Up to and including April 24, 1934, subsistence homesteads have been authorized to be established in groups at Birmingham, Ala.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Wilmington, Del.; Jasper and Putnam Counties, Ga.; West Frankfort, Ill.; Decatur, Ind.; Jasper, Ala.; Granger, Iowa; Austin, Minn.; Duluth, Minn.; Hattiesburg and 5 other cities in Mississippi; Hightstown, N.J.; Rochester, N.Y.; Wilmington, N.C.; Dayton, Ohio; Greenburg, Pa.; Youngstown, Ohio; and 6 in Texas. Applications have been received from every State in the Union, and as fast as local organizations are created it is proposed to continue the establishment of such agencies with the hope that this form of assistance will result in taking up the slack, anyhow to a large degree, caused by the general reduction program put into effect relating to agricultural commodities.

In the creating of subsistence homesteads it must be taken into consideration that the chief aim on the part of the Government is to enable the head of the family to have the kind of land that will produce sufficient fruit and vegetables to take care of his own needs. Also, he must have the kind of part-time employment which will enable the land to be worked and a portion of his pay to be used to retire the initial indebtedness. As an illustration, there are many miners and factory employees who now work only 30 hours per week, and by providing a subsistence homestead such persons will be able to cultivate 2 or 3 acres of land and to produce a sufficient amount of fruits and vegetables to take care of the needs of the family all the year around.

Director M. L. Wilson, in commenting on subsistence homesteads, made the following statement:

"My own conception of it is best typified by the Mormon village. When Brigham Young settled his land on the plateaus between Great Salt Lake and the mountains he was compelled to settle them in a village as a means of protection against the Indians. In general, the typical Mormon village was laid out in blocks, the blocks not being cut into lots, and each householder instead of living on a 50-foot lot, which went back to the alley, lived on a plot 2.2 acres. This type of life exists in many of the agricultural Mormon villages in Utah today. About 20 or 30 years ago sugar-beet factories and milk condenseries began to appear in some of the Mormon villages, thus producing a wage-earning class.

"In some of the Mormon villages of Utah you can see the evolution of the subsistence homestead pattern of life. People are living on the 2.2 acres and are working in the industries a hundred days or a hundred and fifty days, as the case may be, at prevailing wage rates. I defy anybody to show me any place in the United States a higher social or aesthetic standard of living in relation to the cash income than can be found in these villages."

I am sure that everyone will be interested in the plan that has been established that relates to finance, and it is as follows:

Federal funds advanced will be loans; grants will not be made. Except in special cases preference will be given to projects toward which reasonable equity contributions are made from sources other than the Federal Government. Loans will be made to the local corporations, not to individual homesteaders. All loans must be adequately secured, and will be, at an interest rate of 4 percent to the corporation, amortized over a period not to exceed 30 years, with privilege of repayment at any time. The interest rate to the homesteader will usually be somewhat higher in order to provide a reasonable differential for the necessary annual management costs of the corporation. Amortization schedules will be adjusted to the character of project, prospective earning power of the homesteaders, quality and character of construction, etc. Homesteaders' payments may be made weekly, monthly, quarterly, or semiannually, as may best fit the case; payments to the Government by the corporation, however, ordinarily will be on a semiannual basis. Deferment of initial payments may be permitted where necessary, but such deferment will not exceed 2 years.

Loans for purchase of production equipment, tools and machinery, including livestock, seeds, trees, and fertilizer, will be made where necessary and where unobtainable from other sources. All charges and financial schedules, leases, contracts, and other stipulations and agreements, especially as between the local corporation and the homesteaders, will be subject to approval of the division. Cash income adequate to meet interest and amortization charges during the life of the loan necessarily must be assured. The source of this ordinarily will be employment in nearby industries, sale of products of home industry, in some cases work in nearby forests, or other source of wage employment off the homestead.

All projects necessarily must be planned in both establishment and operation as low-cost enterprises for persons of limited income.

The six subsistence homesteads located in Texas are at Arlington, Beaumont, Houston, Marshall, Three Rivers, and Wichita Falls, and anyone interested in this subject will notice that each one is adjacent to some industrial center, thus enabling individuals who have part or full-time employment to qualify in a satisfactory way.

The establishment of subsistence homesteads under the direction of a local organization will enable deserving heads of families to provide the kind of comforts in life for their families and at the same time enable each person to eventually own his home. The forming of such communities will provide a higher standard of living and cause each such community to take an interest in providing for their families conveniences and necessities such as schools, playgrounds, recreation centers, civic clubs, and other kinds of organizations which will have for their purpose the bringing about of a higher form of living.

The committee in charge of this new plan of providing assistance to various groups has made a careful study for the purpose of finding out the average yield made by farmers living on small tracts of land adjacent to industrial centers and has come to the conclusion that the financing of such projects by the Government will not work a hardship on anyone selected by the local organization to receive such benefits, and in addition the plan agreed upon will cause such money set aside for this purpose to be eventually repaid to the Government.

I feel that the plan relating to this subject will take care of a long-felt want, as the nation that is the most successful is the one that has the greatest number of home owners. Any step or movement that is put into effect which will result in a happier citizenship will always make our citizens more loyal and more appreciative of its form of government.

President Roosevelt and his cooperators are determined to take every step possible to relieve conditions throughout the Nation at the earliest date possible, and I am happy in the thought that it is my privilege to vote for the kind of humanitarian laws that have been created thus far.

THE HONORABLE HENRY T. RAINEY, SPEAKER

(May 8, 1934)

Fellow Oklahomans: Again, through the courtesy of Station KASA at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

I feel certain that those who are listening in today will be interested in knowing something about one of our most distinguished public servants, who at present occupies the high position of Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Honorable HENRY T. RAINEY, whose home is at Carleton, Ill. As far back as history records, the citizens of every nation have been more or less hero-worshipers to the extent they are swayed by the influence and public record of those who are credited with outstanding accomplishments. During the early period of the United States no one ever dreamed that the men who played such an important part in establishing what was then a little Republic would be honored and held in high esteem as we view them today. It is for this reason that no person can tell with any degree of accuracy how important a figure any individual may be until after a person's work on earth has been finished. A striking example of this fact is the history of President Andrew Johnson, the tailor, who never went to school a day in his life. He, possibly, was criticized more severely than any other person that ever occupied a high position in connection with our Government, and on one occasion, when impeachment charges were brought against him, it was by a margin of one vote that he was found not guilty. Yet, within the last few years, the decisions which brought about his unpopularity and public criticism have been passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States and upheld, thus causing certain individuals to again make a search of the records, which has resulted in a number of the present-day historians proclaiming him as one of the greatest Presidents that ever ruled over this Nation.

Who knows but that in the days to come the subject of this discussion, Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, the silver-haired Speaker, will occupy in the minds of the historians as high a place as many of those who have already gained fame in this Nation.

I remember in the years gone by that ex-Senator Joe Bailey, of Texas, the late Champ Clark and, now Vice President, John N. Garner, and others used to engage in deep and earnest conversations in the cloakroom for the purpose of discussing the habits and traits of many of our prominent citizens who have played an important part in the making of history in this country, and on one occasion I heard Senator Joe Bailey say that, in his opinion, a number of those who were then performing service in the House and Senate were as well qualified, if not more enlightened, than the framers of the Constitution in continental days.

I remember very distinctly my first visit to the House of Representatives, where I saw for the first time the present Speaker. I was attracted to his fine physique, well-shaped head, and his bushy white locks of hair. The thought came to me that he represented the most typical type of a statesman that I had ever seen, and from that day to this I have watched him grow in power as his constitutents returned him each election year to the Halls of Congress until he now occupies the highest position that can be assigned to him by this branch of the Government.

One of the most impressive speeches that I have a distinct recollection of was delivered by Speaker RAINEY on the subject "The return of the pelican flag", which was captured by northern troops from a Louisiana company or regiment during the Civil War. The words that came from his lips on this occasion portrayed as fine a sentiment as I have ever heard expressed from the representative of the victors to the vanquished.

I do not know very much about the Speaker's home at Carleton, Ill., other than the distinguished writers have said that there is no more beloved citizen than he—always courteous and willing to render a service to his fellow man. By occupation he is a farmer, and he maintains a lovely home, well improved, a few miles from the city. I do not have any information concerning the kind of crops he produces; yet he is a grower of livestock, the same being a species of deer imported from Japan. On one occasion he sold a carload to one of Oklahoma's most successful producers of oil and shipped the same to him by express, which must have been an expensive item—anyhow, they reached their destination without the loss of a single animal. I have always noticed that if a person were interested in wild life, he must be a lover of nature and the great out-of-doors. It has been said that Mr. RAINEY was never sick in bed a day in his life, and when it is taken into consideration that he is now over 70 years of age, this is a record that exceeds any other person of my acquaintance.

I can remember in the days gone by when the Ways and Means Committee brought in the tariff bill that Mr. RAINEY could always be counted on to make one of the principal speeches; and regardless of how many times he was interrupted by the opposition, he was always able to carry on a running fire of debate and maintain his position in a way that was pleasing to his associates on the committee. What a team he, the Hon. Cordell Hull, now Secretary of State, and Hon. John N. Garner, Vice President of the United States, made when all were serving on this committee! When they were teamed up solidly backing a tariff measure, it somehow reminded me of a pack of hounds in full cry—and they usually accomplished success to their hearts' desire.

I am sure that no one has ever served in Congress who has taken more pains than Speaker RAINEY in caring for his constituents. Likewise his grace and ease are always apparent when contacting the public. Those whom he has the honor to represent realized a long time ago that if he were retained in Congress the day would come when his rank would be sufficiently high to the Speaker of the House. They knew that the Ways and Means Committee was the most powerful, and that as a member of the same he was bound to climb to success.

The Honorable HENRY T. RAINEY is of Irish ancestry, and we are told that one of his relatives in Ireland reached the age of 129. Those who have recorded his history tell us that he never smoked until he reached the age of 40, thus showing that he had the kind of self-control that caused him to be matured in a very fine way before he decided to participate in the luxuries of tobacco. Since that date he has enjoyed his pipe and cigars immensely.

Some of you who are listening in will remember the Great Commoner, William Jennings Bryan, who was born in the State of Illinois. It was my privilege to be an invited guest to his last birthday party, given in the city of Washington. I have also visited the town where he was born, and remained as a guest one night in his old home. He and Mr. RAINEY were crusaders together, fighting the battles of democracy, promoting the great silver plan, which was probably the most discussed subject ever entered into a campaign. Mr. RAINEY has carried on all during the years, favoring liberal legislation which would cause silver to occupy an important position in our monetary system. He realized that until this Nation gave to silver the kind of valuation that will be comparable with the value placed on the same by countries like China, India, and others throughout the world, our citizens cannot hope to export our surplus products in a satisfactory manner. The enactment of recent legislation relative to this subject is in accordance with some of the views of the Great Commoner and the present Speaker of the House.

As I view Speaker RAINEY, he is one of the youngest Members of the 300 Democratic legislators in the House of Representatives. It matters not what form of entertainment is provided by those who hold high position with the Government, Mr. RAINEY is always equal to the occasion and plays his part well. I remember the feast of watermelons furnished by the present Secretary of the Department of Commerce, Hon. Daniel C. Roper, and no one enjoyed the same more than he. On another occasion the Texas Cow Band from Amarillo came to Washington and put on a big barbecue. I furnished several 10-gallon hats for this occasion, and no one seemed to get more pleasure from this outing than our present beloved Speaker. Recently I attended a reception given in honor of Frank Buck, "Bring 'em back alive", who, by the way, is a Texan, and as I walked into the spacious dining room the first person to be seen was our beloved Speaker, mingling with those who had come together for the purpose of having intimate contact with the most successful capturer of wild animals in the world. I think I am warranted in saying that when it comes to clean sports, Mr. RAINEY obtains as much enjoyment when it comes to playing the games as anyone I have ever known.

When the National Recovery Administration was first set up I was requested to submit a list of prominent citizens in the various States of the Union who would be willing to help put over this great program, and, of course, Mr. RAINEY was one of those named for Illinois. He took to this work like a duck to water, using an airplane to visit many sections of the United States. It was my pleasure to meet his plane at Oklahoma City, and when he stepped out of the same he appeared to be enjoying this kind of transportation as much as I did my first ride on a train. I accompanied him in the car when we paraded in Oklahoma City, and those who heard him that night at the fair grounds when he gave in chronological order an account of the legislation he had sponsored while a public servant, realized that here was a party worker more than threescore and ten years of age who was willing to brave all kinds of weather and conditions in order that he might do his part for his party and the Government he loved so well.

I have enjoyed my association with this great, distinguished American. I am proud of the honor he conferred upon me 2 years ago when he volunteered to send to the people of the district a letter for the purpose of giving to my constituents his opinion of my standing and service in Congress. We may have differed on some of the important issues, yet there is not a person anywhere who has a higher admiration for the fine service he has given to the Nation than I; and it is my opinion that at some time in the future our section of the State can be honored with a visit from him in order that you who are listening in may know who guides the destiny of the House of Representatives in its present deliberations.

CURRENCY REFORM

Fellow Oklahomans: Again, through the courtesy of Station KASA at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week, I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all of those who may be listening.

Congress can be compared to a race horse making the last lap, or coming in on the home stretch, as the thought uppermost in the minds of all the leaders is to conclude the legislative program which has been approved by President Roosevelt, and then go home.

I think it worth while to compare conditions that exist today with those that were so well known to every person prior to the time that this administration came into power. It will be remembered that cotton was selling at 5 cents per pound, wheat at 25 to 30 cents per bushel, and corn from 15 to 25 cents per bushel, which meant that farm products were bringing a price far below the cost of production. This situation meant ruination to those who till the soil, as the revenue derived from such crops was not sufficient to enable a person to pay taxes, much less anything on farm loans or other kinds of obligations.

The banking situation was terrible; many such institutions had closed their doors, and others were about ready to gasp and give up. In many of the States wholesale foreclosures of farm lands were in evidence, and the people were so disheartened and discouraged that many felt that it would be a miracle if conditions could be changed in such a way as to enable them to retain possession of their homes.

For 2 years prior to the time that President Roosevelt took charge of the reins of this Government an unofficial organization in the House of Representatives composed of approximately 100 Members had been holding night sessions for the purpose of preparing the kind of bills that would bring about the kind of relief that was so badly needed. This was called the "legislative forum", and I felt highly honored when my colleagues asked me to act as its secretary. Committees were selected and assigned to make a study of the banking situation, cost of production of farm commodities, relief for distressed mortgagors, inflation, and other subjects relating to the needs of the Nation.

Acting for this organization after our program had been completed, I arranged with the new leaders of the administration a number of conferences and, together with the chairmen of the respective committees, such bills as had been prepared were presented and fully discussed. We were consoled by the results obtained, as many of the ideas presented are now a part of the so-called "new deal."

When it is taken into consideration that the source of practically all wealth comes from the ground, it is a fair statement to say that unless the producers of the necessities and comforts of life are able to make a fair profit or to receive just compensation for their labor, no other occupations can be maintained in a healthy or satisfactory manner, and this fact is proved by what took place in 1929, when stocks on the big exchanges crashed in such a manner as to cause millions of our citizens to lose most of the money that they had invested in certain kinds of securities.

I do not believe that any administration ever came to power and was confronted with such a bad economic condition as existed 2 years ago. It is to the credit of President Roosevelt that he said in substance, "Some of the ideas and legislation that the administration is sponsoring may not work; however, if the new laws are unworkable I will be the first one to admit such a fact, and we will try something else." He realized that a nation with 10,000,000 people out of employment could not be happy and that something had to be done to give them an opportunity to provide for themselves and families food and clothing. To do this it was necessary that Congress appropriate large sums of money and in addition provide the kind of machinery that would bring about a reorganization of industry and the kind of Federal control that would cause all occupations to deal honestly with their employees. One of the first bills relating to this subject was the National Recovery Act, which was sponsored by the powerful Ways and Means Committee, of which I am proud to be a member, that set aside over $3,000,000,000 to be used for this purpose, and with lightning rapidity men of high integrity were assigned to the duty of setting up the kind of organizations that would quickly provide the necessary machinery to start the wheels of progress moving once more. Thus came into effect the C.W.A., P.W.A., and many other bureaus that have been designated by alphabetical letters that are now known so well to all of our people.

Human nature is so constituted that regardless of the kind of program that is put into effect there will be miscarriages of justice to the extent that some will not be dealt fairly with, and this result always brings about criticism. However, when it is known that President Roosevelt asked Members of Congress to take no action that would be construed as political when it came to dealing with humanity, one can readily understand why Members of Congress have kept their hands off and allowed the various county administrators to proceed with a free hand. There are those who feel that much of this money has been wasted in high salaries and that the various organizations set up have been topheavy, with some who have received more pay than should have been allowed. Yet, regardless of such criticism, the fact remains that in every county in the United States many of our deserving people have been given food and employment which has enabled them to be tided over until a new crop could be produced.

At present cotton is bringing more than 10 cents per pound, which is 100-percent increase over that which it sold for 2 years ago; wheat and corn and other farm products likewise are bringing a much higher price, and there isn't anyone who would be willing to go back and experience the same conditions that were in evidence 2 years ago.

The money situation is not satisfactory to all concerned and never will be; yet the guaranteeing of deposits in Government supervised banks has brought about the kind of stabilization and protection in financial affairs that is beneficial to every person in the Nation. Over $2,000,000,000, according to a statement made by Mr. Black, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, has come out of hiding, and when it is taken into consideration that as long as this law remains on our statute books, there can be no more bank crashes, this result should be pleasing to everyone. I am very proud that our district can take the credit for introducing the first bill of this nature ever presented to either branch of Congress, and in addition sponsoring the hearing which finally resulted in the enactment of the law.

The next step that will have to be made relates to inflation, as unless conditions can be brought about so that capital will seek an investment many industries will be hampered because of their inability to obtain loans necessary to enable them to carry on in a successful way. At present the Nation is confronted with an inward cancer that is eating the very vitals out of our Government, and this is the issuing of nontaxable securities amounting to billions of dollars, which cause investors to place their money in such a way as to remove the same from normal channels.

At present I am having the drafting committee prepare a bill which would cause greenbacks to be printed or issued equal to two and one half times the amount of free gold and silver that the Government has on hand; also to print money against the securities held or owned by the R.F.C., Federal land banks, Farm Credit Administration, and other organizations that have loaned money to industry and accepted securities for the same. Such a law would enable this Government to take up billions of dollars of value in outstanding bonds and other forms of securities, thus putting to an end the policy of issuing tax-exempt securities.

The presenting of such a bill will, of course, bring a howl from those who are termed "big business." They are satisfied with the present policies of the Government, which enables them to invest their money in such a way as to escape the responsibility of paying income taxes. In other words, they are not interested in the welfare of our people, neither do they care what happens to the Nation, so long as it is possible to obtain profits in this manner. They assume the same attitude as the big international bankers did with respect to the law guaranteeing deposits in national banks. They realize that the old adage is true—"There is always good fishing in troubled water"—and that when times are bad and money is scarce those who have cash are able to derive a better bargain and to reap rewards in the way of profits clear out of reason. It is this kind of a parasite that is fastened on our Government that must be destroyed, if normal conditions are to be restored; and, while it may take a few years to arouse a sufficient amount of public sentiment to bring about the desired results, I propose to continue working along this line until a new situation will be brought about, so that capital heretofore invested in Government securities will be forced to go elsewhere for an investment, thus bringing about a situation that will cause every person who can give ample security to have the means of obtaining sufficient money to enable them to carry on.

I am sure that one of the most important laws that has been enacted during the present session is the one sponsored by the Ways and Means Committee called the "revenue bill." This legislation represented some 6 months' study on the part of our Committee for the purpose of stopping up the leaks which had enabled many of the big bankers and others kinds of capitalists to escape from paying into the Treasury that amount which was really due and was necessary to defray the expenses of running this Government. It is unfortunate that certain citizens of our Nation have adopted the policy of using many kinds of subterfuges, such as dummy stockholders, fictitious corporations, and other kinds of set-ups for participating in wash sales and other kinds of transactions in order to defraud our Nation, and this bill is a step in the right direction, as it will enable our Treasury to have more funds in the future to support the policies that have been put forth in the so-called "new deal."

Everyone realizes that since the World War the party in power put into effect the kind of legislation that was disastrous to our citizens and our Nation. Such errors of policy practically destroyed our foreign commerce; caused much of our capital to be invested abroad, and in addition made many nations angry, to the extent that they went elsewhere to purchase products that were needed for human consumption. Everyone should realize that when a bad situation is brought about because of bad legislation enacted over a period of years, that it isn't possible overnight to bring about a sudden restoration of better times, and it is going to be necessary for any new administration to gradually work out of such a bad situation and it will take some time to do so.

Therefore, I am hoping that our people who have suffered because of conditions that existed in the past will be willing to be as patient as they can and have confidence in our great President, who is doing everything within his power to reorganize the Government, rehabilitate the Nation, and put into effect the kind of policies that will bring about a new order of the day sufficient to enable those who till the soil and others to have a proper livelihood in the future.

I feel deeply honored because of the confidence that has been reposed in me by the splendid citizenship of the Seventh Congressional District. All during my term of office it has been my constant aim to render the best service possible to everyone who has brought any matter to my attention and, while I may have made some errors, my conscience is clear with the thought that I have cooperated with the President in his great humanitarian program, hoping that the time would not be far distant when our people could smile and be happy once more.

SOME EXPERIENCES IN EARLY OKLAHOMA

Fellow Oklahomans, again, through the courtesy of station KASA at Elk City, I bring you a message from Washington. At this same hour next week I hope to discuss topics of general interest to all who may be listening.

To me old Indian Territory, Oklahoma Territory, and the State of Oklahoma have a peculiar fascination; probably more so because it is the section of the United States that was set apart for the purpose of colonizing many Indian tribes. I remember very distinctly when a boy in Texas that the news was flashed to all of the towns on the H. & T. C. Railroad that a special train of wild Indians were being brought over this line from Florida to Indian Territory. Nearly all of our citizens rushed to the depot, and especially the youngsters, to get their first glimpse of wild Indians. These were a portion of the Apaches who had been captured by General Miles and taken to Florida as prisoners of war. They were being taken to Oklahoma Territory to remain as prisoners of war at Fort Sill in the hope that Chief Geronimo would be willing to adopt the ways of a white man and stop committing depredations. The train slowed down and we could see stationed between each car a soldier fully equipped with firearms to prevent anyone escaping.

I think this impression caused to be lodged in my memory a desire to see more of the Indians, for when I reached the age of 16 I signed up to accompany a trainload of cattle to Checotah, Indian Territory, being willing to ride on a freight train and, by the use of a prod pole, keep the cattle from injuring each other. On arriving at our destination we were taken to the ranch headquarters and there given one of the most wonderful feeds, which consisted of beef, sour-dough biscuits, and other kinds of camp cooking, which to me was quite a treat. I saw the old Indian bucks and squaws with blankets around their shoulders as they sat and looked on while the cowboys unloaded the cattle and moved them to their destination. There was no land in cultivation, the forest was virgin, and to me the surroundings had the appearance of the kind of wild life that was inviting from many standpoints.

A few years later the press announced that a great land drawing would be held in what is now western Oklahoma, at El Reno, and that every person of a certain age would be given the privilege of drawing for a home, thus enabling each successful person to file on 160 acres of land of his choice. This fact so strongly appealed to me that I could not resist the temptation of trying my luck, and, in company with a young man by the name of Black, we purchased tickets and started on one of the most eventful trips of my life. We left Fort Worth, Tex., on the Rock Island Railroad, in a train loaded down with citizens of every type, who were seeking a new home, which presented a spectacle that can never be erased from my memory. When night came many were so tired that they laid down in the aisles until every inch of space was occupied by sleeping men, women, and children. As one went through the train it was necessary to step over their bodies. The thought was impressed upon my mind that homeless people will suffer practically any kind of hardship to better their own situation.

When we arrived at El Reno the crowd in evidence everywhere made one feel that this was an outpouring of humanity that had come from the four corners of the Nation in order to begin a new civilization. There was to be seen every kind of "fly-by-night" construction one could think of, such as eating stands, beer joints, gambling institutions, side shows, and hastily constructed wooden buildings occupied with small stocks of merchandise. Hotel accommodations were not sufficient to take care of the people and the young man who accompanied me and I took time about watching each other as we slept on an open lot that night.

The next day we qualified and saw our certificates placed in the building where the drawing was to take place at a later date. Then, being convinced that no good could be accomplished by remaining here, we went to the depot for the purpose of going home. I remember a train coming into the depot loaded down with home seekers. As fast as it unloaded persons desiring to leave filled the cars. Then a strange thing happened; immediately hundreds of people began to pile on top of the train, crossing over from a string of box cars. The officer, with a big club, started from the top of the train down to the engine to remove those who had perched themselves on top, and when he reached the engine and looked back there was just as many on top as there was when he started. This clearance was repeated several times, and finally the officials in charge gave up and the train pulled out with as many on top of the cars as there was on the inside.

To make a long story short, the land number drawn was so far down the line I did not think it worth while to go back and try to find a piece of unoccupied land; however, the impression gained on this trip was so fastened on me that it was not possible to resist the temptation to go to Oklahoma Territory and cast my lot with those who were willing to suffer the hardships of a new country in order to begin life anew. Therefore, I bought a ticket to the last station on the Frisco Railroad, which was Snyder, Okla., and for over 30 years I have been proud to call this my home.

It was not an easy matter for anyone to make a success in Oklahoma Territory, for the reason the soil was poisoned with weeds and other forms of vegetation to the extent that it took a number of years before it would produce in a satisfactory way. This was a section of the United States which was subjected to droughts and all kinds of peculiar weather conditions, which oftentimes brought about complete crop failures. Such conditions caused many to use up the small amount of surplus cash, and at least 75 percent of the early pioneers were forced to leave their new homes and go back to the place whence they came. I do not feel that myself or any other person is entitled to credit for having stuck it out, as there was a peculiar fascination in trying to inaugurate new plans relating to industry, town improvement, and other matters that kept one's mind occupied. It is true that this section was the collecting place for many of the so-called "misfits" in life, and there was also a congregation of some who were outcasts of society from other States in the Union, thus presenting a moral problem that in many instances was difficult to solve.

I remember distinctly the first visit of Carrie Nation, when she came to our little city with her hatchet in her hand, "hell bent" on breaking every saloon mirror and preaching the doctrine of opposition against those who used the filthy weed termed "tobacco." I was standing on the steps leading up to the hall where she was scheduled to make an address, and as she passed me I saw her forefinger flip a cigarette out of the mouth of a bystander, which amused me very much and left him as hot as a firecracker.

From a small beginning, which consisted of the breaking of furrows to lay out streets in straight lines, I saw, first, a tent town, then wooden shacks, afterward brick buildings. Then came the telephones, and what a thrill it gave to our citizens. Later came the cyclone, killing over one-fifth of all of our people. The telephone company abandoned our community; however, we were possessed with the kind of determination that could not be defeated, and we bought equipment and built a new system, being determined that our people were entitled to have as many conveniences as could be obtained.

Then it was my privilege to serve as president of the commercial club, and we went out after every kind of an industry that could be tempted to locate in our midst, thus obtaining a compress, oil mill, and what was at one time the largest railroad station and eating house in the State of Oklahoma. We participated in town-site fights, county-seat elections, and at times it looked as though we had matched more trouble than could be taken care of in an ordinary lifetime; however, the spirit of conquest intoxicated all of us in such a way that we persevered, hoping that we had the kind of brains and energy that would finally give to our people a great emporium in the way of a city. Our expectations, however, in some respects fell short, yet we were contented in the thought that no finer set of people ever assembled themselves together than those who blazed the way for civilization in the little town that I am proud to claim as my home.

The attempt to create a new county which was named after the present Secretary of the Navy provided a vehicle that caused me to become a member of the Oklahoma Legislature; and notwithstanding the fact that they abolished the county during this service, it brought about the kind of acquaintances and knowledge that made it possible to seek higher positions, and I have always been proud that the good people of this section made it possible for me to be elected to the Oklahoma Senate without opposition.

Then came the time to redistrict the State into congressional districts, and for the reason the Seventh District had no representation in Congress, the opportunity presented itself to aspire for this high honor. This campaign was one never to be forgotten, as but few, if any, figured my supporters had a chance to meet with success; yet, by making an extensive campaign, using their old horse and buggy and other primitive methods, I covered every section of the 11 counties as closely as possible, and to the surprise of many, secured the nomination and was elected to the position I now hold.

My first trip to Washington was an eventful one. Being unexperienced in congressional matters, it was necessary to depend entirely on men like Scott Ferris and Charlie Carter, who were at that time oldtimers in legislative experience. I want to say that there never was or will be any finer types of true, loyal, patriotic, and kind Representatives from our State than these two great citizens. One of them has passed on to the beyond and the other remains a loyal friend and a splendid citizen of the State. It was through their help that I was given sufficient aid to make a proper beginning and to find out much concerning legislative procedure.

A few years thereafter the world was turned upside down by the war which engulfed many of our civilized nations. The experience in legislative matters and handling the people during this public struggle gave to a Representative in Congress a fine conception of the many matters that affect humanity. Every Member of Congress who served during this period was called on by thousands to look after the boys who had been torn away from their homes through the selective draft and carried to the battle fronts to perform the kind of service that would make possible the preservation of our Nation. All during this terrible struggle my office rendered the best assistance possible to everyone who presented any matter relating to the welfare of the soldiers. When the war was over, being anxious to help cut the red tape that was holding our lads in Europe, at my own expense I crossed the ocean, visited the various camps, inspected the battlefields, crossed into Germany, and before leaving conferred with the high officials of the Army for the purpose of helping solve some problems that were so delicate in nature as to prevent me from even now stating the same.

I met the Oklahoma troops at New York and Norfolk when they returned, and from that date until this I have taken the position that any lad who was forced to leave his home and bare his breast to the enemy's bullet should not only be provided for in the future but likewise his needy dependents should receive aid and assistance from the Government.

During this terrible struggle there was a class of citizens who remained at home and engaged in every kind of commercial activity one can think of for the purpose of enriching themselves. Corners were had on the staple commodities and necessities of life to the extent that many of our poor people were forced to pay exorbitant prices for the things they had to eat and wear. The Government was literally held up by those who were able to corner certain supplies that were needed to carry on the war. Unheard-of contracts were secured, millionaires were made overnight, in fact, it appeared that there was a class of people who had no more regard for the rights of humanity than they would have for the crushing of a fly. It is for this reason that I favor a measure that will bring about a conscription of wealth in case our Nation is ever forced into another war. Wars do not just happen; as a rule they are the result of distorted propaganda. It would not be possible to fight and win a war unless the morale of the people had been aroused to a certain extent. Therefore, those who have profited by the war and have caused this Nation to shoulder unheard-of obligations, should be forced to disgorge enough of their ill-gotten gains to keep the wheels of progress moving until our Nation can be put back to where it was prior to the beginning of this struggle.

When the World War was brought to a conclusion President Wilson wanted to put into effect the kind of machinery that would make it impossible for a few foolish nations to ever again start a movement that would engulf or endanger the citizens of the world. It was a noble effort; yet the same element in each country that profits from a war used every influence to thwart his efforts, and the result was an organization, called the "League of Nations", that did not—and probably never will—have the whole-hearted support of the many powers that exist in the various nations of the world. Money has always dominated over humanity, and when the two interests conflict money always comes out on top. Therefore the saving of democracy for the world, as was preached to the various citizenships involved, may result in an idle gesture unless there can be found some way to prevent human greed on the part of profiteers who seek troubled conditions in order to further their personal financial interests.

In our beloved land a great campaign was put on to uphold the principles of the golden rule, as was advocated by President Wilson, but again gold won and the influences of money indirectly took his life and brought the cause to defeat.

Then came into power the representatives of those who would destroy the principles of the Golden Rule, and because of their wonderful victory, some took it as permission to vandalize the resources of this Government for the purpose of enriching themselves in unethical and dishonest ways. There never was such an upheaval as was brought about by the revelation of the Teapot Dome scandal, the California oil reserve, the Veterans' Bureau, the Alien Property Custodian, and others who dealt the cards under the table; yet, because our country was prosperous the people turned a deaf ear to those who were trying to steer the Ship of State on a safe course and the old crowd who continued in power year after year, until the firebrands of revelation were about to start a conflagration that might have wiped from this Nation its present form of government, had it not been for the courageous utterances made by Governor Roosevelt, of New York, when he laid out a program of recovery which he proposed to put into effect if elected to the Presidency.

Two years prior to his election a small group of about 100 Members formed an organization called the "Legislative Forum." It was my privilege to be the Secretary of the same. We knew that our country was headed for the rocks and that something had to be done in order to give to our people the kind of safeguards which would enable them to preserve and protect their homes.

This organization divided itself up into committees, each being charged with the responsibility of working out legislation such as aid for the distressed mortgagor, cost of production for agricultural products, financial aid to the producer of various commodities, safer banking legislation, inflation of currency, and other measures sufficient to make out a rounded program. Bills relating to these subjects were introduced. However, the party in power did not or would not allow the same to receive consideration and our efforts were like seed sowed upon stony ground. Then came the new President, Mr. Roosevelt, and what a consolation it was to the officials of the Legislative Forum that his representatives were willing to receive suggestions which were given at conferences which lasted in some cases long into the night. We are happy that some of the ideas presented are not a part of the so-called "new deal."

Oftentimes, when a citizen is brought to the brink of despair, they forget that it was through their votes in the past that individuals were kept in power who wrongfully put into effect laws that took away their liberties. Oftentimes they forget that the former policies put into effect so incensed certain nations as to cause them to place a boycott on the surplus commodities produced in this country, thus clogging up the channels of commerce and preventing those things that we have to sell to flow into the markets of the world.

Oftentimes our citizens forget that when a period of distress is gradually brought upon a country, covering a period of several years, that it usually takes a corresponding amount of time to climb the hill or to regain that which has been lost. We are all prone to criticize when unfortunate situations come upon us, even though we may be partly responsible for such a result. Two years ago cotton was selling at 5 cents per pound and there was a condition of despair existing throughout our section that made the strong-hearted tremble as he looked into the future and realized that taxes could not be paid, installments on his home could not be met, and that ruin was looking him in the face.

I participated in the last campaign in Kansas. I saw millions of bushels of corn piled up in the fields. I heard of corn that was burned for coal in the various schoolhouses, it being cheaper and produced more heat units than coal, and the same could be purchased at 15 cents a bushel. Farm lands in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and other States sank to the lowest ebb. Foreclosure was the order of the day and it appeared to us in office that the time had arrived when the home owner might be turned out into the section lines, where he and his loved ones would be forced to be wanderers on the face of the earth. Then came the new deal, and from that moment to the present time, with lightning rapidity our great President has opened up the Treasury and poured money into domestic channels for the purpose of reestablishing the law of supply and demand, realizing that unless the producers of the commodities of life could have a fair price for the same, all other occupations would suffer in a like proportion and there could be no such thing as a restoration of normalcy in this Nation. I want to say to my radio audience today that everyone should be proud that President Roosevelt is at the head of this Government, and if we will all stick by him I believe everything will come out all right in the future.

HITLERISM

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by including a radio address delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered over the radio by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] on Thursday evening, May 17, 1934:

Ladies and gentlemen: During the 14 years preceding 1929, the American people literally poured vast fortunes into Europe. As everyone knows, these gestures of confidence have been met by repudiation. And, it now appears that the American investor in European securities can never hope to realize even a part of the interest on his loans. If this money, given so generously, had been used to rehabilitate our European neighbors, to feed their hungry, and to promote more tolerant governments, I think there would be no regret on the part of the American investor. But, when those in control of some of these governments not only repudiate their just debts but also employ what moneys they have to weaken our governmental structure by spreading among their nationals, within our doors, propaganda aimed at the destruction of our system, they are adding insult to injury and are pursuing a policy which is contrary to the best interests of the people of this Nation.

In the new government in Germany, for instance, we have a conspicuous example of irresponsibility which, in the final analysis, is malignantly antagonistic not only to our Government but also to the ideals of the worthy Germans who honor us by abiding with us. Hundreds of thousands of our citizens of German blood, when they felt their old country was in need, gave unstintingly and in full measure, large portions of the wealth they had accumulated here, in the hope that the fine traditions of old Germany might be preserved, and that she might quickly recover her rightful place among the leaders of advancement in every realm of human interest.

During the last year, however, it has become apparent to all that as long as the Hitler government is in control the dream of these old Germans can never be realized. For this new regime, instead of recognizing the sacrifice that the German people have made, has attempted to make them forget the debt the German Government owes to them by trying to instill in their hearts a contempt and an intolerance for the German Jew, whose only crime has been doing his part in war and in peace, at home and abroad, to carry aloft the high standard of German intellectuality of which he was so rightfully proud.

In order to foster this hatred against the Jew, the German ministry of propaganda of popular enlightenment during the last year has been authorized to appropriate in connection with its activities in foreign countries an amount varying from 30 million to 40 million reichsmarks, equivalent to about $16,000,000. Couple this sum with last year's increase in her military budget of 352,000,000 reichsmarks, or $140,000,000, and we get the total of $156,000,000, which is more than 15 times the annual interest requirements of the German Government's direct obligation to the American people, most of which, it so happens, is owed to Americans of German blood. And again, this sum represents more than 12 percent of all German obligations held by American investors who, in time of Germany's need, were friendly enough to lend. Thus are the American people placed in the position of paying for the very propaganda that is aimed at the overthrow of American institutions. If Germany were to put the money she is using to persecute the Jew into paying her debts to our citizens, she would have a better claim to our confidence.

Here, at this very hour, in Madison Square Garden, the Friends of New Germany, a Nazi organization, is making its first public test of strength in an effort to win sympathy for the Hitler regime in spreading a most insidious form of propaganda predicated entirely upon racial hatred.

As a Member of the House of Representatives, and as a citizen who cherishes a love for our institutions, I welcome this public meeting arranged by groups whose affiliations with nazidom cannot be doubted. I find it a curious and interesting paradox that the Friends of New Germany should, in seeking the right to hold its meeting, fall back upon the arguments of free speech and the arguments of free assembly to which our democratic society is dedicated while at the same time propose to set up officially and unofficially a regime which would abolish in practice and principle all the foundations of democracy. I welcome this meeting because it will bring into the open the Fascist and antidemocratic principles for which the Friends of New Germany stand. I welcome this meeting because it will present, I hope, an object lesson to all Americans who cherish and believe in the Constitution of our democracy and the liberal traditions which have been preserved through 150 years of progress. I welcome this meeting because I know it will make the real American people more firmly embrace the old sense of established order, the old confidence in constitutional Government, the old tolerance of our neighbor, and it shall make us determine that these things which we hold so dear shall not be swept away by prejudice's putrid presence.

For 8 years, the Nazi Party has made an effort to find a footing in the United States, but only in the last year, since the rise of Hitler to power, has it enjoyed any degree of success, for since that time, the Hitler Government has made a concerted effort to invade the United States by sending to our cities and towns thousands of secret-service agents and by dumping upon our people millions of dollars worth of literature with the immediate object to stir up racial discord similar to that which exists in Germany and with the ultimate object of creating sympathy in America and to make us forget the obligations that Germany still owes us.

I do not believe that the Nazi will ever succeed in controlling the National Government, but I do believe that if the Nazi are permitted to have their way in this country, they may succeed in stirring up racial and religious animosities, in infesting local governments in our country to such an extent that the practice of democracy will be trampled on in a way which will seriously affect our economic recovery. And I protest against permitting any foreign government to attempt to do these things, and I charge that, although the Hitler Government still ostensibly retains its status of a friendly nation, it is guilty of a deliberate betrayal of that friendship, despite the denial from Berlin that the local Nazi Party is in any way affiliated with the German National Socialist Party. The Hitler Government and the Nazi Party have set up in the League of the Friends of New Germany an organization whose aims and purposes parallel those of the Nazi Party. The dues from the American organization are returned in part to the treasury of the Nazi Party in Germany, and the work of the organization here is directed by the Nazi Party in Germany and the leaders of the organization here are responsible to the Nazi Party in Germany. One of the first tasks undertaken by the League of the Friends of New Germany is to divide the loyalty of Germans living in America and to divert it to the Fatherland. On January 13, 1934, a proclamation was issued by the Nazi organization outside of Germany, which was reproduced in the Nazi papers of America, declares in part—and I quote—"our work in foreign countries must be focused at the creation of a front of Germans abroad, a front which is not directed against any state or country, but as a front for Germany. The Germans abroad will know for the first time in history that only their bodies are abroad, their souls being with the Germans in the Reich, and that all Germans, abroad and at home, are united in the eternal communion of fate of German men, created by Adolph Hitler."

This is the proclamation issued by the Nazi Party of Germany, and I call your attention to the fact that by the later decree of February 19, 1934, officers of the Nazi Party and of the Government were declared to be on a parity. What this pronouncement preaches is deliberate treachery to the United States. The record of Nazi Germany has shown in the last year that it stands for the abrogation via terrorism, legal and physical, of democratic government in all that it implies, of the rights to free speech, free assembly, free press, equality and free development, free religion, free culture, and honest differences of opinion.

In Nazi Germany there is complete regimentation of population and all institutions. Conformance to the Nazi preachment or the concentration camps is the rule and that rule they want to establish in the United States, and to bring it about, the Friends of New Germany which constitutes the direct link with the Hitler Government and the Nazi Party, was organized.

The evidence at hand suggests that through its accredited representatives in this country, the Hitler Government is seeking control of our public institutions and that it is conducting a wide-spread espionage system on the activities of the United States Government and a section of the population of this country.

The League of the Friends of New Germany today has more than 20 centers throughout the United States. It has set up storm troops wearing the uniform of the Nazi storm troops of Germany and carrying out the same function. Through methods of terrorization it has seized control of German communal, sports, musical, merchants', and workers' organizations in this country and reorganized them as subsidiaries of nazidom.

As a recent trial in California proved conclusively, Nazi agents affiliated at one and the same time with Silver Shirts, the League of the Friends of New Germany and the Nazi Party, have been seeking to discover the military secrets of the United States Government. More recently Nazi agents have been seeking to set up units in the National Guard throughout the country for the ultimate purpose of seizing control of our national defense. An attempt is being made to reach the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Our lecture platforms, our universities and schools, have been deluged with exchange professors and exchange students, whose function it has been to voice the Nazi principles. Our press has been flooded with Nazi propaganda. Our libraries have become the haven for the surreptitious distribution of the most libelous literature published by the International Propaganda Bureau of the Nazis.

There is reason to believe that some of our best-known promotion and publicity agents in this country have succumbed to the lure of Nazi gold and have become the agents for dissemination of Nazi propaganda in the American press.

The repeated disappearance of large volumes of mail dispatched from and to important Jewish organizations lends weight to the suspicion existing in the minds of these organizations that even the United States post office is not free from the Nazi invasion.

The Nazi espionage system has extended to private homes and servant girls are pressed into service to spy on their employers for the purpose of securing reprisals against relatives in Germany for any hostility to Nazidom.

To support and to give form to the movement against the Jew in America, the Friends of New Germany have organized the D.A.W.A. The D.A.W.A. is the abbreviated name for the German Protective Alliance and is the exact duplicate of the organization set up by the Nazi in Germany a year ago for the purpose of boycotting her Jewish inhabitants. Its purpose, openly expressed in the Nazi publications in America, and in the secular press of the country, is to boycott the Jews and other boycotters of products made in Nazi Germany.

In German societies, among German groups, the D.A.W.A. has deliberately created a false impression that the boycott against the products made in Nazi Germany which is today being practiced by such American organizations as the American Federation of Labor, is being persecuted against German-Americans. This is in direct defiance of the truth, in preachment and in practice of all groups, whatever their religious denomination, who are responsible for the boycott movement in the United States. Boycott against products made in Nazi Germany is a spontaneous act, the inevitable expression of condemnation of a policy of oppression and terrorism practiced by the Hitler Government against its own nationals. Contrary to being illegal as claimed by the D.A.W.A., boycott is a weapon recognized by international law.

As a matter of fact, I personally, would have nothing but contempt for any Jew who would knowingly trade with a nation that used the profit of that trade to help destroy his people. The D.A.W.A. in America follows its parent organization in Germany even to the extent of issuing what is known as the "German blue eagle" to all stores who refuse to patronize those who have business traffic with the Jews or other boycotters. This is a deliberate attempt to interfere with recovery in America and it is, in my opinion, a deliberate betrayal of the National Recovery Administration.

The meeting which is being held tonight in Madson Square Garden under the auspices of the Friends of New Germany and its subsidiary, the D.A.W.A., is an attempt to spread the virus of anti-Semitism in this country, and it is my belief and my earnest hope that the meeting will be met with a condemnation and the repudiation of all thinking Americans who value the democratic institution.

I believe the time has come for the Christian forces in the United States to recognize the danger of this movement and to unite for the purpose of conducting an organized and responsible campaign to counter the invasion of Hitler in this country.

To date the entire burden of countering Nazi propaganda has been met by the representative bodies of the Jews, who are the immediate victims of Hitlerism. I refer to such an important organization as the American Jewish Congress, which has done such a valiant piece of work in arousing the world to protest against the victimization of Germans by the Hitler Government.

Hitlerism today has come to our own shores. It threatens not only an important section of the American people but the foundations of American society. Its threat is to all America, and the safeguarding of America should be the undertaking of all Americans.

LABOR LEGISLATION NOW PENDING SHOULD BE ENACTED TO INSURE INDUSTRIAL PEACE

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I receive complaints from all corners of my district concerning the hardships which follow increased prices for necessities when there is no corresponding increase in wages. I get complaints about the wide-spread and common disregard for the N.R.A. regulations. There are complaints, and justifiable ones, too, about the little fellows being squeezed by the big, "fat" boys.

It has been clearly recognized that men and women must be counted as persons, not as mere hands and that they must have some active part in the control of the industry to which their lives are given.

Trade unions, as I see it, were organized out of the necessities of a situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Unionization is essential to give employees opportunity to deal on an equal basis with their employers.

Governments must recognize the right of men collectively to bargain for human objects that have at their base the mutual protection and welfare of those engaged in all industries. Labor must no longer be treated as a commodity. It must be regarded as the activity of human beings, possessed of deep yearnings and desires. The business man gives his best thought to the repair and replenishment of his machinery, so that its usefulness will not be impaired and its power to produce may always be at its height and kept in full vigor and motion. No less regard ought to be paid to the human machine which, after all, propels the machinery of the world and is the great dynamic force that lies back of all industry and progress.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent a State which has been brought from last to first place in the liberality of labor laws. Fifty-four, yes, fifty-four bills have been passed by the State legislature. Among them were the workmen's compensation act, wage and house laws for women and children, widows' pensions, and the law declaring that labor shall not be treated as a commodity or an article of commerce.

We in New York State are proud of the champions we have in the cause of labor. There is Al Smith, Franklin Roosevelt, Bob Wagner, Jimmy Walker, and last, but not least, my colleague, Jim Mead, who served in the State legislature with all four back in 1914 to 1918.

These men had nothing in common except a common cause—to make the old mossbacks of their party abandon their conservatism, to secure a new deal for labor and the man in the street.

They have been at it ever since 1910, and have done quite well. In their time they have been connected with the greatest labor reforms since the abolition of slavery. And the end is not yet.

I trust there will be no more struggles in futile opposition to the right of collective bargaining on the part of employees, and I recommend that destructive labor policies, encompassing the use of spies and deputy sheriffs as paid company guards and the contracting of individual agreements which are not free-will contracts, be abolished. The recognition of the right of representation and the prompt hearing of grievances provide the open door to reasonable and just settlements.

The employment of women and minors in trade and industry at wages unreasonably low and not fairly commensurate with the value of the services rendered is a matter of grave and vital public concern. Many women and minors employed for gain throughout the country are not as a class upon a level of equality in bargaining with their employers in regard to minimum fair wage standards, and freedom of contract as applied to their relations with their employers is illusory.

Since a very large percentage of such workers are obliged, from their weekly wages, to support themselves and others who are dependent upon them in whole or in part, they are, by reason of their circumstances, forced to accept whatever wages are offered them.

The constant lowering of wages by unscrupulous employers constitutes a serious form of unfair competition against other employers, reduces the purchasing power of the workers, and threatens the stability of industry.

Social workers and officials of State labor departments are reporting from different parts of the country the reappearance and rapid growth of conditions in industry which it was thought had been definitely abolished by law and public opinion. Illegally long hours, low pay, violation of protective labor legislation, and direct cheating of employees are among the conditions reported as appearing in certain industries in which children and young workers are employed in large numbers. No locality has a monopoly of such conditions, but naturally they are most frequently reported from the industrial States. According to one authority, however, conditions have grown worse also in the beet fields of the West, an industry in which, it was noted some years ago, agriculture had taken on many of the aspects of factory work.

Concurrently with the general decrease in employment, there has been in certain industries an increase in the number of workers aged 16 and 17. Census figures show that while in general the number of youthful workers declined between 1920 and 1930, a few increases stand out strongly.

In several Southern States the percentage of textile workers of 16 and 17 years showed an increase since 1920; in the clothing industries in certain of the New England and Middle Atlantic States there has occurred a shift from older to younger employees. Thus in the clothing industry of Connecticut and Rhode Island the number of workers of 16 and 17 increased by 123 and 283 percent, respectively, whereas in New Jersey the increase was 81 percent; in Pennsylvania, 62 percent; and in Massachusetts, 52 percent.

Undoubtedly an increase in workers in this age group might exist together with the maintenance of good conditions and fair wage scales, but there is strong evidence that in many cases hours, wages, and working conditions are all far from satisfactory.

It is my hope that Congress will not adjourn until vital legislation, now pending, has been passed. If it does adjourn without considering such relief legislation as the 30-hour week bill, the Wagner disputes bill, the Crosser bill to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill, the Crosser bill to establish a 6-hour day for employees engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and the old-age pension bill, the workers may seek to obtain by strikes that which they hoped to receive by legislation.

Congress should realize the situation, with its attendant responsibilities, by passing this legislation or similar measures in order to prevent the riots, suffering, hunger, and misery that invariably follow in the wake of strikes.

Our efforts for recovery should include a program to secure and maintain industrial peace.

BANK-DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit-insurance, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3025, with Mr. FULLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. STEAGALL. Now, I want to discuss briefly another provision of the bill.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUCE. May I suggest that the House and the public are greatly interested in the other part of the bill that the gentleman is about to discuss. We have been here over 6 hours, and I want to suggest that the gentleman resume his discussion tomorrow of that part of the bill relating to bank deposits.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the suggestion of my friend from Massachusetts, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3025) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. GAVAGAN, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for May 24, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, when I made my request this morning that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next, I was under the impression that it would only take an hour or two to finish the bill then under consideration, and that we would be able to close general debate on this bill and begin its consideration. The gentleman from Alabama, Chairman of the Committee on Rules, and I have made a promise to take up the rule making in order the bill for a national park in the Everglades of Florida tomorrow. The time is limited, but the situation is such that we shall have to consider that in the morning.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. I want to inform the gentleman that I have had no requests for time on this side. My own judgment is that the bill can be considered with expedition.

Mr. BYRNS. I am gratified to have the gentleman say that, and sometimes it is best to settle these things while in the humor to do it. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts agree to limit or cut down the debate? The suggestion was made that possibly the gentleman might be willing to cut off half an hour of his time, with the understanding that the gentleman from Alabama will do the same and save us an hour of general debate.

Mr. LUCE. I think I can do it, but I will reserve the decision until morning.

Mr. BYRNS. I hope the gentleman will work to that end. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the order made this morning at my request be vacated. If we get through with the pending bill tomorrow, I shall renew the request. Of course, it will be subject to objection, but I hope the House will agree to rescind that order, because it is necessary that no chances be taken on the passage of this bill this week, because next week will be crowded with business.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman is going to throw the "snake park" in, that is a different proposition, and I am not anxious to cooperate.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will agree to it, it will expedite business tomorrow, because we might have to stay all night to finish the bill rather than to adjourn over with this important bill pending.

Mr. SNELL. I want to cooperate, but there is no business of more importance than the bill that we are now considering.

Mr. BYRNS. That was the understanding that we had. It was expected to call it up several days ago, and the gentleman's insistence prevented it.

Mr. SNELL. I know, but we had made an agreement on a certain program for that day.

Mr. BYRNS. That is true. I must say in all fairness that the author of that bill is unavoidably away at the present time. He is going to be here tomorrow under the promise that it will be taken up. Of course, we are not in a position to disappoint him.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman would not sidetrack an important measure like this for that, would he?

Mr. BYRNS. Having made this promise, not understanding that this condition would arise, we are bound by the promise. That is not going to take very long.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, it will take some time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, le me refresh his recollection in this way: When we had this controversy up we had some private conference about it, and it was agreed that the rule for the consideration of the Florida bill should be deferred until tomorrow, and that that should be taken up and I have the right-of-way. That was the understanding, and I think the gentleman will recall it.

Mr. SNELL. I told the gentleman at that time that that was a privileged matter, and he could bring it up any time he wanted to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how there can be any obligation to set aside a bill which the committee is urged to take up and finish, in order that some bill that is scheduled and expected to be taken up following that may be reached.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, last week the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, and I gave our solemn promise to the gentleman from Florida, Mr. WILCOX, who is going to fly back here and be here tomorrow, to take that bill up.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not going to object—I would not think of objecting—but I am suggesting to the gentleman that the bill we have is of sufficient importance that when we start upon it, it does seem to me that we should be permitted to finish it. I hope that will be allowed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think that when the Majority Leader Mr. BYRNS got the unanimous consent of this House today that this House should adjourn over tomorrow night until Monday he saved a hundred million dollars at least of the people's money in the Treasury.

There are some applications for rules in the Committee on Rules right now which are being favorably considered by some members of the committee, one to appropriate $12,000,000, when there is not a cent due, and on which the House has already, after debate decided against by a vote of nearly 3 to 1. We must kill that measure. The Rules Committee is now considering the advisability of bringing in a rule to make that bill in order. Delay will stop it. There is another bill that this morning by a close vote of 5 to 6 in the Rules Committee——

Mr. O'CONNOR. How would the gentleman know that?

Mr. BLANTON. One of my colleagues who knows told me.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then he violated the rules.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that is done here every day. If the newspapers can find out things that happen in executive sessions, surely Members of Congress have the right to find out something about what is going on in Congress. By a close vote they are going to bring in a rule here to establish a bad precedent which Congress has not followed since 1878. It has not been in vogue since 1878. It is going to cost this Government in the ultimate many millions of dollars. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] performed such a great service to the country this morning in getting that unanimous-consent agreement to adjourn over until Monday that if he did not do anything else during all his valuable service here, for it he deserves to stay here for the rest of his life.

Mr. BYRNS. I take it the gentleman is excusing himself for making an objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to object, and thus help our leader save a hundred million dollars.

Mr. BYRNS. Is the gentleman willing to stay here tomorrow night to complete this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am willing to come here in the morning at 9 o'clock and stay here continuously, if necessary, until half past 3 o'clock the next morning to finish this bill, and that is exactly what we ought to do. Let us stay here tomorrow and finish the Steagall bill. I think the gentleman will have enough of our Democrats to back him up to hold the House in session every minute until we pass the Steagall bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to inquire whether if we meet at 11 o'clock, will we go along and finish this bill first?

Mr. BYRNS. We will not, because I am under a sacred promise, and so is the gentleman from Alabama, and I am sure the gentleman does not want us to violate the solemn promise that we have made.

If the House wants to vote the bill down, all right and proper, but it will come up tomorrow, whether it is taken up first or last.

Mr. BLANTON. It will save staying here tomorrow night into the wee small hours of the morning.

Mr. SNELL. I consider the majority leader is responsible for the program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Very well. I serve notice upon the House now, and upon the gentleman from Wisconsin particularly, and I hope he will stay here, that we will endeavor to stay here tomorrow night until we get through.

Mr. BLANTON. And we will back up the gentleman and stay here tomorrow night until we do finish this bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. I will be here.

MEETING OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, and I do so at the request of the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have the permission of the House to sit tomorrow during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE RIVER AT LAREDO, TEX.

Mr. WEST of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, H.R. 9185, authorizing the International Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Laredo, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WEST]?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram from Mr. J. K. Beretta of San Antonio, Tex., who claims that this bill would be ruinous to his interests. He wants this bill held up awhile until he can write to the gentleman about it.

Mr. WEST of Texas. He has been before the committee already.

Mr. BLANTON. He asks that it be held up until he can communicate with the gentleman. The gentleman knows that he is one of the leading citizens of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not call up the bill until he can hear from Mr. Beretta.

Mr. WEST of Texas. I have had a half dozen telegrams and letters from him already.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman heard from him today?

Mr. WEST of Texas. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Beretta is such a good friend of mine that I am forced to object for the present until the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WEST] can hear from him.

MEMORIAL DAY CEREMONIES, GETTYSBURG NATIONAL PARK

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HAINES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I have requested these few minutes of the time of the House today to extend a most cordial invitation from the people of my district to the Membership of both Houses of Congress to attend the Memorial Day ceremonies at our national park at Gettysburg, Pa., which district I have the honor to represent.

On May 30, at 4 o'clock p.m., the President, Mr. Roosevelt, will arrive in Gettysburg, and at 4:30 p.m. he will deliver an address in the national cemetery, where most of our Presidents since the great war between the States have gone at least one time during their administration and spoken to the people of the Nation, giving them a message that all of us should want to learn from the experiences of the past. This message will be delivered within a very few steps of the exact spot where the immortal Lincoln delivered his great classic that shall live in the hearts of the men of this Nation forever.

It would be most fitting indeed, Mr. Speaker, if the Membership of this House, my colleagues, would spend the day set apart to pay tribute to the memory of those who made the supreme sacrifice for a cause they believed to be just, upon this hallowed soil. Gettysburg is a beautiful small city of about 6,000 souls, and the national cemetery is a credit to this Nation and perhaps the greatest of our national shrines, for almost a million people each year visit this sacred spot. Here you will find a fine citizenship, proud of their historic community, anxious to extend the hand of welcome to all who come within their gates. It is no more than a 2 hours' drive from Washington to Gettysburg, and in that drive you will pass through some of the finest agricultural country in Maryland, passing through historic Frederick, over good roads, and with scenic beauty unsurpassed.

I should like to recommend that you leave here early in the morning and either motor in your own cars, taking your families with you for a day of recreation and solemn hour of sacrament and consecration, or you can go by bus that will likely arrange for your comfort and safe journey at a reasonable cost. I am most anxious, Mr. Speaker, to have you come with me to Gettysburg as my guest on this day, and trust that you will be able to do so. I should feel greatly honored, Mr. Speaker, if the entire Membership of this House would allow me to arrange for their comfort and have special courtesies extended to them in Gettysburg upon the occasion of the President's visit.

I should like to give each Member a special courtesy card and an "official sticker" for your car when you get into Gettysburg, and which will enable you to have special consideration given to you, for the people of my district, especially the citizens of Gettysburg, are anxious to have you as their guests on this occasion.

When you get to Gettysburg, you will find about 100 specially trained guides, who know the history of this field and who, for a very small sum, will guide you over the battlefield. You will find about 35 miles of improved highway on the battlefield and the field covering an area of about 40 square miles, with approximately 16,000 acres of land that is well kept. There are two C.C.C. camps that are doing a wonderful piece of work, making this place more beautiful and conserving for our posterity this historic spot.

Here you will find almost 850 monuments erected by the States and the National Government, monuments of stone, bronze, and marble, to perpetuate the memory of these heroic dead, erected by a grateful people both from the North and from the South. Last fall I spent a day with our brethren from Alabama at Gettysburg, where the wonderful women of that State have erected a most beautiful monument to the memory of the valiant men from that great State, and I was deeply impressed with the fine sentiment expressed by those who spoke upon that occasion.

Those of you from Alabama who have not seen this wonderful monument erected by the Daughters of the Confederacy in your State should by all means go to Gettysburg and see what honor and recognition are given to the men of 1861–65 who were willing to die in a cause that they believed to be right.

In addition to these monuments there have been erected five steel observation towers, 3 of them being 65 feet in height and 2 of them 75 feet high; also 464 bronze tablets, 37 bridges and culverts, 5 bronze equestrian statues, 30 bronze statues on pedestals, 417 cannons on carriages, 15 sets of farm buildings, 5 southern monuments, erected by the States of Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Texas, and Alabama. The Government owns more than 2,500 acres of the land and each year is making the necessary improvements and giving the care that I am sure a grateful people expect. I said to you that a million people each year visit this sacred shrine. These people come from every country in the world, and include every distinguished individual who visits our shores. These come to learn the story of that great conflict that gave to this Nation a rebirth, that gave to our people a realization of its unity and a vision of its united destiny. These valiant men of 1861–65 are rapidly being called to their last resting place, and we cannot perpetuate the memory of those who died unless we be interested in seeing that the unity then realized, the vision then seen, might be exemplified in us and the things that we do.

Come to Gettysburg on May 30. Get in touch with me as soon as possible so that I can arrange to have a seat reserved for you to listen to the address of our President. This invitation is to all of you, my colleagues, and I trust that I may have the pleasure of seeing you in Gettysburg upon this occasion.

It is believed that this will be the greatest event in the history of the national parks; more people are expected than upon any other occasion; and for this reason I am most anxious to arrange for your comfort.

Should any of you desire that I arrange for a guide for you, I shall be pleased to do so, making arrangements for that guide to meet you at a designated place and at a certain hour.

I should like all of you who can to take this beautiful drive to Gettysburg, by way of old Frederick, then from Gettysburg go to the beautiful small city of Hanover, where the first blood was shed above Mason and Dixon's line in the Civil War, and you will find a city bustling with industry and great in its civic pride and accomplishments. Then drive down to historic old York, on your way back to Washington. York you will find a city alive with industry, a city that ranks third in diversified industry in the great manufacturing State of Pennsylvania, a city that is noted for having been the seat of the Continental Congress during the darkest days of the American Revolution.

From York you will then drive down the historic old Susquehanna Trail to Baltimore, which will afford you a day of enjoyment because of the wonderful scenic beauty, good roads, beautiful fertile hills and valleys, inhabited by a fine American citizenry.

I stand ready to assist any Member of this body in arranging for his Memorial Day program at Gettysburg, and I hope that I may have the pleasure of seeing all of you at Gettysburg on Memorial Day, May 30.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CONNERY. Reserving the right to object, in spite of the fact that we are adjourning from Thursday to Monday, which slows us up a little in our effort to get names on the 30-hour-week petition, nevertheless, I feel confident we will have those names by the first of the week, and I certainly will not object.

Mr. BYRNS. May I say in all sincerity that I had no idea in my mind of adjourning over Friday and Saturday on account of any petition upon the desk.

Mr. CONNERY. And I will certainly take the word of my distinguished leader.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, notwithstanding the fact that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will not permit us to be in session on Friday and Saturday when we have no other business to take up, I shall not object to this request.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to help the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] save a hundred million dollars to the country, which will be saved by adjourning this House over to Monday, as such action will stop many bad measures from being passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I am curious to know how the gentleman from Tennessee is saving the country a hundred million dollars. That is a lot of money.

Mr. BLANTON. By adjourning the House from Thursday night until Monday will keep numerous bad bills involving large sums from being passed this session, and I firmly believe that it will save at least $100,000,000. The House has its work practically finished, and it behooves us to adjourn sine die as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 3673. An act to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2442. An act for the protection of the municipal water supply in the city of Salt Lake City, State of Utah;

S. 3114. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges in the State of Oregon; and

S. 3355. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p.m.), the House, pursuant to its order heretofore entered, adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 24, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

(Thursday, May 24, 10 a.m.)

Continuation of the hearings on H.R. 9689, amendments to the Railway Labor Act.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

481. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a proposed draft of bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the naval radio station, Libugon, Guam, on April 15, 1932; to the Committee on Claims.

482. A letter from the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting copy of a report sent to the President by the Tariff Commission in an investigation, for the purposes of section 3 (e) of the Industrial Recovery Act with respect to matches; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

483. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Legislative Establishment, House of Representatives, fiscal year 1934, in the sum of $7,776.07 (H.Doc. No. 380); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

484. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency estimates of appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1933 and prior years, in the sum of $824.52, and supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1934 in the sum of $917.04, amounting in all to $1,741.56, together with a draft of a proposed provision affecting an existing appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 (H.Doc. No. 382); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

485. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1933 in the sum of $139, and supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1934 in the sum of $87,500 and for the fiscal year 1935 in the sum of $45,656; amounting, in all, to $133,295, for the Department of State (H.Doc. No. 383); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

486. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting drafts of proposed provisions pertaining to the appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs, 1935, Bureau of Customs, Treasury Department (H.Doc. No. 384); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. DIETERICH. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is absent from the Senate on important public business.

Mr. FESS. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] is absent on account of illness, and that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H.J.Res. 347) to prohibit the sale of arms or munitions of war in the United States under certain conditions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE DEATH OF HON. BRAND WHITLOCK

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a message has just reached me announcing the death of Brand Whitlock, a very warm personal boyhood friend of mine, who achieved a great career as United States Ambassador to Belgium during the World War. Only last week he was pronounced by a high authority in Belgium the greatest Ambassador our country had ever sent to that country.

Mr. Whitlock was an independent thinker in religion and politics, the talented author of a great many books which were widely read by all classes of people, and with it all he was one of the most lovable characters I have ever known.

Mr. President, it is with a sense of profound sadness that I announce the receipt of this message from France, where Mr. Whitlock had lived for the past few years.

MARKETING OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES (S.DOC. NO. 183)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury reporting, in further response to Senate Resolution No. 209, in relation to Government securities offered to the public during the present fiscal year, which, with the accompanying exhibits, was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COUZENS subsequently said: Mr. President, on March 15, 1934, the Senate adopted a resolution—No. 209—calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information concerning the issuance, the purchase, the sale, and the price of Government securities. A report addressed to the President of the Senate has now been furnished. I ask unanimous consent to have the report printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H.J.Res. 347) to prohibit the sale of arms or munitions of war in the United States under certain conditions was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 3675) to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the "war minerals relief statutes" (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. STEPHENS:

A bill (S. 3676) to provide for a census of unemployment, employment, and occupations to be taken as of November 12, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3677) to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 128) to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of the bequest of the late Charlotte Taylor, of the city of St. Petersburg, State of Florida, for the benefit of Walter Reed General Hospital; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending tariff bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. It is my intention to call it up later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LONG submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FINANCING OF HOME CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3603) to improve Nation-wide housing standards, provide employment, and stimulate industry; to improve conditions with respect to home-mortgage financing, to prevent speculative excesses in new mortgage investment, and to eliminate the necessity for costly second-mortgage financing, by creating a system of mutual mortgage insurance and by making provision for the organization of additional institutions to handle home financing; to promote thrift and protect savings; to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act; to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to provide for controlled expansion of the currency and the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates, now in that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, much as I regret to have to raise an objection to any request submitted by the Senator from Minnesota, I feel constrained, while the tariff bill is under consideration by the Senate, to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then I serve notice that in the next morning hour, or when the unfinished business, the tariff bill, shall have been disposed of, I shall move to discharge the Finance Committee from the further consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 233 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3319) to amend section 233 of the Criminal Code, as amended, be taken from the calendar and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I do not want to object; I merely wish to mention the fact that the bill is one which I introduced, and I am entirely agreeable to the request just made by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. In connection with this matter I request that two telegrams may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., May 22, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.:

Am informed Senate bill 3319, amending Criminal Code, section 233, so as to give Interstate Commerce Commission certain jurisdiction over "all persons, including corporations or partnerships, engaged in interstate or foreign commerce", as distinguished from common carriers, has been reported favorably by Senate Judiciary Committee. Effect of this bill will be to bring under jurisdiction of Interstate Commerce Commission all persons or corporations transporting gasoline or other refined products of petroleum in interstate or foreign commerce, including owners of private automobiles. I think bill is objectionable on many grounds: First, the police power of the States is sufficient and is being exercised to fully protect the public against improper handling or transportation of gasoline within the various States; second, the jurisdiction conferred on Interstate Commerce Commission by this bill would lead to a conflict of power between the Government and the various States; third, above all, the bill would subject private persons and corporations, and especially oil companies, to unnecessary and burdensome regulation by Interstate Commerce Commission. I will appreciate your giving this matter your most careful consideration and opposing the measure, if you think it consistent with public interest.

J. C. DENTON.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., May 22, 1934.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Advised Senate bill 3319—BARBOUR—attempts to restrict State jurisdiction over transportation of explosives, including petroleum products, when moving via motor vehicles. This imposes undue hardship on State regulation and doubly so in view of fact that Interstate Commerce Commission does not regulate motor-vehicle transportation. Bill should be recommitted for public hearing pending passage motor-vehicle legislation.

CORPORATION COMMISSION,
PAUL A. WALKER, Chairman.

PROCEDURE IN IMPEACHMENT TRIALS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I respectfully invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] to the request I am about to make. In view of certain proceedings which are now or may soon take place in another branch of Congress, I respectfully ask that Senate Resolution No. 242 be read and considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S.Res. 242), which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "report", to strike out "in writing to the Senate upon the completion of the taking of testimony, including therein a certified transcript of the same" and to insert "to the Senate in writing a certified copy of the transcript of the proceedings and testimony had and given before such committee"; on line 10, after the word "purposes", to insert "subject to the right of the Senate to determine competency, relevancy, and materiality"; and on line 12, after the word "Senate", to insert "but nothing herein shall prevent the Senate from sending for any witness and hearing his testimony in open Senate, or by order of the Senate having the entire trial in open Senate", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That in the trial of any impeachment the Presiding Officer of the Senate, upon the order of the Senate, shall appoint a committee of 12 Senators to receive evidence and take testimony at such times and places as the committee may determine, and for such purpose the committee so appointed and the chairman thereof, to be elected by the committee, shall (unless otherwise ordered by the Senate) exercise all the powers and functions conferred upon the Senate and the Presiding Officer of the Senate, respectively, under the rules of procedure and practice in the Senate when sitting on impeachment trials.

Unless otherwise ordered by the Senate, the rules of procedure and practice in the Senate when sitting on impeachment trials shall govern the procedure and practice of the committee so appointed. The committee so appointed shall report to the Senate in writing a certified copy of the transcript of the proceedings and testimony had and given before such committee, and such report shall be received by the Senate and the evidence so received and the testimony so taken shall be considered to all intents and purposes, subject to the right of the Senate to determine competency, relevancy, and materiality, as having been received and taken before the Senate, but nothing herein shall prevent the Senate from sending for any witness and hearing his testimony in open Senate, or by order of the Senate having the entire trial in open Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to study the resolution carefully. It proposes a short route and has much to commend it, but let me ask the Senator from Arizona if it was considered by the full Committee on the Judiciary and whether hearings and discussion were had?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this resolution was not reported to the Senate on a poll of the committee. It was laid before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and was discussed. Of course, not all the members of the committee were present, but a legal quorum in person were present. All those members present voted in favor of the resolution as amended.

The resolution provides that the Senate, if it desires, upon order, may retain its ancient practice such as we have always known, or if the Senate so desires and makes an order to that effect, the presiding officer may appoint a committee of 12 Senators, who would go into the country and take the testimony rather than bring the witnesses here. The attorneys for the respondent and the managers for the House would, of course, have the right to appear before the committee and interrogate all witnesses. The testimony would be taken and certified to the Senate. The Senate, under the terms of the resolution, has reserved to itself the right to pass upon all questions of competency, relevancy, and materiality, and the Senate specifically reserves the right to hear any one witness or all of the witnesses if it chooses.

After the testimony is printed and laid before the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment, the respondent may argue and the managers may argue before the entire body of the Senate, and a vote is then taken by the entire Senate in accordance with the Constitution and our present rules.

Mr. MCNARY. Have the able Chairman and members of the Committee on the Judiciary any doubt about the power of the Senate to proceed in this fashion?

Mr. ASHURST. I have no doubt. I am certain that it is constitutional. If I am permitted to speak of what may be the view of Members of another body of Congress, many of the lawyers of another body also take the view that this is not repugnant to the Constitution. No right of the respondent is taken from him. The testimony is taken by the committee if the Senate so chooses, and the committee selects its own chairman.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think it should be said in the consideration of the resolution that the procedure contemplated by it constitutes a departure from the practice which has heretofore prevailed in the Senate in the trial of impeachment cases. It has been the custom of the Senate to sit as a court and to hear the testimony while sitting as a court, the result being that long periods of time are required for the consideration of impeachment cases. Inasmuch as the question as to whether the Senate shall proceed in accordance with the resolution or under its former custom is reserved under the terms of the resolution, I believe the resolution should be adopted.

There has been raised by some a question as to the power of the Senate to proceed under the terms of the resolution. A brief study of that question has tended to convince me that there is no question of constitutionality involved in the resolution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I may say, having studied the question for a number of months, that it is within the power of the Senate to impeach a man without any evidence at all. The Senate may convene, and a motion may be made that the charges of the House be sustained, and on a vote of the Senate the impeachment may be sustained. There is no question of the constitutionality of the method proposed in the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I agree with the conclusion and had already stated the conclusion, but, of course, the statement of the Senator from Louisiana raises a question of propriety to which I would not give my assent. I think there should be an orderly trial upon the evidence in all cases of impeachment, because, while it is not a criminal procedure, it involves action and results which very seriously affect not only the public interest but the interest and welfare of those who are charged with misconduct in office.

The practice of the Senate in the enactment of legislation—in fact, the practice in all legislative bodies with which I am familiar—is to refer matters of legislation to the consideration of committees, and when the committees have made their report, the Senate, or other legislative bodies, proceed to legislate. As I understand, it is not expected that under the resolution the committee would report a recommendation, but that the committee would merely hear the evidence and return it to the Senate for such action as the Senate might choose to take.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator's conclusion is correct. It is not expected the committee shall have any power to make any recommendation whatever.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In any event, when a case of impeachment arises and the Senate has before it the obligation of proceeding in that case, it will then be for the determination of the Senate whether to conform to the custom to which I have already referred or to proceed under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think I understand the purpose, and I think I sympathize with the endeavor of the resolution, but there are some things in connection with it concerning which I am not entirely clear.

An impeachment is a trial of the very highest character, infinitely more important from my standpoint than a mere penal investigation. It is now sought by the resolution, as I follow it, to have the testimony taken by a committee which shall be appointed by the Senate or by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and to report subsequently the testimony thus adduced. A trial means, of course, a trial of the questions of fact which are involved. Not only does a written record enter into that trial, but a determination of the facts depends quite as much upon the witnesses who are called, their appearance on the stand, their mode of giving testimony, and the like. All of us who are familiar with trials understand that.

That the procedure we have at present is an irksome one, fatiguing to the Senate and disagreeable to us all, none will deny. We should like, if we could, to substitute some other method for it. But in a case of impeachment, a matter of such grave concern and importance, is it well for us to indulge in a trial, as it were, vicarious in character, which really will be conducted by a committee appointed by the Senate? I am not clear on that point.

I do not want to oppose the resolution. I should like it to go over for a day and have it taken up tomorrow or at any time that may be convenient to the distinguished Senator who presides over the Judiciary Committee. I should like to consider during that time and have those who listen to me here consider whether it is a wise provision, notwithstanding the annoyances which are attendant upon it so far as the Senate is concerned, for us to alter the procedure by which in reality—because after all in reality it will occur—the questions of fact shall be determined by a committee of the Senate rather than by the Senate itself.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], in language which well becomes them, have discussed some of the features of this resolution. Possibly a score of Senators during the past 6 months have urged the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee to study this question. I have examined all the English cases, and have read carefully all the American cases. As the Senator from Arkansas pointed out, an impeachment is not a trial in the sense of a criminal case. It is somewhat analogous to the English scire facias, or removal-from-office procedure.

I should be the last one to deprive the Senate, or to deprive the respondent, if I could, of the right to have the Senate hear all the witnesses.

Three days before our Constitutional Convention of 1787 met Warren Hastings was impeached at the bar of the House of Lords in England for misbehavior in office as the ruler of the people of India, whose numbers were counted by millions; and the mails coming across the Atlantic brought to the lawyers in the States here accounts of the accusations against the respondent, Hastings, particularly accounts of the eloquent speech of Burke and Sheridan's gorgeous denunciation. The trial of Warren Hastings lasted, I believe, 11 years, and of the more than 170 peers who commenced the trial only 29 sat and pronounced the verdict at the close; and some of the 29 were peers created since the trial began and who, therefore, had not heard either the opening or much of the evidence. During the trial of Hastings at times only three peers were present.

I cannot believe that the respondent, under our resolution, would have any vital right taken from him if a committee of 12 Senators were appointed merely to take the testimony and report a transcript of the testimony to the Senate. The able Senator from California will perceive that the resolution reserves to the Senate the right at any time to hear any one witness or all of them. The able Senator from California—one of the best lawyers the Pacific coast ever produced—is quite correct in his statement that juries and senates naturally wish to see the witness; they want to observe his manner; they can tell more about his approach to truth and accuracy by seeing him than they may by reading the transcript. This resolution protects that feature and reserves it to the Senate. I am sure that on the suggestion of any Senator at any time during a trial the Senate would at once send for the witness.

In view of the Senator's request—which he has a right to make—that the resolution go over, I cheerfully consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

SALE OF ARMS OR MUNITIONS OF WAR

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a joint resolution (H.J.Res. 347) which has just been passed by the House, authorizing the President in his discretion to prohibit the sales of munitions of war in the United States for transportation to both of the warring countries in the Chaco. The joint resolution was first introduced by me in the Senate, was considered by the Foreign Relations Committee, which unanimously reported it, and that report is on the desk.

I have asked to have the House joint resolution substituted for the joint resolution of the Senate, which request has been granted. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, as it is a very important matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 347) to prohibit this sale of arms or munitions of war in the United States under certain conditions, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That if the President finds that the prohibition of the sale of arms and munitions of war in the United States to those countries now engaged in armed conflict in the Chaco may contribute to the reestablishment of peace between those countries, and if after consultation with the governments of other American Republics and with their cooperation, as well as that of such other governments as he may deem necessary, he makes proclamation to that effect, it shall be unlawful to sell, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President prescribes, any arms or munitions of war in any place in the United States to the countries now engaged in that armed conflict, or to any person, company, or association acting in the interest of either country, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

SEC. 2. Whoever sells any arms or munitions of war in violation of section 1 shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 2 years, or both.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. The House joint resolution is identical with a joint resolution introduced by me in the Senate and referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. It was considered on yesterday by that committee and there was a unanimous report in favor of it. The joint resolution has just passed the House of Representatives by unanimous vote. It is considered a very important measure. The State Department has been in conference with representatives of South American countries for some time with regard to the matter. There has been some criticism from abroad because of our apparent delay in taking action.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator if the joint resolution has gone to the calendar?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is now asking to take it from the calendar?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. McNARY. How long has it been on the calendar?

Mr. PITTMAN. The original Senate joint resolution has been on the calendar 2 days.

Mr. McNARY. I am quite in accord with the principle involved in the joint resolution. I do not know what emergency exists to pass upon it before a call of the calendar is had, when every Senator is notified of the measures that may be considered. The Senator is suggesting a practice which I do not like. No one has had notification of the matter, though I presume most Members of the Senate favor it.

Mr. PITTMAN. There was reported out and passed by the Senate a general munitions war embargo bill. That measure gave to the President of the United States discretion to determine to which countries he would apply the embargo. The Foreign Relations Committee amended the measure so that the embargo had to apply to both warring countries or to neither of them. The joint resolution is so drafted as to meet the objections made to the original measure and to conform to that principle. For that reason those members of the Foreign Relations Committee who insisted on the amendment of the former measure have approved of this one.

The emergency is simply that two South American countries are warring and have been for a long time. Nearby South American countries have been doing all they could to bring about peace. The joint resolution will probably not present the war which is going on but it will limit the field, because they are attempting to buy bombing planes, and if they get possession of bombing planes they will carry the warfare beyond its present territory to noncombatants, involving women and children. I think we all agree that the sooner we can stop the war the better it will be for all.

Mr. McNARY. Is the committee unanimous in its report?

Mr. PITTMAN. Absolutely unanimous.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEACHERS' OATHS—ARTICLE BY DR. GEORGE J. RYAN

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask to have published in the RECORD an article written by Dr. George J. Ryan, president of the New York Board of Education, entitled "Teachers' Oaths", which appeared in today's Washington Herald.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of May 24, 1934]

TEACHERS' OATHS

(By Dr. George J. Ryan, President New York Board of Education)

(The following article is of timely interest because of the recent controversy occasioned by the Ives bill, concerning teachers' oaths of loyalty, which was passed by the New York Legislature and which Governor Lehman vetoed on the ground that it duplicated existing laws.)

The American people for more than 150 years have enjoyed the greatest amount of liberty ever enjoyed by any people.

The guaranty of this liberty is contained in the Federal Constitution, which is the definition of the limits within which the American people consented to be governed by their representatives.

This Constitution provides for all of the freedoms that man has ever sought to achieve—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly, and freedom to think and act in accordance with the dictates of his conscience and judgment.

This Constitution has ever offered to the American people the fullest opportunity to seek life, liberty, and happiness. No other constitution, no other form of government, has guaranteed as great an amount of individual liberty or as sure a guaranty of these freedoms.

When one is asked to take an oath of loyalty to this Constitution he is asked simply to reaffirm his loyalty to the principles embodied in it. I think that the superintendent of schools, Dr. Harold G. Campbell, has stated our position as clearly as it could be stated when, in his letter to the United Parents' Association, he said in substance what has been stated above, but I shall give his exact words:

"To my mind, a pledge of loyalty to the Constitution that has made possible the greatest amount of individual freedom in all history is a pledge to the continuance of this freedom and a safeguard against its restriction.

"All of the freedom that we hold sacred—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of assembly—is guaranteed in this Constitution. To affirm one's loyalty to it is but to affirm loyalty to the maintenance of the rights, liberties, and freedoms that we Americans have ever enjoyed—to speak and act in accordance with the dictates of conscience and judgment.

"Without this Constitution, freedom of teaching might not exist, and freedom of speech and freedom of the press might be restricted. If we hold these things worth while, we must hold to this Constitution and be loyal to it."

The newspapers of William Randolph Hearst are to be congratulated for their enunciation of the American doctrine and for their clear statements of what the Constitution means and what loyalty to it should mean.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT—ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered over the long-distance telephone to the Richmond Hill (N.Y.) Kiwanis Club luncheon by Postmaster General James A. Farley, May 24, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

May I take this opportunity to give you a "long-distance" thank you for your kindness in listening to me today. I should like to be with you. Civic and social organizations such as yours perform a healthy and needful function in our Government. You in your way keep alive the spirit of service. You know, as do I, that there have been times in the history of our Government when the spirit of service to our country has been forgotten. Some of these periods of indifference, selfishness, and greed are so recent as to be familiar to all of us. I maintain the belief that we now have in this country given expression to a national policy and a national philosophy of unselfish service to the people—the mass of people—under the inspirational leadership of an unselfish President—Franklin D. Roosevelt.

If the national leadership has borrowed from your organization's own ideal, it betokens a kinship between you in New York and elsewhere and us in Washington. It is a kinship that seeks to find a common ground for service to our country. It is a kinship that finds reward in the good that can be done. There is an old Jesuit saying that more good could be done in the world if there wasn't so much dispute about who is to get the credit for it. Here in Washington, all of us are loyally serving under the humane and spiritual guidance of a great leader. We have not hesitated to follow President Roosevelt's banner; we have been proud to serve in his army—and with him we can rejoice today that the Nation is on its way to better days.

There are critics of government; there are critics of policy; there are critics of results—but I know you will agree with me that this is no place for critics of purpose. You may not see eye to eye with us as to the methods we have used and are using, but you cannot take us to task for the spirit and purpose of our efforts. We are trying; we are, it is needless for me to assert, imbued with a high purpose. And we have but to turn back the pages of the calendar to those dark days of early 1933, when gloom was everywhere, when business was prostrate, when banks were tottering, when the very fiscal system of the Government itself hung in the balance.

I can never forget the thrill that was mine, and I know must have been experienced by every American citizen who heard Franklin D. Roosevelt pronounce his fearless and forceful inaugural on that cold March day. "I promise you action", was what he said. And we got action—action that in less than 30 days replaced an unreasoning fear with a heart-stirring promise. Action that brought business back to sanity; that sobered an entire country; that gave us courage to turn our faces to the long, hard road that has led and is leading to better times for all.

With stout heart, intelligent foresight, patience, initiative, resourcefulness, and an abiding faith in divine Providence, he has kept up the fight that has slowly but surely enabled him to bring order out of chaos; given us time to take stock of our moral and material resources, and banished the fears of pessimism. It has been a hard road; but a confident, cheerful, and valiant leadership has brought us a long way on it, and now the way ahead seems easier and smoother.

So, I repeat, this is no time for criticism of purpose. The Roosevelt program is succeeding because it is based on the ideal of service to our country—real and definite service to the mass of our people.

You must admit that our pilot has a stout heart. He took the helm when every wave looked as though it might engulf the ship. To all practical purposes we were lost on an ocean, with even the compass not to be trusted. So, I say, every measure that was undertaken under President Roosevelt's leadership had as its chief aim the rebuilding of confidence of the people, confidence in themselves and confidence in our institutions.

The hot blasts of criticism are now blowing full force on some of these emergency measures. One of them is the National Industrial Recovery Act. Recently its operation has been assailed, not alone from one angle but from several. The left wing shouts "monopoly"; the right wing shouts "socialism." But between these two, the good ship N.R.A. has steered its course. It has done some things effectively. It has practically eliminated child labor. It has provided minimum wages. It has sought to reduce the hazards of illegal and unreasonable competition. It has, contrary to the assaults of its detractors, served to protect the "little man" in industry. It has consistently fought monopoly. Its very organic act prohibits it. The very aim of the N.R.A. is, as quoted in its statement of policy, "promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups * * * under adequate governmental sanction and supervision."

The purpose of N.R.A. in seeking to ban sales below cost is for the benefit of the masses, because sales below cost eventually produce two certain results—reduced wages and lowered standards of living for labor. The Recovery Act requires N.R.A. to protect both. The job of N.R.A., therefore, is to strike a balance between the interest of the consumer on the one hand and the wages of labor and small business on the other. It must aim for a price structure high enough to maintain small enterprise and labor wages and yet low enough to protect the consumer.

There may be inequalities in some of the codes, but, generally speaking, in the major industries they have functioned to the advantage of both the industry and the employee. The lumber code, for example, is assailed because it is supposed to hurt the little fellow. In July 1933 there were 13,636 sawmills in operation. In March 1934 there were 15,170, an increase of 1,534.

It may be popular to attack and assail some features of this code, but I am certain much of this attack originates with the same self-centered persons who a short 14 months ago were calling frantically on the Government to come to their rescue. The N.R.A. has served to bring the Nation's industry and business back to its feet. The trade figures and the production statistics all prove the point.

Just as selfish greed in business and industry is being curbed by the N.R.A., just so will the greed and selfishness of many of the evil practices of stock promotion and speculation be curbed by the stock-exchange regulation bill which has passed both Houses of the Congress and will soon be reported from conference. Whatever agency is set up for the control of stock exchanges in the final form of this legislation, you may be sure of one thing—there will be no undue curb on legitimate and fair practices and business in the purchase and sale of securities. The Government is not seeking to destroy what is right; it is seeking to curb and stamp out only those practices and customs which have in the past caused terrific and frightful losses to the investing public.

These and other new recovery measures all have as their one main thought, their one main philosophy, the upbuilding of confidence; the recovery of business and industry; the stabilization of trade and finance; in short, the return to our common country of its heritage of a sane and substantial prosperity.

We are on the right road. We are on the safe road. The American people are with President Roosevelt. Make no mistake about that. They recognize in him a leadership of that rare quality which history gives us but once or twice in a century. The people have an abiding faith that their trust in the Roosevelt program is well placed.

Just as the Tory Whigs a hundred years ago assailed the new day of common liberty that Andrew Jackson brought with him, just so are the Tory opponents of President Roosevelt today assailing the new dawn that has broken for the American people. Just as Andrew Jackson brought to the people a new concept of public right over private privilege, so has President Roosevelt created a new picture in the rebirth of opportunity for the average man.

I thank you.

TAXATION OF THE OIL INDUSTRY—ADDRESS BY B. H. MARKHAM

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered May 16, 1934, by Gen. Baird H. Markham, of my State, during the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla. It is an able and illuminating discussion of the double, treble, and quadruple taxation of the oil industry by the National, State, and local governments—the overtaxation of a single industry and the overtaxation of a single class of consumers. It is as conclusive as a mathematical demonstration.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAXES TO SUSTAIN OR TAXES TO DESPOIL?

I am pleased, indeed, to be granted the privilege of returning to Oklahoma, as "there is no place like home." I am doubly pleased on this occasion as I present the question of unjust, burdensome, and ruinous taxation—having assurance that I speak to those who fully appreciate and understand.

The American petroleum industry has been, and is being, victimized from a taxation standpoint in a manner and to a degree probably unparalleled in recent history.

The thought that there is no deliberate intention of destroying the industry is a source of scant comfort. It neither alters nor relieves the situation. Legislation and taxation which cause damage are no less destructive because they were intended to accomplish something else.

Government has accepted the responsibility for the present and future welfare of this and other industries. But, while one branch of the Government may be doing everything within its power to restore industry, another branch, largely due to a misunderstanding of this industry's problems, through punitive taxation, is very seriously handicapping this and other industries. Apparently some representatives in Government, both Federal and State, have not yet learned that the fundamental purposes of the National Recovery Act are the improvement of business and economic recovery.

The petroleum industry has withstood heavy punishment. It should take steps to make sure that future legislative psychology will not be based upon the argument that as this industry successfully weathered a depression under such handicaps, it will be able to absorb even more punishment under more prosperous conditions. Time and effort should be devoted toward making legislators and the public alike realize that this industry faces an era of high taxes, stern regulations, and narrow restriction that well might disrupt, if not destroy, any industry.

The situation, briefly, may be outlined as follows:

The tax bill of the industry now exceeds $1,000,000,000 a year. That is the equivalent of $1,000 taxes upon every worker.

The tax collector annually gets an amount of money exceeding 8 percent of the industry's $12,000,000,000 capital investment, regardless of whether the industry earns even the interest.

The annual tax upon gasoline, this industry's chief source of income, has increased from $1,000,000 to more than $700,000,000. That is the equivalent of $700 taxes upon every worker.

The gasoline tax rate has grown 7,500 percent, and the tax revenue has increased 6,000 percent in 14 years.

The average tax on the 24 gallons of gasoline extracted from a barrel of crude oil amounts, on the average, to $1.29. That is larger than the amount received from the sale of this commodity. It is equal to 100 percent, or more, of the wholesale price of the gasoline itself.

Federal taxes upon this industry provide nearly 20 percent of the total revenues collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, exclusive of income taxes.

The highway user, this industry's largest single customer, has been made the largest single taxpayer by most States and by the Federal Government.

The petroleum industry itself is one of the largest, if not actually the largest, of the Nation's industrial taxpayers. That means, also, that the workers of this industry and our customers are among the heaviest contributors to the support of government.

Every operation and product of this industry is taxed in some form or other. A total of 116 taxes are levied upon it, 24 by the Federal Government, 68 by State governments, 5 by county governments, and 19 by municipalities.

Taxes levied upon the operations, products, services, and upon the customers of this industry permit the tax collector to dip into the pockets of every customer, every investor, and every worker.

The motor vehicle and its owner represent the largest consumers of this industry's products. The fortunes of this industry depend largely upon the future of highway transportation. To handicap motor-vehicle operation is to injure this industry. That is the menace of excessive taxation and of unnecessary and restrictive regulation. Already some 27 types of taxes are levied upon the operator of the motor vehicle.

In 1933 the motor-vehicle tax bill reached a new all-time high, above $1,180,000,000. This represented more than 11 percent of all the taxes paid to all units of government—Federal, State, and local—in the entire country. The average tax per motor vehicle in 1933 has been estimated at $50.47, representing more than 25 percent of the value of the vehicle. In 4 years the average car is paid for over again in taxes. The Federal Government alone in 1933 took more than $257,000,000 in taxes from the motor-vehicle operator. That was three times the amount of such Federal taxes in 1932. In the past 2 years of taxation the Federal Government has collected, roundly, $350,000,000 from the motorist, of which more than $240,000,000 represented taxes on gasoline and $30.000,000 taxes upon lubricating oil.

Gasoline taxes alone have made motor-vehicle operating costs so expensive in some sections of this country that there has been for 2 years a drastic and discouraging decline in the registration and use of motor vehicles. Taxes upon gasoline are not only high in themselves, but they are duplicated by Federal, State, county, and local taxes. The average State and Federal gasoline tax in 1933 was, in effect, a retail sales tax of $43.59, a wholesale sales tax of more than 100 percent.

High gasoline taxes, first, because of their cost and then because of the tax evasion and other evils they create, are an absolute barrier to restoration of oil and gasoline prices to fair and satisfactory levels. Study of exactly comparable gasoline-consuming areas over a period of years definitely has revealed that every 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax rate reduces consumption by 5 percent. On that basis a 20-cent tax would abolish the use of gasoline as motor fuel. One State, with Federal, State, county, and city gasoline taxes reaching a total of 11 cents, already is better than half way to that maximum.

With gasoline tax rates at present exorbitant levels, fewer consumers can afford to consume. With tax evasion as prevalent as it has been, few marketers can hope to maintain a profitable price. History reveals that a sales tax of 10 percent is the highest that satisfactorily can be imposed and fully collected. The only possible method of ending the evils arising from gasoline taxation is to reduce tax rates to a level which makes tax evasion unprofitable and overcomes the sales resistance created by the additional cost represented by taxes.

The petroleum industry has supported the gasoline-tax method of financing highways. To the extent that these taxes, levied at reasonable rates, paid by all, and fully collected, bear a fair share of the cost of necessary and economically built highways, the full support of the industry is merited.

A study of the trend of gasoline prices and tax rates since 1919 reveals that while technical and other developments within the industry itself, and the effects of competition, have served to force prices to successively lower levels, the major influence for depression has been excessive taxation. You have only to compare prices, taxes, and oil company net profits in the past 15 years to realize that this industry largely has financed the building of the Nation's highways to its own financial detriment. I think you will agree with me that it is something less than advisable, so far as the financial welfare of this industry is concerned, to make possible the building of thousands of miles of good roads by taxing petroleum products, if the taxes become so heavy as to eliminate even the possibility of making a profit on the commodities sold in the expanded market created by those roads.

This is not a matter of selfishness. It goes deeper than that. It reaches down to that fundamental of fundamentals—self-preservation. As I see it, the basic reasons for the existence of the petroleum industry are, first, to render a service to the public, and, second, to make sufficient profit from that service to assure its perpetuation. Roads builded upon the wreckage of the American petroleum industry will be unsatisfactory to all concerned.

Another disturbing and serious factor in the gasoline-tax situation is diversion. In most States revenue from a reasonable gasoline tax, plus income from other reasonable motor-vehicle fees and taxes, would finance an extensive and adequate system of highways without taxing anyone other than highway users. However, with both Federal and State Governments using highway funds for other purposes, progress toward an adequate highway system is halted.

During the past 2 years there has been a noticeable advance in the unfortunate tendency on the part of the State governments to reduce or repeal the less costly taxes and place the entire burden upon motor fuel. This policy has had the support of unscrupulous politicians, as was to be expected, and of certain interests which fail or refuse thoroughly to understand the potential evils of taxing gasoline excessively. Reduction of these other taxes provides only a minimum of relief for taxpayers, perpetuates the excessive tax rates imposed upon motor fuel, and aggravates the evil of gasoline-tax evasion.

Still another depressing influence is destructive legislation. During 1933 more than 2,000 bills, inimical to the interests of the petroleum industry, were introduced in Congress and in State legislatures. The industry naturally expects a measure of regulation and restriction, but the industry's burdens are only augmented and its troubles aggravated by unnecessary curtailment, control, regulation, or restriction of its undertakings and quite without benefit to Government, industry, or public. Every session of Congress and of State legislatures produces hundreds of bills which would either increase the difficulty of doing business, reduce the possibility of making a profit, or both. Equally menacing are the attempts of various interests to disrupt or to destroy the industry's markets. The railroads particularly sponsor various proposals having as their objective the restriction of highway users. Their real aim is to impose burdens upon highway transportation and thus destroy what they call competition.

The public has, through the motor vehicle, acquired the means to travel when, where, how, and as it pleases over highways it pays taxes to build. It is highly probable that the public will be inclined to cherish and to protect that right. It is probable also the public will persist in enjoying that right, at least until the day when, by rendering superior service, with greater convenience, less cost, and better accommodations, the railroads shall win the public back to a greater use of their facilities. It would seem that in this case the interests of the public and of the petroleum industry are parallel.

Legislation cloaking attempts of other selfish interests to gain control of, or to invade, this industry's natural markets, still is menacing. Congress and several State legislatures have given serious consideration to the proposal to transfer a large part of this industry's motor-fuel market to the alcohol distillers. Many fail to see the significance of this blended fuel proposal. Legislation of this type would open the gates to a host of similar bills designed to make mandatory the consumption of certain favored products. Trading favors among industries may be good politics, but it is scarcely good government.

Certain State governments also have cast longing eyes upon this industry's markets, apparently in the belief that after they get through collecting taxes bountiful profits still are left. These States actually propose to use tax money paid by this industry as a subsidy with which to go into business as its competitor.

This industry should not accept the burdens which are the duty of others to bear and to share. It should fight for its industrial rights. It should present a united front on matters of unjust taxation.

This industry has the ability, the strength, and the opportunity to be a powerful influence for good government, and for sound government. Under existing sales-tax law Government has gone into partnership with industry and particularly with this industry. This industry can demand that, as a partner, Government observe the rights of all partners, adopt sound business principles, and follow sound business practices.

Therein lies a hope for the future salvation of this industry. Particularly, the field of taxation represents common ground upon which the industry can agree. It can build there a platform big enough for all.

Unless the petroleum industry decides to take such action, it cannot face the future with confidence. If it is disorganized, discouraged, and disinclined to do for itself that which it can depend upon no other to do, it need expect only further taxation, further restrictions, and further regulations. The choice is, "Shall we tax to sustain or tax to despoil?"

In closing, I wish to mention publicly the excellent work done in presenting the petroleum industry's picture to Congress relative to the proposal to change the depletion and depreciation provisions in the Federal Revenue Act. Although the decision to leave these sections in the law without change has been only in simple justice to those affected, I am frank to say that but for the effective work of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, under the masterful leadership of Mr. William N. Davis, serious damage would have been done to the petroleum industry through the change of these provisions. Particular commendation is also due Senator T. P. GORE for his statesmanlike presentation of this all-important subject to the Senate.

The American Petroleum Industries Committee and its State organizations fully realize that the problems involved in our work constitute a tremendous task, but I pledge to you our best efforts toward assisting in bringing about the day when this industry will not be subjected to the great amount of unfair taxation and discriminatory legislation now on the statute books. We ask your close and continued cooperation in this important work.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it appears that the public interest and the public welfare are being obscured by bitter personalities with relation to the proceedings of the National Recovery Administration. Many writers and some speakers have pointed out the fact that the merits of the controversy have been almost overlooked, and the public have not been supplied the information that is essential to a fair determination of the questions that are involved in the so-called "Board of Review report."

Anyone who has heard the speeches of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and who has read the statements of Mr. Darrow and Mr. Johnson, will accord to those three gentlemen first place among persons who are able to employ sarcasm and irony. Such literature usually is read with very great eagerness, and in all probability those who read the speeches of the Senator from North Dakota as well as the statements and counterstatements issued by the Chairman of the Review Board and the Administrator of the National Recovery Act are likely to be forgetful of what is actually involved.

In spite of statements that have been made to the contrary, I maintain with confidence that the credible evidence shows that under the National Recovery Act, while it has been in existence, very substantial and gratifying progress has been made by the business of the Nation toward more normal conditions.

I need not point out to those who do me the honor to listen to me the very distressing and discouraging conditions that existed in almost every sphere of industry when the National Recovery Act was conceived and passed. I know there are some who in good faith think that under the administration of the law conditions have not substantially improved. Let me admit in the beginning that it is not possible to ascribe accurately the proportion of influence that has been exerted by the various factors and statutes which we have come to designate as the new deal or the recovery measures. The point I am making is that, in contradiction of statements to the contrary made here and elsewhere, the country is steadily and surely recovering.

Yesterday there was published in the Washington Evening Star a statement attributed to the president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Frederick H. Ecker, in which he declared, after having visited almost every section of the United States and made a personal inquiry and investigation, that conditions are greatly improved. To quote a portion of the article:

> Brisk and cheerful, the insurance-company executive appeared to be carried along buoyantly on a wave of the upturning tide in business as he recounted the conditions he has observed in the South, the Middle and Northwest. He said the railroads are better, the real-estate situation is better, the former evil state of industry has begun to respond to treatment.

I shall print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the article from which I have just quoted.

In the Washington Post of April 17, 1934, is contained a declaration under the headline:

Industrial recovery is found advancing along wider front. Survey reveals first quarter's business moved forward vigorously; gains recorded in production, sales, prices, pay rolls, and employment.

I shall also print that article in connection with my remarks. It refers to almost every important form of industry in which our people engage.

On the same date and in the same newspaper was published another statement from the pen of Mr. Giles Findley, an Associated Press report, in which it was declared:

Trucks gaining in shipments of livestock. Twenty-one percent of slaughter animals ride to market on rubber tires.

This statement goes definitely into the figures, and is an illuminating review of the facts relating to the marketing of hogs, cattle, and sheep.

In the Washington Post of May 24, 1934, is another survey reported, the headline being:

Unemployed workers in Nation cut to 7,907,000 during 1 year.

And there is a detailed statement pertaining to the general subject matter which is interesting and believed to be important.

In the Washington Post of April 17, 1934, appeared three articles showing the same general trend of business. The first was under the headline:

Crude-rubber consumption is up in March. Use for month increases 163.8 over requirement in 1933 period.

The second article was headed:

Dollar sales of autos rise 22 percent.

The third was headed:

March cotton exports hit by seasonal cut.

I will print these statements in connection with my remarks.

In the New York Herald Tribune of April 26, 1934, appeared a statement under the following headline:

Westinghouse orders up 57 percent to $20,237,588 in first quarter. March bookings set mark for 2½ years; 3-month loss cut to $1,776,152.

I have also a statement which I think my friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] will find interesting. It is an Associated Press dispatch under the headline:

SCRIP GOING OUT OF USE IN IOWA—EASIER CONDITIONS LESSEN DEMAND FOR PAPER

DES MOINES, May 5.—Scrip, recognized by State legislation as depression money, is rapidly going out of circulation in Iowa.

Real cash from Federal C.W.A. and P.W.A. sources and improving business indices apparently have lessened desire for the paper certificates.

The little northwest Iowa town of Hawarden, which stirred up an international flurry among economists with its first $300 scrip issue, has retired all of it at no cost. In Des Moines, county officials have likewise retired most of a $100,000 scrip issue.

In the New York Times, on the 19th of April, there was published an article on the steel trade, the headline being:

Steel rate at 52 percent best since August. Heavy bookings, with higher prices near, make good outlooks, says Iron Age. Railroads' orders rise. Confusion on quotation results from conflicting views among the producers.

I will print that, as also an article from Youngstown, Ohio, under the headline:

Steel bookings rise. Business in Youngstown area this month 23 percent ahead of 1933.

The Washington Star of April 25, 1934, contained a statement under the caption:

Big gains shown in steel profits. Four companies all report striking increases over totals year ago.

Another article was carried under the Associated Press caption:

Faster pace set at steel plants. Production jumps 4 points to 56 percent of capacity mark.

The Washington Star of April 25 contained a number of articles relating to business conditions generally, advertising volume, auto production, and daily oil production, and there is at hand a statement published in the Sunday New York Times of April 22 under the caption:

Gains continuing in business lines. Retail trade reported moving according to the season in most cities. Wholesaling good here. Climb in Philadelphia. Pick up in industries, retail sales, and bank clearings. Chicago records gains. Wholesalers report unexpectedly high sales—jobs increase. Cleveland activity rises. Price jump brings wave of steel buying—drug sales increase. St. Louis activity livens. Small industries speed up, shoe plants busy, retail trade brisk. Kansas City buying rises. Retail trade improves and wholesale lines hold well. Atlanta business booms. Department store sales highest since 1930—many lines gain.

There was published in the New York Herald Tribune of April 26, 1934, a statement that the profits of the New York Central Railroad—

Jump in first quarter. Net operating income up to $8,211,195, against $3,536,067, with rise in March even sharper. Gains of 14 roads abrupt last month. Earnings show advance of 204.4 percent over 1933; gross only 35 percent higher.

In the New York Herald Tribune of Thursday, April 19, 1934, was a summary in the nature of industrial reports showing that in a large number of industries great improvements have been made in their condition.

Mr. President, I have on my desk a number of other articles and statements similar to those already referred to, but I will not take the time of the Senate to analyze them, asking the liberty of printing them at the end of my remarks as a part thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, of course, the question arises as to whether and to what extent the National Recovery Act has contributed to the very gratifying results I have in part described. Senators who hear me realize that many who are engaged in industry believe that the act has contributed very substantially to the improvement of business conditions in the United States.

Much has been said on the floor of the Senate respecting the subject of unfair competition. We all know that in the past the effect of unfair competition on small business units has been disastrous. We realize that practices of the kind described as unfair competition have not operated to the detriment of the powerful units in industry, but in many cases such practices, which have come to be recognized by business men generally as unfair and subversive, have resulted in the destruction of little business.

The suppression of unfair competition constitutes the underlying principle in the Federal Trade Commission Act and in many of the Commission's proceedings. In the Darrow report there is a declaration which shows that the thought in the minds of the authors of the report was very different from that which is usually held to apply in the business of the United States. The report said:

Fair competition is merely a resounding and illusory phrase. All competition is savage, wolfish, and relentless, and can be nothing else. One may as well dream of making war ladylike as of making competition fair.

So the authors of that report repudiate in principle all measures which are based on the suppression or prevention of unfair competition in trade, and I respectfully submit that that statement of itself constitutes a condemnation of any plan which has been recognized in the business of the United States in the years gone by. It looks to the plan which, in the supplemental report signed by Mr. Darrow and Mr. Thompson, contemplates the substitution of Government ownership or of Government sustained monopoly for trade under competition.

I do not believe that the Senators who find themselves unable to approve of the practices of the N.R.A. endorse the fundamental idea underlying the criticism which exists in the Board of Review report, and certainly in the minds of certain members of the Board, including Mr. Darrow and Mr. Thompson.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, would an interruption disturb the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Not at all. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I was wondering when the Senator was discussing the question of fair competition whether he believed that to assure fair competition it is necessary to have prices all alike on the part of all the competing companies?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I have not thought so.

Mr. COUZENS. That is the point which concerns me. I have been very reticent about criticizing the N.R.A., and I have swallowed a great deal which I would not ordinarily have swallowed, because of the existing conditions; but it does concern me very much when I find that cement bids, furniture bids, and steel bids from all corporations are identical to a cent. That does not constitute my interpretation of fair competition. I wish someone in the administration or elsewhere would explain how that comes about. I wondered if the Senator from Arkansas in discussing fair competition could enlighten us on the subject.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the Senator from Michigan is diverting me from the line of discussion which I intended to pursue, but I will say in reply to him that phase of the subject will be discussed a little later in my remarks.

I wish to add now to what I have already said that it seems to me inevitable that in any permanent system there must be recognition accorded to the natural advantages which exist in communities, there must be recognition accorded to the efficiency of management in production and in distribution. That is an essential part of any system of trade carried on under competition.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, could the Senator tell us if he knows how these prices all come to be alike under the N.R.A. Administration?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I do not know. I do not assume that all prices are alike, but such similarity as exists is probably due to the provision in the law that permits combinations. That would be my first and unstudied thought on the subject.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Arkansas, but, if he will permit, I could help explain that situation, because I have had an explanation of it from the code authorities in one of the industries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota for that purpose.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In the paper industry, for instance, we had this experience: In response to advertising on behalf of the Joint Committee on Printing for approximately $1,000,000 worth of paper there were 47 bidders. Ninety percent of the bids were identical. The prices were from 10 to 40 percent higher than they were in 1929. We asked the bidders how it happened that so many of these bids were identical. They said that under the code every bidder must publish his bid at least 5 days before the bids are opened. Having published the bids, another bidder is then permitted to adjust his bid to meet the bids which have been published. That is under the so-called "open price-fixing provision" of the various codes. That was the explanation we got for the identical bids which we received.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his contribution.

The general press opinion respecting the so-called "Darrow report" is, in my judgment, that the report has contributed little or nothing of helpfulness to the country or to the National Recovery Administration.

I desire to proceed now for a few minutes to discuss the question raised primarily by the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and which is also an important feature of the Darrow report. The outstanding declaration in the report and in the speeches of the Senator from North Dakota is that the N.R.A. fosters monopoly and oppresses the little man in business. If that statement is supported by the record, it demonstrates the necessity of changes in the method of administration. But, Mr. President, I do not believe that anyone who studies the record will reach the conclusion that the general effect of the N.R.A. administration has been to foster monopoly or that it has been to subvert the interests of the little man in business or to destroy him, and I propose to produce evidence in substantiation of my statement.

In the first place the Federal Trade Commission, studying the subject, as I understand, particularly with reference to the lumber industry, found that the effect of the N.R.A. administration on the whole had been to assist little business in the lumber industry, rather than to oppress or to destroy it. This contention of the Senator from North Dakota and of the Darrow Board is in conflict with the views of the people who themselves are engaged in the small industries.

Undeniably, there have been cases of hardship; there have been and there will be instances in which so-called "small-business men" will suffer. It was not possible, Mr. President, to stamp out that ruinous phase of American business called the "sweatshop" without injuring some small businesses, and it has not been possible to raise wages and shorten hours without increasing the cost of production to both small business men and big business men. If there is anyone who can find a way in which to give the benefits presumed to grow out of the National Recovery Act without imposing the charges and the disadvantages that inhere in the policy of the act, I have been unable to contact him.

Necessarily, when hours are reduced from 10 to 8 or to 7, and when wages are raised, there is imposed on all industry an increase in cost, and it makes necessary an increase in prices. That is the fundamental principle of the National Recovery Act.

In thousands of places which we have come to know as sweatshops there were, when this act went into effect, women and children who were toiling by night and by day, working arduously for a compensation which was inadequate to provide them with the necessities of life; and it took courage in the lawmaker, and it takes courage in the Administrator, to drive out of business those who prosper by the blood and unhappiness of helpless women and children. If we are not willing to pay the price that natural laws impose for such a reform, then we had as well abandon all effort to promote recovery through national legislation.

The Senator from North Dakota yesterday in his forceful address credited the National Recovery Administration with the abolishment and the destruction of the sweatshop and with the abolishment of child labor. I respectfully submit that if there is nothing else on the credit side of the account these two achievements would of themselves be sufficient to justify the administration of the act.

I said a moment ago that those engaged in little industry approved the act and approved its administration. When the storm of wrath and vituperation broke a few days ago, and big men were calling one another little names [laughter], hundreds and hundreds of telegrams were sent in to the Administrator by small men in industry.

While I think of it let me refer to a particular case. Senators have all heard about the New Jersey man who was engaged in the dyeing and cleaning business and who was sent to jail for the infraction of a code. I never knew until I investigated the matter and ascertained the facts how unjustly that incident has been used. Senators have heard it repeated here as an illustration of the callousness of General Johnson and his subordinates, as an illustration of the absurdity of the policy underlying this statute and the method by which it is enforced, that a small business man over in New Jersey by the name of Maged was arrested and thrown into jail because he had violated a code. But you were not told what you ought to have been told and which honesty would prompt anyone to tell, that the action was not taken under the National Recovery Administration; it was taken strictly under a State law, and the National Recovery Administration had neither approved nor acquiesced in the regulation referred to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I understood some time ago that General Johnson called the Governors here and asked them to have State laws passed to carry into effect the N.R.A. I was wondering if this was not pursuant to that kind of a movement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know, of course, what General Johnson said to the Governors, any more than I know what he has said to the Senator from Louisiana; but the point I am making is that this case occurred under a New Jersey statute; it was purely an act of the State of New Jersey, and that the rules and regulations under which it occurred had never been approved by the National Recovery Administration. I think that those who sit in the press gallery, who have carried the story that a tailor was arrested and thrown into jail for violating a national code, should correct the story and make it plain, as I have stated here, that that action was not taken under the National Recovery Act or under the national authority, but was entirely under State authority.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but if he will permit me to say so, I now remember that this was a matter given considerable publicity in the newspapers. General Johnson asked the States act, in order that they might place offenders in jail in cases where he could not do so under interstate authority, to adopt similar statutes; and I understood that the New Jersey statute was a provision along that line.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, General Johnson advises me in writing that the National Recovery Administration was entirely ignorant of the case until after the prosecution had taken place, and was not in sympathy with the prosecution, but, on the contrary, distinctly disapproved it.

Among the messages to which I have already referred are some telegrams addressed to General Johnson, which I am going to ask to have inserted in the RECORD. I have had copies made from the telegrams themselves. They are, without exception, from the heads of small industries, and express indignation at the course taken by the Review Board, affirming allegiance to the codes under which they are operating their respective businesses.

I do not feel justified in taking the time of the Senate to read them all, but will read one or two by way of illustration. I read one from Wauwatosa, Wis., as follows:

WAUWATOSA, WIS., May 23, 1934.

HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administrator, Washington, D.C.:

Drug code has already helped little fellow tremendously here. Saved 50 percent from bankruptcy. Independents backing you up 100 percent. Business greatly improved.

CURLEYS PHARMACY.

Another, from Washington, D.C., I read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administration, Washington, D.C.:

We are back of you 100 percent as a concern under one of the smallest adopted codes. We are glad to go on record as stating our business is showing a very satisfactory improvement over a year ago and wish you every success in your encounter with Darrow.

WASHINGTON TENT & AWNING CO., INC.

I read the following telegram from Kansas City, Mo.:

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Relief Administration, Washington, D.C.:

As member of flour-milling code committee I wish to congratulate you on your recent statements answering N.R.A. and code critics. The proposed millers' code is almost unanimously endorsed by small units of the industry, while the large units are all opposed for purely selfish reasons.

GEORGE E. HINCKE.

I ask that the remaining telegrams, along with excerpts from some letters of similar import, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The telegrams and excerpts are as follows:)

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administration, Washington, D.C.:

It is extremely regrettable that any man intrusted by the President with an important mission should, especially at this time, use this high trust and the public moneys to air his personal grievances against you and his well-known preconceived opposition to the recovery program. Why not ask a vote of us small business men who are working under codes as to whether or not we want to go back to the old system instead of taking so seriously the report of this publicity seeking lawyer who has appointed himself our champion? Ask us and get the majority views instead of the notorious 10 percent who have evidently cunningly hoodwinked him.

A. L. BOBRICK,
President Bobrick Manufacturing Corporation.

NEW YORK, N.Y., May 23, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administration:

Mr. Darrow's view of the hole in the doughnut is wonderful. He is reputed to be a great criminal lawyer but maybe the case was not as bad as that.

A. S. BROWN, Jr.,
President Bronsletters, Inc.

HOUSTON, TEX., May 21, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administrator, Washington, D.C.:

Congratulations on your public statement on the Clarence Darrow Review Board report. You and the President are the outstanding patriots of the day. You have a hard job and the people have faith in and sympathy for you.

J. L. BLOCK.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administrator,
Washington, D.C.:

We have just noticed report of Darrow committee investigating National Recovery Act. We recognize your extreme responsibility in administration of the National Recovery Act. We realize its departure from conventional business methods, and after 4 months' experience as executive committee for code enforcement of retail automobile dealers code wish to express our confidence in your judgment and our appreciation of your untiring efforts in establishing and enforcing what we believe to be timely relief for chaotic conditions in our industry.

CHARLES BRAKEBILL,
Commissioner for the Executive Committee of the Knoxville Automotive Trade Association.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., May 21, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D.C.:

Stand firm in back of N.R.A. as its principles are sound if carried out. It is the only friend the small business man has if chiseling can be stopped. Its greatest faults, as I see it, is lack of sharp teeth and compliance and I feel sure you are striving to accomplish those things. Any person who says N.R.A. is a foe to the small business man I suggest he drop down and see some small business heads and get their idea of it.

L. J. FITZPATRICK.

WAYNE, NEBR., May 21, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
Washington, D.C.:

Kick Darrow out; only 6 months more under his cutthroat competition price system all small and many large business enterprises would now have their doors closed, and the crepe of financial death written thereon. National Recovery Act and price fixing brought salvation; it must remain.

Yours truly,

R. H. JACQUES.

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administration,
Washington, D.C.:

After reading Clarence Darrow's criticism of the N.R.A., pointing out the many injustices that he claims exist in the codes for the small business man, we are wiring you to inform you that our business today is far better than it was a year ago. As a member of the canvas-goods industry, which is one of the smallest, we respectfully request that our code remain in effect by all means.

JOHN F. MORRISON AWNING CO.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 21, 1934.

Gen. HUGH JOHNSON, N.R.A. Administrator:

The Associated Master Plumbers of Tennessee in convention assembled thank and commend you for your untiring efforts and work for the benefit of our membership and the people of the United States.

ASSOCIATED MASTER PLUMBERS OF TENNESSEE,
By J. L. PEEBLES, State Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
N.R.A., Commerce Building:

In spite of Mr. Clarence Darrow's criticism, directed at the injustice of the N.R.A. to small industries, we find our business much better this year than last year. We want the code for the canvas-goods industry which is one of the smaller groups to stay in effect by all means.

WM. C. BROOKS AWNING SHOP.

BOSTON, MASS., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administration:

Am in full sympathy with your stated position with respect to Review Board, believe original purpose of Board, if carried out, would have resulted in constructive action, but selection of personnel was unfortunate. Have sympathetic understanding of your colossal undertaking under great difficulties, and pledge cooperation in everything that I can conscientiously support. Will be glad to offer constructive criticisms, with a desire to be helpful, but do not relish being labeled as a heaver of dead cats when criticism is given in good faith.

SUMNER C. REYNOLDS,
President American Dental Trade Association.

NEW YORK, N.Y., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
Administrator National Recovery Administration,
Washington, D.C.:

The steel casting industry, comprised of 179 units, normally doing a business of $200,000,000 per year, challenges Mr. Darrow to take poll of this industry as to whether the code of the steel casting industry has been oppressive to the small fellow. It will furnish a complete roster of the entire industry and will pay the expenses of a telegraphic answer to any questionnaire that he may be disposed to frame. We support you 100 percent in a showdown of his accusations.

Col. MERRILL G. BAKER,
Executive Vice President Steel Founders Society of America.

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 22, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
N.R.A. Administrator:

The members of the code authority of western Pennsylvania subdivision express their sincere appreciation of your prompt and convincing reply to the unjustified conclusions contained in the report of the Darrow committee. We pledge ourselves to continued whole-hearted support of the policies of the President and of the National Recovery Administration and your efforts to accomplish stabilization of our industry.

J. D. A. MORROW,
Chairman Code Authority of Western Pennsylvania Subdivision No. 1.

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS RECEIVED BY GENERAL JOHNSON IN REGARD TO THE DARROW REPORT

From Mr. J. H. Clements, of the Clements Co., Greensburg, Pa., May 21, 1934:

"We are writing in reference to the Darrow report upon the N.R.A. We heartily approve, on the whole, of code regulation of our business. * * *

"Before the code any business man could be forced to the wall by any competitor who possessed double his capital. We do not see how intelligent price fixing can harm the consumer in any way. * * *"

From Mr. A. L. Alexander, with the Marus Marble & Tile Co., Memphis, Tenn.:

"Read excerpts from Mr. Clarence Darrow's review board. They apparently have no practical apprehension of the business conditions which existed prior to the effectiveness of the N.R.A. and codes of fair competition therefrom. The standards of living justly due the American people cannot be maintained with the sweatshops, with the exploiter, and the chiseler if allowed to wield their unfair methods in operating their business. There is no additional experiment needed. A large percentage of the workmen and their families were reduced to practical starvation in a nation having a surplus of necessities. The condition was enormously unbalanced. It would seem that the members of the Review Board had not lived in the United States for the past 4 years, as they appear very ignorant of the true facts which the American people and American business have faced and experienced during the last few years. I am for the N.R.A., the codes of fair competition, and there are 'a hundred million others like me'."

From Mr. J. E. Stocker, manager of the Myrtle Theater, Detroit, Mich., May 21, 1934: "Having been an independent exhibitor for over 20 years I am somewhat in a position to judge the pros and cons of the motion-picture code. Having read Darrow's criticism of this code, my reply to that criticism is that it is greatly misleading to the average citizen who is not familiar with the general problems of production and exhibition of motion pictures. While the code is not perfect, I would rather operate the Myrtle Theater under the code provisions than without it. The handicaps of the independent exhibitor that Darrow's report enumerates existed before the code was enacted only to a far greater extent. I could write in great detail about the problems of the industry—the problems of the smaller independent exhibitor like myself—what I had to contend against before the code and what we have to contend against today. Suffice to say, my investment is more safeguarded today with the provisions of the code than before the code. The code is not perfect, but without the N.R.A. code conditions would be far worse, and I have no doubt but that serious faults in the motion-picture code will be corrected as well as those in other codes. I dread to think what would happen to industry as a whole if N.R.A. rules are entirely done away with and the chaos that would result with unregulated cutthroat competition. Wishing you success in your work of recovery."

From Mr. Harry R. Marlowe, Warren, Ohio, May 21, 1934: "I commend the reply to the Darrow report. I know the standpoint of Darrow, and it is not of practical use at the present time. Keep the good work of the N.R.A. going, you have the worthwhile people with you. I would urge that consumers' interest be supported by a more active organization, but keep the good work going."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Now, Mr. President, I wish to recur to the question of the effect of the N.R.A. on little business. I have already pointed out that some little businesses have been put out of existence, such as sweatshops and those which depend for their prosperity or success on the employment of child or woman labor, particularly at excessive hours. Undoubtedly there are other cases where the economic conditions are such that it has been found impracticable to reduce hours and raise wages without imposing a hardship on certain small businesses. That, as I said or implied, is inevitable if you accept the policy of improving living conditions among laborers by reducing hours and raising wages. There are some businesses which barely existed, under conditions permitting them to pay unreasonably small wages and permitting them to work their labor at unreasonably long hours; but if you are in sympathy with the policy of reducing the hours of labor, if you believe in the policy of paying a living wage, there is no way known to the human mind to avoid those results in some instances.

With respect to the subject of monopoly also, both the antitrust acts and the National Industrial Recovery Act forbid monopolies. The National Industrial Recovery Act forbids monopolistic tendencies. The antitrust acts forbid combinations in restraint of trade, while the National Industrial Recovery Act authorizes combinations. The stated policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act is—I quote from the act:

> Promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups * * * under adequate governmental sanction and supervision.

This is to be accomplished by codes of fair competition.

The Darrow report says there is no such thing as fair competition; that all competition is unfair and destructive; and if you recognize that as true, if you support that assertion and conclusion, it is, of course, impossible under this or any other act based on an analogous principle to revive or revitalize industry.

There is a provision in the National Industrial Recovery Act that any action complying with the provisions of the code shall be exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States. That was the subject matter of much discussion while the bill was pending in the Senate, and I think also while it was under consideration in the House of Representatives. The question was raised then as to what would be the effect of the incorporation of such a provision in the law, plainly modifying the antitrust statutes and permitting combinations for the suppression of unfair competition, and for the promotion of fair competition; and it was decided by the legislative body, after prolonged consideration, that, if units in industry were to be permitted to combine for the purpose of preventing unfair competition, it would be unfair and ineffective to hold them liable under the antitrust laws for so doing.

Monopolies are forbidden under both the antitrust laws and under the National Industrial Recovery Act. Restraints of trade by codes approved by the President are permitted so long as they do not have monopolistic tendencies. A monopoly, as all Senators understand, is an exclusive right or privilege of engaging in particular business or traffic.

Therefore, any act or combination under a code which does not tend to an exclusive right to engage in a particular traffic, when approved by the President, is lawful under the National Industrial Recovery Act. It is to be seen, therefore, that the difference between the National Industrial Recovery Act and the antitrust laws is that while both prohibit monopoly, the National Industrial Recovery Act amends the antitrust acts to permit combinations approved by the President.

To allege monopolistic tendency in a code it is not enough to show that the code authority does not include representatives of all groups or that it provides for price stabilization to prevent cutthroat competition. It must also be shown that such provisions as price control tend to create an exclusive privilege of engaging in a particular traffic. Price control in combination which tends to keep prices up does not tend to wipe out competitors. It tends to sustain them. It is price control in combination which tends to cut down prices that is monopolistic, for the manifest reason that the little operator is at a disadvantage in competing with the large operator.

I recall that some years ago one of the great oil companies, in a desire to assert its monopoly or to acquire a monopoly in a certain territory, reduced the prices of its products so low that the small operators could not compete with them and were compelled to go out of business. Then, of course, when that had been accomplished, the prices of oils went even higher than they had been before. So it is cutthroat competition which creates monopoly. There can be no monopoly under the N.I.R.A. unless it is favored by law as under the copyright and patent laws of the United States.

There is not one complaint before the Review Board or before the N.R.A. that the codes tend to put prices down nor an attempt to show that the effort is to create a condition favorable to monopoly through the reduction of prices. On the contrary the intention is, and it is well supported, that the tendency is to raise prices. Therefore, price stabilization cannot be an instrumentality of monopoly.

Price stabilization, whatever mistakes of judgment may have been made, has saved thousands of little fellows under the N.R.A. Every complaint that N.R.A. fosters monopoly through price stabilization is ill-taken. The price provisions are not objectionable as monopolistic. They may be objectionable from the standpoint of the consumer on grounds of policy but not of statute.

Price stabilization may be productive of hardship to the consumer, but it cannot promote monopoly. The way the great business units obtain their monopolies is by a directly reverse process, by adopting a plan and pursuing a policy behind which they move all their vast resources—resources which are not available to the small man and against which he has no power of resistance whatsoever.

Therefore, the price provisions in the N.R.A. codes are objectionable only to the consumer. It is the consumer, and not the small business man, who is interested in low prices. Sales below cost immediately or eventually produce two certain results, to lower the wages and living standards of labor and to destroy small enterprise. The National Recovery Act requires N.R.A. to protect living standards of labor and to conserve small enterprises. The task of N.R.A. is to strike a balance between the interests of the consumer on the one hand and the wages of labor and small business on the other. It must aim for a price structure high enough to maintain small enterprise and labor wages, and yet low enough to protect the consumer against extortion.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], in an article published in the June issue of Current History, presented his views under the heading Squeezing the Consumer. I have already shown that complaints as to raising prices lie in the mouth of the consumer and not in the mouth of the little business men in industry. But while the Senator from North Dakota has so much to say about "squeezing the consumer", on the other hand, and inconsistently, I believe, he champions the little fellow in business against the N.R.A., as if the action of the N.R.A., in raising prices to meet the increased cost of labor, the increased cost of materials, and to reduce hours of labor, did not have the inevitable effect of promoting his interests rather than destroying or thwarting them. He cannot be right about both. He must choose. Either he must want cutthroat competition, which will destroy the little fellow, but temporarily help the consumer, or he must want stabilized prices, which will cause the consumer to pay more, but which will save the little fellow. The Senator from North Dakota cannot with consistency take both sides of the argument.

There is another choice which must be made. N.R.A., as I have already said, and as the Senator from North Dakota said, has abolished the sweatshop, child labor, and intolerable wages and hours in various economic areas. Furthermore, wages in all industries and trades have been raised. These wage raises have made it cost the little fellow—and incidentally the big fellow also—more to do business. In fact, higher wages constitute between 75 and 90 percent of the little-fellow complaints. They have never mentioned this fact, the only real fact underlying the whole trouble.

For what particular little fellow are those who denounce the N.R.A. working? Are they interested in women and children in sweatshops, laborers working 12 hours a day for 5 cents an hour, or do they speak for the small operators who claim they can stay in business only if those disgraceful conditions continue? They cannot with consistency take both sides of the argument. They cannot blow hot and cold on the proposition.

If we are to elevate the standard of living among laborers in whatever sphere they may toil, we must accomplish that purpose by raising their wages and shortening their hours of labor. If we accept that policy, if we want to place the laboring man permanently upon a plane where he may live and move and have his being in comfort and hope, it must be paid for. It cannot be done by the mere adoption of resolutions or by the mere declaration of good intentions. If we raise wages and shorten hours, we must also raise prices in order to obviate the necessity of industry's operating at a complete loss.

Did you know that in spite of all that has been said to the contrary, 90 percent of the code provisions are designed for the protection of small enterprise?

The lumber code is charged with hurting the little fellow. There are cases where sawmills were found so unprofitable in operation that to raise the wages or to shorten the hours of their workers meant closing down; but instead of hurting the small sawmill business the general effect of the N.R.A. administration has been to improve it. That statement is evidenced by the fact that in July 1933 there were 13,636 sawmills in operation in the United States. In March 1934 there were 15,170, an increase of 1,534 in that short period. There are now pending requests for allocation for 2,200 additional mills.

The bituminous coal code revised and stabilized prices. It had to if labor's wages and hours were to be improved. Before the coal code, most mines were selling at a loss. This drove out thousands of small mines, and threatened thousands more. Since the code, 4,330 small mines reporting to the N.R.A., and probably many thousands more, have resumed operations; and, of course, thousands of small operators of coal mines were saved.

The entire structure of the retail tire business was threatened by combinations between several gigantic corporations, resulting in such ruthless price cutting that these little fellows were being slaughtered at the astonishing rate of 10,000 a year. N.R.A. entered the situation, requiring first a truce on these truly monopolistic price cutters and then a code to stabilize wholesale prices at a level high enough to save the little fellow. Before the truce, the National Recovery Administration was receiving thousands of telegrams complaining of the slaughter of little fellows. Since the truce and the code, this complaint has disappeared.

Before the motion-picture code, small exhibitors were helpless. The code set up grievance boards with very broad powers. The evils of block booking are not due to the code. They are due to the copyright laws. The National Recovery Administration, however, obtained 25-percent relief of the rigors of block-booking contracts. The National Recovery Administration could not change the law, but through its intervention 25-percent relief was secured from the rigors of that system.

The National Recovery Administration has been blamed for the results of patent laws and copyright laws. It has been appealed to to take away from the patentee or the holder of a copyright his benefits under authority of national statutes. Quite manifestly, that was an impossibility, and it is unjust to criticize the National Recovery Administration in that way.

H. A. Cole, president of the Allied Theater Owners of Texas, at first complained of the code to the Darrow board. When he saw the operation of the local grievance board, he sent a circular to his association, saying, among other things:

> Here is the first piece of really good news the independent exhibitor has heard in many years. * * * Frels was forced to close his theater—

Before the code. After the code, he appealed to the grievance board and got a favorable decision.

> Do you know what this means to you? If that principle is accepted in this business, it means that you can go home and sleep at night without the nightmare that a chain can come into your town and take it away from you. * * * This is the first ray of sunshine in the years of the battles of independents.

There is not one single complaint of an independent or small picture exhibitor closed on account of the code, while thousands telegraph and write to N.R.A. that it has saved them.

Every well-informed person knows the mortality in small retail establishment due to chain- and mass-distributing operations. The retail code has practically averted this economic slaughter of the little fellows by eliminating "loss leaders" and preventing cutthroat competition by powerful competitors. It has saved thousands of small bookshops by provisions preventing large stores and chain drug stores from selling books practically at cost. It has saved small independent druggists all over the country by preventing wholesale sales to big fellows at less than the wholesale list price in dozen lots.

So certain were the little fellows in trade that the retail code was their salvation that over 85 percent of the small retail stores of the country have voluntarily gone under the code and sought its protection. As a matter of fact, the sole purpose of this vast code was to protect small enterprises in their field against a force that had almost destroyed them.

It has been said that there are too many codes. Probably that is true; but I point out the fact that in many instances, if not in most instances, the codes for small business were devised and formulated at the request of the men engaged in the business, in the belief that the codes would result in their protection, and they express themselves as pleased and gratified. Indeed, the man to whom I referred a while ago as having been sent to jail under a State law for violation of some provision of a code wired to General Johnson expressing his entire satisfaction with the operation of the national code. He said:

> JERSEY CITY, N.J., May 14, 1934.
> Gen. HUGH JOHNSON:
> I am Jacob Maged, the tailor who was sentenced to imprisonment for violating the cleaners and dyers' code. I am heartily in favor of the code. It is protecting me in my business from price cutting, and I know that without it our living would be seriously hurt. The code must be maintained.
> JACOB MAGED,
> 138 Vesey Street, Jersey City, N.J.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I understood that that tailor, upon being sentenced to jail, was released after serving about 12 hours of the sentence, and that he signed the statement that he was happy to approve the N.R.A.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no, Mr. President!

Mr. LONG. That is my understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That, in my judgment, is an unjust and an unfair insinuation.

Mr. LONG. I read that very reliably.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. The Senator may read what he chooses; but this telegram was voluntarily sent by Mr. Maged to General Johnson under date of May 14. The incident to which he refers happened many weeks ago.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I must decline to yield if the Senator is going to continue along that line.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator allow me one further statement?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. LONG. There will be found a parallel to this in the book by Victor Hugo called "Ninety-three."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think that reference by the Senator from Louisiana has either pertinence or intelligence in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, in view of what has been submitted here this morning I do not believe the attack on the N.R.A. on the ground that it is destructive of little business can be justified. I do not believe it can be justified on the ground that the N.R.A. has tended toward the promotion of monopoly. The textile code literally snatched a moribund industry from destruction. Hundreds of small mills, shut tight before the code, have opened, and thousands more have been rescued from destruction. One could continue this list almost indefinitely. If it were so continued, the same conclusion could be reached.

I must put on the spot, so to speak, those who stand in opposition to the National Recovery Act on the theory that it promotes monopoly by causing increases in prices, and thus subverts the interest of the small men. I think it has been shown that the object of price raising has been to meet the increased cost incident to rises in labor wages and in the shortening of the hours of labor. If we are to proceed with national recovery, we must continue to administer this law solely with regard to the best interests of the public, with regard to the general welfare, and we must be charitable and recognize the fact that the task is a very difficult one, one which involves the reversal of long-established customs and precedents and the adoption of new methods and processes.

I thank the Senate for the attention it has given me.

I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the various newspaper items and other matter to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I had intended to incorporate in the RECORD, among other papers, a very important statement reported in the press this morning as issued by Mr. William Green and others of the National Labor Advisory Board, expressing the opinion that the Darrow report does great injustice to the National Recovery Administration and to the Administrator, and asserting that the law is being administered in the interest and for the benefit of labor as well as for the public generally. I ask to have that printed in the RECORD also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The articles and statements ordered, on request of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, to be printed in the RECORD are as follows:)

LABOR CHIEFS CONDEMN DARROW BOARD REPORT AS BLOW TO RECOVERY—CONDEMN CRITICISM OF N.R.A., ASK BOARD BE ABOLISHED—ATTACK ON JOHNSON IS RESUMED BY NYE—WAGNER SAYS FINDINGS SHOULD PROVE AID TO PROGRAM

By Raymond Clapper

N.R.A. staged its counterattack in the Darrow Board controversy yesterday, interrupted only by a brief cocktail-hour armistice while the two colorful principles, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and Clarence Darrow, went for an automobile ride together.

N.R.A.'s Labor Advisory Board, including President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor; John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers; and other headliners of the labor world, unanimously voted condemnation of the Darrow Board and urged the President to terminate its "unhappy existence" at once.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER (Democrat), New York, who introduced the National Recovery Act in Congress just about a year ago, in a Senate speech said some criticisms of N.R.A. were well founded, but insisted that the Recovery Administration should be allowed to profit by them and not be abolished in view of the great good it had done.

CONFER WITH ROOSEVELT

Leon Henderson, Chief of the Division of Research and Planning of N.R.A., came to his chief's defense in a statement denying General Johnson had ignored his recommendations and sought to abolish his division, as charged by Senator GERALD P. NYE (Republican), North Dakota.

General Johnson and Donald R. Richberg, N.R.A. counsel, conferred with President Roosevelt regarding revision of the steel code and new plans for handling the troublesome service codes and small industries. No decisions were reached, Johnson said.

President Roosevelt refused to mix into the Darrow controversy, declaring—in a Latin phrase, res ipsa loquitor—that the Darrow report spoke for itself. He said his latest information from Darrow was that the Board would finish its work by the end of the month.

Senator NYE renewed his attack on N.R.A. and General Johnson, declaring a complete shake-up was imperative and urging that Congress refuse to go home until it was accomplished.

Richberg, in a radio speech, suggested a little more humility "to political critics who assume to solve these problems after a few days of second-hand investigation."

The Darrow Board, in its hearing of complaints from the garment industries, broke into a bitter internal row and recessed while members calmed down in private.

In view of Darrow's long record as a champion of labor, the sharp denunciation of his work by the N.R.A. Labor Advisory Board came as a surprise. The labor leaders were even more denunciatory of the Board than General Johnson and Donald Richberg have been.

In the resolutions, the labor leaders represented on the Advisory Board said it was especially unfortunate that the Darrow Board had reached its conclusions without consulting representatives of labor and without thought of the consequences to millions of workers in coded industries.

INFORMERS CRITICIZED

"Obviously", the resolutions continued, "the Darrow Board has secured its information regarding specific codes from the rag-tag and bobtail elements of industry. Irresponsible malcontents, sweatshop employers, and business interests which had lost special privileges found the latchstring out and a warm welcome awaiting them before the National Review Board.

"Representatives of the organized workers were not invited to the Darrow feast, and approved codes of fair competition were savagely attacked without any member of the Darrow Board stopping to inquire from any authoritative source the effect of such attacks upon the economic well-being of the Nation's wage-earners."

The resolutions said that the Board sought to glorify the small business man and the consumer both, whereas their interests were in conflict, one wanting high prices and the other low prices.

"The Darrow Board should decide which of these groups it elects to serve", the resolution continued. "Certainly it cannot ride horses going in opposite directions."

URGE END OF BOARD

"The Darrow Board has rendered a disservice to the Nation and its citizens in a time of great economic stress. It has pandered to the worst elements in our political and economic life. If its members are not conscious of these facts, they are victims of arch stupidity and have forfeited their right to continue to function as a Government agency."

The resolution added "unhesitatingly" that the Board should have its "unhappy existence promptly terminated by Executive order of the President."

As the man who sponsored the Recovery Act, Senator WAGNER sought to step in between the belligerents to halt the brawl-like exchange of sarcastic personalities and to lift the discussion back to the plane of calm reason.

"The new deal", he said in a Senate speech answering criticisms of N.R.A., "has accomplished too much to fear destruction by its enemies. It can only suffer if its friends clothe it in perfection and scorn the advocates of improvement.

SAYS PROGRAM IS SOUND

"I do not mean to deny that some prices are too high today. Nor do I deny that there are some industries which are engaged in price-fixing to the detriment of the public welfare. But despite this, the general tendency is favorable, the underlying method of approach of the recovery program is sound, and the need today is to make that program even more effective and to prevent its instrumentalities of control from falling into the hands of selfish groups.

"It is true, and many able Senators and Mr. Darrow's Board have rendered a great service by bringing it to light, that the small man still suffers from many of the monopolistic tyrannies that have persisted for half a century.

"How may these evils be remedied? Certainly not by repealing the sections of the Recovery Act which modify the antitrust laws, for all of these evils existed when those laws were in full force. It is not the code idea that promotes monopoly."

Senator WAGNER said that sections of the Darrow report recognizing that there could be no return to unregulated competition might have been plucked from the plea he made for enactment of the Recovery Act a year ago.

PRAISES JOHNSON

"The immediate problem before us", the Senator added, "is to prevent the production-control devices of the new deal from being turned into an old-deal instrument for the profit of the few and the denial of the many. It is at this crucial stage that forceful and careful and patriotic criticism such as has been forthcoming during the past few months is necessary.

"General Johnson and the men under him have faced a superhuman task with superhuman efforts, with vision, fairness, and courage. They deserve the highest tribute.

"The able critics of the recovery program have said that it is fatally defective, because it is advised by the very leaders who brought about disaster in 1929. I do not believe that our troubles were brought on solely by improper leadership; many of them were caused by an outworn economic system. The same men, when given an opportunity to cooperate and to receive the advice of government, may achieve far better results. Nevertheless, there is a good deal of force in this thoughtful criticism."

CITES BUSINESS GAINS

Senator WAGNER said the employment index is 37 percent higher than a year ago. Hours of labor have been reduced 16 percent. The factory pay-roll index has gained 73 percent in a year and is the highest in 3 years, he said. Basic industrial output, by the index, is up 34 percent above a year ago.

"The back of the depression is broken", he said, adding that some who see their own scalps saved want to return to the old regime.

The purchasing power of wage-earners, Senator WAGNER said, has risen 23 percent in a year. In April, he added, only 2 out of 90 manufacturing industries failed to show gains in employment, and all showed pay-roll gains. These figures, he said, covered industries many of which are mostly composed of small units.

MONOPOLISTIC TENDENCIES

Senator NYE spoke before WAGNER, concluding his attack on N.R.A. begun Tuesday, and renewing his theme that the small business man was being injured by monopolistic tendencies in N.R.A. He insisted that a complete shake-up in N.R.A. was essential.

"It seems to me an obligation upon us as a Congress to decline to leave until assured these infamous abuses will be eliminated", Senator NYE said.

Again, he dealt roughly with General Johnson, whom he accused of being so intolerant of criticism and supervision that he would like to be rid of not only the Darrow Board but some of his own insurgent divisions and the Consumers' Advisory Board. NYE said he believed Johnson also would like to hasten the departure of President Roosevelt for Hawaii.

"What a delightful opportunity then would exist for General Johnson, Mr. Richberg, and their associates within N.R.A. to demonstrate what 'cracking down' can really mean", Senator NYE continued.

"Under such favorable conditions, General Johnson could perform for the interests of monopoly a much finer service than he has been able to perform thus far with the boards, commissions, Congress, and the President himself on the ground, watching to see what was going on. What a summer for the American plunderbund!"

SAYS NEW REVIEW PLANNED

Senator NYE asserted Department of Justice agents have been sent to northern West Virginia to investigate charges that the bituminous-coal code authority there was guilty of malfeasance in office. The Darrow report charged this. Attorney General Cummings said no agents had been sent, but that it was being considered.

Leon Henderson, chief of the N.R.A. division of research and planning, disputed Senator NYE's assertion that his office was in ill-favor with General Johnson. In a formal statement, which Henderson described as "just a plain country boy's personal statement", and issued on his own initiative, he declared that his recommendations had been accepted in the main and that he had been given increasing responsibility.

"I got my job by hollering—and no day passes but what I holler about something", he said. "And General Johnson never yet has ever attempted to restrain me."

Henderson was drawn into N.R.A. after he had made severe criticisms of its operations as a consumers' representative, some months ago.

Senator NYE said he understood President Roosevelt was planning to set up another group to study the effects of codes on small businesses, consumers, and wage-earners, and that it would include representatives of the N.R.A. consumers' board, the N.R.A. statistical and planning division, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Darrow Review Board, probably after the Review Board had finished its work.

[From the Washington Evening Star of Wednesday, May 23, 1934]

BIG IMPROVEMENT IN BUSINESS IS REPORTED BY INSURANCE HEAD—RAILROADS AND REALTY PARTICULARLY FOUND IN BETTER SHAPE—F. H. ECKER STOPS HERE IN TOUR THROUGHOUT COUNTRY

On a tour of the United States and Canada to confer with his organizations field representatives, Frederick H. Ecker, president of the $4,000,000,000 Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., tarried in Washington today long enough to loose a refreshing wave of optimism anent economic conditions.

His principal business here is a meeting of company representatives from the Virginia, Maryland, and West Virginia districts. Mr. Ecker nevertheless took time out this morning to receive reporters in his suite at the Mayflower Hotel and give them fresh impressions gathered during recent visits to every section of the country except the west coast. He expects to complete his travels in Canada and the West in the near future and seemed hopeful of finding vast improvements in business there as, he said, he has everywhere else throughout the Nation.

Brisk and cheerful, the insurance-company executive appeared to be carried along buoyantly on a wave of the upturning tide in business as he recounted the conditions he has observed in the South, the Middle and Northwest. He said the railroads are better, the real-estate situation is better, the former evil state of industry has begun to respond to treatment.

NONCOMMITTAL ON CAUSE

Just what has brought about the brighter turn of affairs, Mr. Ecker did not wish to say. Did he think the policies of the new deal responsible?

"I report to you conditions as I have found them, without drawing conclusions", he replied.

He was equally wary of comment on specific phases of new-deal activity or the critics who have beset the N.R.A. recently.

Of railroads, farms, and urban real estate he had more definite things to say. The railroads are in a much better state than they have been in the last few years, he believes. Business is picking up and, consequently, the use of railroads as freight and passenger carriers. If there existed enough business to use the facilities of the rails to their full extent, the transportation companies would be on easy street once again.

Meanwhile, he regards the underlying bonds of the companies as good investments today, even for the conservative life-insurance companies. This conclusion is based on the theory the underlying securities represent such a small portion of the values involved and are so close to the top claim that they will always be redeemable. He said in many respects the rails have suffered by their own failure to develop their services to meet the competition of trucks and passenger cars and airplanes. Faster freight and passenger trains, air-cooled cars for comfort, and other conveniences now being evolved to catch the fancy of shippers and travelers will lend new strength to the roads. He predicted that for some of them the inevitable difficulty, however, will lie in the location of new capital to aid them.

REALTY SHOWS UPSWING

Mr. Ecker, who worked his way up from office boy to president of Metropolitan Life in 45 years of continuous service and has headed the vast organization for about 5 years, was once the company's real-estate manager, and naturally has kept his interest in that branch of its broad investments. He said real estate now is beginning to reflect the upswing, showing a much better record on the books than it has in many months.

As for the farmers, he admitted his visits had been confined to the cities, but some of those were in regions where urban prosperity or lack of it is more or less a reflection of the state of agriculture in the surrounding area. Here again he found things looking up, completing a relatively rosy picture of the economic whole.

Diverted again into the fields of governmental topics, Mr. Ecker expressed his belief unemployment reserves could be set up effectively to take care of emergencies and seasonal reductions, but he did not set forth precisely what part the Federal or State Treasuries should play in creating these reserves. He said the question of plain Federal unemployment insurance was rather too complex and lengthy to discuss in a brief session, but cast forth a possible indicator of his opinion in remarking that from the business standpoint unemployment is uninsurable.

RATE TABLES NECESSARY

Rate tables, such as the mortality figures used by life-insurance companies, are necessary to fix insurance premiums, he pointed out.

It would be unjust, therefore, to set the costs for businesses employing men steadily throughout the year at a figure balancing the losses suffered through occupations subject to seasonal unemployment.

Nevertheless, he said, by the cooperation of employers and employees (and perhaps the Commonwealth) it would be possible to create funds to tide over the workers in periods of idleness.

Mr. Ecker will leave here tonight to continue northward on his journey, and thence to the final western territory in Canada and the United States.

INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY IS FOUND ADVANCING ALONG WIDER FRONT—SURVEY REVEALS FIRST QUARTER'S BUSINESS MOVED FORWARD VIGOROUSLY—GAINS RECORDED IN PRODUCTION, SALES, PRICES, PAY ROLLS, AND EMPLOYMENT

NEW YORK, April 16.—Industry moved ahead vigorously in the first quarter of 1934. Increased activity, visible in a number of lines late in 1933, was extended to all major industries in the first 3 months of 1934, with gains in production, sales, prices, employment, and pay rolls recorded on a far greater scale than in the corresponding period of any recent year, according to a survey of industry for the first quarter of 1934, which has just been completed by the research department of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

"The extent of the industrial gains is shown in the trends of seven primary factors", the survey points out, "all of which point to but one conclusion: That American industry enters the second quarter of 1934 with recovery in full swing.

"The preceding months have been a period of steady progress and outstanding achievement emphasized, and made more striking, by the low level from which the forward movement began. Fundamental conditions not only have improved greatly but the momentum of industry has been accelerated sharply.

PRODUCTION UP 10.8 PERCENT

"The extent of the industrial improvement in the first quarter of 1934 is shown in the movement of the Index of Industrial Activity during that period. The December index figure was 71.6. In the 3 following months it advanced successively to 72.5, to 73.2, and finally, in March, to 79.3. The gain over the December level of activity was 10.8 percent. This is the most impressive first-quarter activity increase recorded in any recent year.

"A continuance of the expansion of the volume of industrial sales also was a feature of the first 3 months of the year. For the first time in a number of years the sales of each one of the 25 industries charted was higher than in the corresponding quarter of the year before.

"In the third quarter of 1933 the sales averages of 16 of the 25 industries were over 100 percent. In the fourth quarter 100 percent or more was shown by 23 of the 25. Among the most outstanding gains were those of steel, automotive, chemical, and household products industries.

EMPLOYMENT AND WAGES GAIN

"First-quarter wage increases were of striking proportions, manufacturing pay rolls in February reaching a new high in a gain of 12 percent over the January figures, restoring a peak untouched since early in 1931, and making the greatest 1-month improvement in 15 years. The increases affected workers practically in all industries and applied both to salary and to wage-earners. The average increase in wage scales was slightly greater than the average increase in salary scales.

"The gains in employment in the first quarter of 1934 were equally as impressive as the wage increases. The average total of unemployed in the period was a little more than 8,000,000, whereas the total for the corresponding period of 1933 was over 13,000,000. The decrease in unemployment shown by these two totals is nearly 39 percent. The same totals, on the basis of 50,000,000 normally gainfully employed, show a gain in employment of 14.2 percent."

TRUCKS GAINING IN SHIPMENTS OF LIVESTOCK—21 PERCENT OF SLAUGHTER ANIMALS RIDE TO MARKET ON RUBBER TIRES

By Giles Findley

CHICAGO, April 16.—Livestock headed for slaughter pens rode to town in rubber-tired hacks in vastly increased numbers last year.

A survey of the receipts in Chicago, the largest livestock market in the world, revealed 21 percent of the 1933 arrivals rode to market in motor trucks. The year previous, 1932, the total was slightly less than 14 percent.

Total receipts of livestock in Chicago last year were 13,834,856 head. The year previous the total was 12,977,009. The motor-truck shipments in 1933 totaled 2,893,002 head, more than a million head over the 1,738,997 animals trucked in during 1932.

HOGS SHIPPED ON TRUCKS

The number of hogs shipped on rubber tires increased 80.32 percent, compared with 1932; cattle, 55.61; sheep, 30.11; and calves, 41.61. The average increase in shipments was 51.91 percent.

The livestock shipped on trucks was the equivalent of 47,318 standard carloads, if shipped by rail. This would make 789 standard 60-car trains, or an average of more than 2 trainloads daily for each day of the year.

Receipts of hogs in 1933 were 7,791,626 head, including 58,617 sows and 904,252 pigs purchased by the Government to reduce supplies. Of this amount, 1,953,777 hogs were trucked in, or 26 percent of the total.

This compared with receipts of 6,602,237 in 1932 with 1,083,487 on trucks.

RECEIPTS OF CATTLE

Cattle receipts were 2,066,659, with 464,142 by truck. The 1932 figures were 2,005,745 and 298,259, respectively. The 1933 truck movement was 22.5 percent.

Calves were figured separately and arrivals were 440,394, with 126,000, or 29 percent, by truck. The previous year saw arrivals of 446,842, with 89,093 in trucks.

Sheep producers apparently, however, saw little in the trucking idea. Receipts in 1933 were 3,536,177, with only 248,917, or 9.8 percent trucked. The previous year arrivals were 3,922,185, and trucks brought in 268,158.

BANK DEPOSITS INCREASE

NEW YORK, April 16.—An increase of $24,371,704 in deposits during the first quarter of 1934 was reported today by mutual savings banks in New York State, the total reaching $5,110,649,204 on March 31. There were 5,792,203 depositors, a gain of 72,384 for the period.

UNEMPLOYED WORKERS IN NATION CUT TO 7,907,000 DURING 1 YEAR

NEW YORK, May 23.—The total number of unemployed workers in April 1934 was 7,907,000, according to an estimate of the National Industrial Conference Board issued today. This is a decline of 114,000, or 1.4 percent from the March total, and a decline of 5,296,000, or 40.1 percent, as compared with March 1932, when unemployment was at its highest point.

Unemployment increased 32,000 in mining, but this was overcome by decreases of unemployment in other industries as follows: Manufacturing and mechanical, 99,000; transportation, 7,000; trade, 59,000; domestic and personal service, 5,000; and 3,000 in miscellaneous occupations. In addition, it is estimated that 27,000 new workers became available for employment during the month.

Unemployment has decreased since March 1933 in all industrial groups for which figures are available. Decreases were especially marked in manufacturing and mechanical industries. The number unemployed in this group of industries in April 1934 was 2,500,000, a decline of 3,923,000, or 61.1 percent from the peak of unemployment in this group in March 1933. From March 1933 to April 1934 the number of unemployed workers in other groups decreased as follows: 54.8 percent in trade; 29.7 percent in domestic and personal service; 14.8 percent in the extraction of minerals; and 11.1 percent in transportation.

In this estimate the workers employed through the Public Works Administration are counted as employed. Emergency workers employed under Government auspices, usually part time, in lieu of direct unemployment relief are counted as unemployed.

UNEMPLOYED WORKERS IN GROUPS

The following table shows the number of unemployed workers in the various industrial groups in March 1933, March 1934, and April 1934:

Industrial group	Number of unemployed
	March 1933	March 1934	April 1934
Extraction of minerals	576,000	459,000	491,000
Manufacturing and mechanical	6,423,000	2,599,000	2,500,000
Transportation	1,591,000	1,422,000	1,415,000
Trade	2,126,000	1,020,000	961,000
Domestic and personal service	607,000	432,000	427,000
Industry not specified	539,000	420,000	417,000
Other industries [1]	296,000	296,000	296,000
All industries	12,158,000	6,647,000	6,506,000
Allowance for new workers since 1930 census	1,045,000	1,374,000	1,401,000
Total unemployed	13,203,000	8,021,000	7,907,000

[1] This group includes agriculture, forestry, and fishing, public service, and professional service. The number given is that of the unemployed in 1930, no figures being available from which later changes in employment can be computed.

[From the Evansville (Ind.) Courier, Apr. 6, 1934]

JOBS MULTIPLY

One of the cheering bits of news lately is that young men are leaving the Civilian Conservation Corps at the rate of 7,500 a month to accept jobs. This competition of private employment began last October, continued through the winter at the rate of 5,000 or 6,000 a month, and rises higher as spring comes on.

The C.C.C. projects are recognized as worth while in themselves, for their contribution to the value of forests and eroded lands and for their wholesome building of the young manhood enrolled. But there are always new candidates available for the C.C.C. ranks, and there is all-round satisfaction when trained and toughened forest workers can be absorbed into private enterprise. They will be better workers for their experience, they will make more money, and they can be, for the most part, at home with their own people again.

It is still a big task for private business to absorb the millions squeezed out by the great depression. It may be years before all those who want and need work have regular jobs again. But the process is more rapid now, and may continue accelerating for months.

As the ranks fill up, people learn over again the old truth that there is not merely a fixed quantity of work to pass around. Work makes work. People work for each other in a thousand ways, jobs making more jobs, and total employment rolling up—as long as earnings keep pace with production and provide consuming power accordingly.

[From the Terre Haute (Ind.) Tribune, May 24, 1934]

SOMEONE HAPPY

When retail trade and mail-order business began to jump early this year the Jeremiahs said, "Oh, yes; it is not so bad, but wait until this C.W.A. spending stops."

Well, the C.W.A. spending has stopped and the retail trade keeps right on booming. The latest Dun & Bradstreet survey of merchandising conditions throughout the Nation finds "retail sales in nearly all lines at the best of any spring season of the last 3 years, with gains averaging 20 to 40 percent above last year."

Even more striking are the March and first-quarter reports of the mail-order houses, whose customers are mainly farmers. And here again the familiar explanation that this is all the result of Government money falls down badly. During March the cash loans of American farmers was $417,000,000, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimates. In March 1933 it was only $275,000,000. Only $9,000,000 of the $417,000,000 was from rental and benefit payments for acreage reduction. For the first quarter of 1934 the farmers' cash income was $1,312,000,000, up from a 1933 figure of $873,000,000. Only about 7 percent was from benefit payment. The Cleveland Plain Dealer remarks:

"It is genuine recovery, not mere disbursement of Federal money, which causes this continued uptrend in retail business.

"The Nation is on its way out of depression, and the increase among the dividend payers on the financial pages of the newspapers certainly must be heartening to the holders of stocks and bonds in this country. And these number 44,000,000 investors. That is one reason gloom in this country has been dispersed."

[From the Charleston (W.Va.) Mail, Apr. 2, 1934]

THE BUSINESS PICK-UP

Larger bank debits and postal receipts offer conclusive evidence of a business pick-up in the Charleston area. Further visible evidence can be found in the crowds on the streets and in the stores. Especially impressive was this last Saturday and Saturday night.

Bank debits show an increase of 14.96 percent over this time last year, according to the clearing-house association. They also are 4.63 percent above those for the first 3 months of 1932. Postal receipts for January, February, and March of this year increased $7,371.73 over those for the same period in 1933. This increase took place in spite of the fact that the rate on local mail had been reduced from 3 to 2 cents.

The significance of these figures cannot be ignored or overlooked. Business here is increasing and at a rate that must be regarded as highly encouraging. More money is in circulation. Wage earners and others are keeping their dollars—or a fair share of them—moving. This means increased business generally.

[From the Evansville (Ind.) Courier, Apr. 17, 1934]

SALES UP

Department-store sales are as good an index as any for the general trend of business, because they register consuming power over so broad a field of merchandise. The figures for last month are impressive. As compiled by the Federal Reserve Board for the whole country, they show a gain of 44 percent over March of last year and the highest level since April, 2 years ago. They surpass the record for the brief boom that came early last summer and are still mounting.

These figures agree with those of the American Federation of Labor for the estimated buying power of workers. They evidently represent the buying power of all classes. That is the way business should advance—as uniformly as possible on all fronts.

There is special assurance now of continued progress because of the widespread raising of wages in compliance with the President's request. We may be coming again into a period when it will not be necessary to make such wage requests, because greater demand for labor and rising profits will bring good wages by natural processes.

[From the South Bend (Ind.) News-Times, Apr. 20, 1934]

ON THE WAY UP

One of the brightest spots in the business picture right now is being contributed by the department stores. During March there was a record-breaking 44-percent gain in the Nation's department-store sales, and there are excellent reasons for believing that this reflects a substantial rise in the general level of prosperity.

The gain is coming hand in hand with a rise in national income. Figures compiled by the American Federation of Labor show that the workers' total income has risen 41 percent in the past year—from $1,784,000,000 in March 1933 to $2,520,000,000 in March 1934.

These figures indicate pretty conclusively that the Nation is rapidly gaining its health. People have more money to spend, and they are spending it. The industrial pump is getting primed at last; the pick-up ought to go forward now rapidly.

[From the Huntington (W.Va.) Advertiser, Apr. 18, 1934]

INDEX TO BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT

Increases in both circulation and advertising space for newspapers throughout the country during recent months tell an impressive, convincing story of the rapid upward trend of business.

S. P. Weston, recognized expert newspaper analyst, is authority for the information that many newspapers during the past 6 months have made an all-time high record in circulation. The average increase in circulation for the country, according to this authority, is about 10 percent above the level of March 1933.

Retail-advertising lineage, an unfailing barometer of general business conditions, shows a gain over last year of 37.6 percent.

The gain of last month alone over the preceding month was 9.7 percent, and there has been a steady month-by-month gain since recovery got under way shortly after President Roosevelt's inauguration.

The increase in "help wanted" advertising—a gain which mounted in New York City from 34 percent in January to 45 percent in February and 78 percent in March over the same month last year—indicates that increased employment is preceding the trade upturn and clearing the way for the business advance.

The "help wanted" lineage in New York has shown a steady pick-up from November 1933 through March.

Here are the March retail-advertising gains in five key cities for March over the same month last year, as reported by Media Records:

New York, 28.1 percent; Chicago, 35.9 percent; St. Louis, 31.1 percent; Los Angeles, 30.4 percent; New Orleans, 56.9 percent.

No better index to improving trade conditions, industrial activity, and the reemployment of workers long idle could be had than these striking advances made by newspapers in the circulation and advertising fields.

[From the Wheeling (W.Va.) Register, Mar. 31, 1934]

DOWN IN BLACK AND WHITE

Things are certainly better than they were a year or so ago. If anybody has any doubt on this point, let him look at the figures made public by the Treasury Department as to income taxes. In the week after March 15 this year the Treasury had collected nearly $190,000,000 in income taxes, as compared with $131,000,000 in 1933 and $147,000,000 in 1932. That shows an increase of over 40 percent.

It may be that the income-tax payers have indulged in 40 percent more grumbling than they did in the year before. But these increased tax payments prove that incomes have increased, and the fact that incomes have increased proves that things really are getting better. There is every reason to believe that next year's figures will show a much larger percentage of increase. And if so, that will mean that it is not going to be so very long until the depression is really a thing of the past.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat, Apr. 24, 1934]

IOWA BANKS IN FINE SHOWING

Iowa banks are today in better condition than they have been in since 1917, according to L. A. Andrew, former State superintendent of banking. That is a most encouraging report.

Mr. Andrew bases his conclusion on the fact that all Iowa banks are free of debt to the Federal Reserve System for the first time since 1917. No Iowa bank, either State or national, has any money borrowed from the Reserve System. At the peak of Federal Reserve borrowing, in 1921, Iowa banks owed the Federal Reserve $98,700,000.

Freedom of debt means much to these banks. It assures the public that they are in a healthy condition, that they are strong enough to function without borrowing, that their cash reserves are sufficient to meet all demands made upon them for their successful operation. A bank without debt is a safe and sound institution. This improved condition of Iowa banks also reflects a returned confidence, and that is a bank's greatest asset.

Improvement in business, in employment, in manufacture, and in lines of trade will keep pace with that of the banks, for after all banks are the mainstay of business. It is one of the best signs of returning prosperity.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Times, Apr. 14, 1934]

THE BUSINESS UPSWING

The business survey for the country as a whole, carried on the first page of the Times yesterday, showed a continuation of the upswing in trade, particularly that of retail establishments. A significant factor was that the tapering off which usually comes after Easter failed to materialize this year.

"In the industrial divisions", the Dun-Bradstreet report continued, "operating schedules are rising at a more rapid rate than they did in March, unaffected to any major degree by the labor difficulties still unsettled in some districts."

As reported from day to day, the labor difficulties appear to be formidable, but apparently they have not appreciably reduced the output of our major plants. In spite of strikes the automobile manufacturing companies that are members of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce produced last month a larger number of cars and trucks than in any other month since September 1929. In addition, the chamber reported that more men were employed during the month than in any other month in the same period.

The output by chamber members was placed at 262,156 units for March, more than three times, or 209 percent above the corresponding month of 1933 and 49 percent above February of this year.

This brought the estimated production for the first quarter to 539,128, a gain of 84 percent, as compared with last year.

Despite increased production, "nearly every automobile company is reporting heavy lists of unfilled orders", the chamber reported.

The production figures, which include the output of every manufacturer except the Ford Motor Co., were summarized as follows:

Month:	Output
March 1934	262,156
February 1934	173,386
March 1933	84,983
3 months, 1934	539,128
3 months, 1933	292,176

The Ford Co. reported an output of 80,000 for March with an estimated output of 100,000 for April, if bodies and parts are available. The company said its retail sales in the last 10 days of March were the highest since May 1931.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat, Apr. 2, 1934]

RETURNING PROSPERITY REFLECTED IN INCREASED WAGES

There is no better criterion of returning prosperity than increased wages, and that seems to be the order of the day with a number of the larger manufacturing industries of the country.

The giant auto industry is operating at full speed on substantial wages to its hundreds of thousands of employees.

Now comes the United States Corporation and the General Electric Co. with announcements of wage increases of 10 percent.

Between 30,000 and 40,000 employees will benefit by the new General Electric increase, and the extra pay will total between $3,500,000 and $4,000,000 annually. United States Steel employs more than 190,000 wage earners and salaried men. Subsidiary companies of the United States Steel are joining in the increased-pay movement. Pay increases throughout the entire steel industry, it is estimated, would total between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 annually.

From various parts of the country come announcements of wage increases in many industries. Most of these advances range from 10 percent up.

Certain it is, business conditions are improving, and prospects for a continuation of this improvement are most encouraging. Otherwise there would be no advance in wages at this time. Business creates wages; and the better business becomes, the higher wages may be expected by employees. No firm or corporation operating in the red will hardly increase wages. So it seems assured that many of our industries are again returning to a paying basis. That is most encouraging and the best sign that we are again on the upgrade and headed for a returned prosperity.

[From the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch, May 10, 1934]

A FAVORABLE POSITION

The increase in the aggregate sum of deposits in Ohio banks shows a healthy progress toward economic recovery in this area.

The swelling volume of bank deposits, which are nearly 60,000,000 over the close of 1933, cannot be appraised otherwise than as revealing that confidence is widely restored in the financial institutions of this territory, which have ridden out the storms of the past 3 years.

Despite the strain of 4 years of depression, the State's banks now have combined resources of more than $1,600,000,000. Ohio still ranks high in the list of favored States and promises to retain its position.

[From the Hamilton (Ohio) Journal, Apr. 12, 1934]

CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVING

That business conditions are improving in Hamilton and throughout the country cannot be denied. The improvement seen in the country as a whole is evidenced by the fact that automobile production is reaching a peak higher than in any other year since the depression swept the Nation; there is a decided increase in steel production; bank deposits show a gain; car loadings are increasing; industrial output is greater and in many parts of the country workers who were released by the C.W.A. are finding jobs in the factories.

There is no denying the very evident fact that the trend is toward a betterment of conditions generally. Optimism and confidence have now taken the place of uncertainty, pessimism, and the tendency to simply drift along with the tide of events.

[From the Wheeling (W.Va.) News, Apr. 28, 1934]

B. & O. IMPROVEMENT

The report of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for the first 3 months of 1934 shows a highly gratifying increase in business. Operating revenues for the 3 months were $33,985,952, an increase of $7,969,391, or practically 30 percent.

Net revenue from railway operations increased $1,214,071 and reached the comfortable total of $7,999,419.

The prosperity of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad means much to West Virginia. The increase in business enjoyed by this great property is a fair measure of the increase in business throughout this section and throughout the territory which it serves. The substantial recovery which has been recorded during the first 3 months of 1934 must be gratifying to the general public, and particularly to the citizens of northern West Virginia.

[From the Huntington (W.Va.) Herald Dispatch, Apr. 25, 1934]

PROGRESS

Business continues to get better.

Revenue freight-car loadings in the week ending April 14 were reported at 17 percent above those of the corresponding week of 1933, and, contrary to the usual seasonal trend, 3.7 percent higher than the week preceding. This barometer of business showed a gain in almost every class of freight.

Dun & Bradstreet reported "a continuation of expanding sales in virtually all classes of merchandise", with totals rising 15 to 49 percent above last year's. The agency noted more activity in wholesale markets.

Here in Huntington the Owens-Illinois Glass Co. announces a 10-percent pay increase; the Kerr Glass Co. re-calls 72 workers; the American Car & Foundry Co. will soon begin building Chesapeake & Ohio cars; a chamber of commerce survey of industrial-gas and electric-power consumption shows a definite upturn—all in 1 day's news.

[From the Huntington (W.Va.) Advertiser, May 8, 1934]

HAPPY DAYS

The Clarksburg Telegram is another West Virginia institution that finds happy days are here once more.

Of its recent success it observes:

"It is with gratitude and pardonable pride that the Telegram announces that more advertising was published in its three editions last Friday than in any other single day in more than 4 years. The total number of inches carried in the 26 pages was 2,403. On April 18, 1930, a total of 2,472 inches was published in this newspaper, or only 69 more inches than were published Friday.

"Everyone knows the story of the depression that started 4 or 5 years ago and what happened during that distressing period, so little need to be related here. Suffice to say, newspapers, like all other lines of business, suffered heavy losses, for every branch of business is correlated and dependent on others.

"Not only is the Telegram showing large gains in advertising but in circulation as well."

The Telegram, strong adherent to G.O.P. leadership and principles, is one of the most consistent defamers of the Roosevelt recovery plans in the State, despite this frank, enthusiastic acknowledgment of the business success it is enjoying under the new deal.

[From the Savannah (Ga.) Press, May 21, 1934]

THE DARROW ABUSE

It seems that the Darrow Board to investigate the N.R.A. had a great opportunity in suggesting amendment to that important movement.

Instead of that, as a Republican paper in New York says, it seems that Mr. Darrow was out to make a case against the N.R.A., not to suggest its improvement. The whole report reads like an indictment probably arrived at long before the N.R.A. was conceived. It is merely a sweeping condemnation of the whole system; it thinks that the N.R.A. should be scrapped as a whole. For this reason it falls short of its opportunity, which was to cooperate with the Government and recommend changes and improvements if necessary. The report gives General Johnson a chance to reply and leaves the whole matter in controversy; instead of a dignified statement their report is merely an indictment.

How it ever occurred to anybody to put Clarence Darrow at the head of such an investigation is not easy to see. Mr. Darrow used to be an able lawyer. He might have been selected to prepare an excellent brief for the manufacturers, but no one trusted his experience in economic matters. Instead of clearing the atmosphere, the report, which recommends that the N.R.A. ought to be done away with, simply muddies the waters, if one can use a mixed metaphor. Instead of scrapping the N.F.A. it looks as if the Board, which has rendered such an absurd report, should itself be done away with. The object of the appointment of this Board must have been enlightenment. Instead of that the board has returned only abuse.

[From the Buffalo (N.Y.) Times, May 21, 1934]

DARROW DISAGREES

The Darrow Board report is disappointing. Most of its sound criticisms have been anticipated by N.R.A., and remedial action started, particularly in the temporary steel code. Records of business failures show that the codes in general have aided rather than harmed the little fellows.

But the National Recovery Review Board's report is a tremendously important document despite its weaknesses. It sums up the attacks on N.R.A.—contradictory as they are—and winds up with Clarence Darrow's own sincere diagnosis of the ultimate fate of our industrial civilization.

Darrow says our choice is between "monopoly sustained by government" and "a planned economy which demands socialized ownership and control." General Johnson says these alleged alternatives really are "fascism and communism."

N.R.A. from the beginning has been designed as a "half-way house" between these two, which could be fitted to democratic political government and a democratic people. It is also a framework in which future planned economy is possible. Darrow's conclusion, therefore, attacks the fundamental aim of N.R.A. He says in effect that public supervision without "ownership and control" cannot cure us of monopoly and other business evils.

Maybe not, but the experiment is still in process, and it is too early for dogmatic predictions. The Recovery Act in effect is a blueprint of a plan for industrial democracy. Under it, or something better along similar lines, stand our hope and chance for a happier, more abundant, and efficient industrial life. It has had less than a year's trial, and N.R.A. is trying hard to improve the structure it has built.

The Darrow Board's finding of monopoly tendencies under code operations is more to the point. Analysis, however, shows that monopoly practices have prevailed in business for many years. N.R.A. embodies some of these accepted practices in codes and sought to regularize them to avoid business crookedness.

The report makes the charge that big business dominates the code authorities, and that business has its own men in N.R.A. This is a trend deserving serious consideration. It is one of N.R.A.'s weak spots, where a break might do irreparable damage to N.R.A.'s fundamental aim and principles.

The answers by Johnson and General Counsel Donald R. Richberg, as sharp in tone as Darrow's complaint, might well have been more temperate. Richberg's separate reply concerning the steel code is an able defense, admitting shortcomings due to the mad code-making scramble of last fall and outlining plans for more safeguards.

It is unfortunate that the Darrow criticism is not better based; there is plenty of room for improvement in N.R.A. and its codes.

But it will be equally unfortunate for N.R.A.'s enemies if they try to use the Board's findings as a basis for political attack on the Recovery Act; N.R.A.'s defense is more than adequate.

[From The Journal of Commerce, New York, May 21, 1934]

Recent meetings of business and banking groups have heard a great deal of criticism of Government regimentation of industry and the dangers of excessive Federal intervention through the N.R.A. As a result, to superficial observers it appeared that the battle over the future of the National Industrial Recovery Act was to be fought with radical and progressive elements lined up in favor of it, and conservatives generally opposed. The Darrow Review Board report made public today brings a new element into the situation.

This remarkable document was prepared by a body appointed to hear complaints from small business men and to evolve ways and means of protecting them from oppression by large concerns. The minority report of John F. Sinclair does precisely this, suggesting speedy consideration of minor complaints by the N.R.A. itself, and fuller analysis of protests involving fundamental policy by technically qualified review boards to be established apart from the present N.R.A. organization.

The Darrow report proper, on the other hand, merely pronounces a sentence of utter doom upon the small business man. It finds that he is generally oppressed and faced with utter extinction under many of the codes of fair competition. However, it holds at the same time that a return to unregulated competition and the regime of the antitrust laws "is not possible in a situation where technological advance has produced a surplus so that unregulated competition demoralizes both wages and prices, and brings on recurrent and increasingly severe industrial depression." We thus have left only Hobson's choice between monopoly under the N.R.A. and collectivism.

Clarence Darrow thus throws his hat into the ring as a candidate for the post of the American Lenin who, as Dr. Wirt predicted, has been quietly awaiting an opportunity to succeed Mr. Roosevelt.

This startling conclusion in favor of the socialization of industry, which can hardly help the small business man any more than the large monopolist as the Russian "kulak" discovered, is not based upon the detailed data contained in the Darrow report. It is evidently an "a priori" conclusion, probably arrived at by the members of the board long before the N.R.A. was even conceived. The report itself, as a matter of fact, is a long recital of the practical complaints received against various codes and contains specific suggestions generally designed to give small enterprises greater representation in code authorities.

The problem of the small business under the N.R.A. is a real one and deserves careful and serious study rather than the amateurish type of analysis made by the Darrow Board. Small enterprises have survived and prospered in various industries for quite different reasons. Sometimes it is because of numerous style changes or other factors that create a need for flexibility, as in the case of textiles. Sometimes it is because of the service element involved, as in many branches of retail trade. In still other instances, it may be largely because of excessive wage-cutting or unethical business practices, as General Johnson and Mr. Richberg love to state.

Since the persistence of the enterprise reflects so many diverse factors, there is no room for any magic formula to solve its problems. If the N.R.A. standardizes wages and other costs, and then seeks to bar selling below cost, enforcement of the codes will spell the doom of many small and also some large concerns. Even if this happens, however, there are very many small businesses that will remain firmly entrenched, due to basic advantages they possess apart from wage cutting. Among these, the Darrow plea for the immediate introduction of the Communist State will hardly meet with a hearty response.

The callow character of the Darrow report, events may show, will do serious injury to constructive improvement of the N.R.A., because it will tend to reflect discredit upon criticism of the movement in general.

[From the Union City (N.J.) Hudson Dispatch, May 22, 1934]

DARROW'S ONE-SIDED CRITICISM

Commenting on the Darrow report on the workings of the N.R.A. the Cleveland Plain Dealer says:

"No honest picture of N.R.A. can be all whites or blacks. The grays and other middle tones cannot be ignored. Yet Clarence Darrow, the incorrigible advocate, ignores them. He has no taste for anything but splash colors. One is moved to the belief that he set out to convict N.R.A."

Even Ogden L. Mills, one of the bitterest critics of the administration, refuses to condemn N.R.A. as all bad.

Clarence Darrow, as chairman of the National Recovery Review Board, named by President Roosevelt, would junk the whole alphabetical list of recovery measures that sprang from the National Industrial Recovery Act. He would also annihilate the profit system with it.

General Johnson pointedly remarks that Darrow gives "the United States a choice between fascism and communism."

The Roosevelt administration has steered a course midway between the old profits system of special privilege in the past and socialism or fascism of the present.

The Roosevelt policies attempt to maintain democracy in such a liberal form that its benefits will be more wide-spread than ever before. The old capitalistic system collapsed under its own weight. The unsteady props were wiped away by the floods of depression.

A change was necessary. Was the country to be swept into fascism, nazi-ism, communism, or socialism? Not if Franklin D. Roosevelt could save it for democracy. The N.R.A. and all the other recovery measures, many of which would have been denounced as socialism years ago, were introduced.

Recovery began to show signs of life. Business got better. Car loadings doubled. Credit was loosened up. Normal conditions came into sight after 4 dark years of ever-increasing depression.

The voice of a Darrow can only serve to call attention to the good points of the N.R.A. as well as its demerits. Out of the seething fire unloosed by the Darrow Board will come a greater N.R.A. It is well that the worst has been said. One feels always stronger when he knows the worst. For he knows that what lies ahead will be better.

No great changes, as complicated as the recovery measures that reach to every nerve and fiber of a sensitive economic system, can be wrought with perfection.

Criticism, even though unjust, will serve only to perfect the policies laid down by President Roosevelt that have brought this country from the doldrums of despair to the point where the dawn of a new day is breaking gloriously over the economic horizon.

When Herbert Hoover selected a board to pass upon prohibition, he choose men whom he knew to be almost as one with him. The majority report made by Wickersham reflected the view of the President who had made the appointments.

President Roosevelt did not select any "yes men" to review the acts of the N.R.A. He selected one of its severest opponents in choosing Darrow. That shows the President was not afraid of any just criticism.

[From the Washington (D.C.) Herald, May 23, 1934]

THE DARROW REPORT

The report of the Darrow committee on the N.R.A. need not have been withheld from publication until the Recovery Administration's reply was ready for simultaneous issue.

The report answers itself.

It is a frantic, fanatical, socialistic, and almost anarchistic attack upon the administration and its purposes.

An important and needed inquiry has been perverted to the service of Clarence Darrow's hates, prejudices, and long-trumpeted hostility to the ways of ordered society.

In the operation of the N.R.A. there is undoubtedly an impact upon the small producer and the independent merchant which should be lightened and, if possible, removed. It is a real defect in the National Recovery Act and calls for dispassionate approach and correction if possible.

Darrow, as the chairman of the committee appointed to examine this question, has used his position to arraign the measures of the administration generally and with such bias, exaggeration, and distortion that he has discredited himself and all the things he stands for.

As a matter of fact, instead of injuring the administration, which was his obvious desire, he has conferred a distinct benefit upon it.

He has made its policies, some of which are disquieting enough, more acceptable in the minds of the sane and sober citizens of the Nation. Even the most disturbing of the administration's proposals seem sound and conservative by comparison.

This so-called "Board of Review", which is nothing less than a board of defamation and detraction, has done a service to the Nation as well.

Mr. Darrow will gain no commendation or support for his fantastic theories among the vast majority of our judicious people.

The administration should learn one thing from this incident, and that is not to create a lot of boards to formulate opinions which the administration should possess for itself.

Mr. Roosevelt was elected to be President of the United States to carry out the provisions of the Democratic platform, to put his own progressive ideas into operation, and not to learn from or listen to the freaks and fanatics of politics.

No one cares what Mr. Darrow's opinions are. No one wishes to hear them.

He is known to be an unbalanced extremist, a violent and erratic person.

Why should the administration desire his views when the public does not desire his opinions or have any confidence in them?

Why should the administration appoint boards and commissions of this kind?

Why should it depend in any way on Socialists and Communists and anarchists?

The people did not elect them to put their ideas into operation and never will elect them.

The people have no patience with these fanatics.

The people are disgusted that they should be allowed to encumber the columns of the newspapers with their propaganda.

It is, after all and to some degree, Mr. Roosevelt's own fault that these extremists are in a position to speak as dignified advisers of the administration.

Fortunately their violence deprives them of all credence and authority.

Fortunately this report on the Board of Review will have no effect except to discredit its signers and strengthen its opponents.

But the President should learn from this incident not to depend on people of this unbalanced character.

Let him exercise his own judgment, pursue his own policies.

It was for that he was elected President of the United States.

BUSINESS NOTES

NEW YORK, April 25.—Reorders in the wholesale markets here continue good. Indications are that April retail volume, despite the drop in the first half will run ahead of the same month last year. Sportswear, summer dresses, linen and pastel coats are in current favor.

A price of 6 percent on felt-base floor coverings manufactured by Congoleum-Nairn, Inc., has been announced. Other mills are expected to announce advances later this week.

With orders for popular shades of dress linens still coming into the wholesale market here, importers have resorted to the dyeing of other shades of linen piece goods in order to fill the demand. Calls for navy, black, and some shades of brown have exhausted stocks on hand.

The gray-goods market has continued dull with buyers restricting orders to small quantities of goods for immediate delivery.

Reorders on sports fabrics are reported heavy both from retailers and cutters-up. The laces, of crash, are featured in solid color all-over figure and drawn-work types and also in multi-color effects.

ADVERTISING VOLUME CONTINUES TO CLIMB

NEW YORK, April 25.—Advertising volume in March not only maintained but surpassed the record of gains which have been recorded during the past 9 months, Advertising Age reports. Newspaper advertising in 77 cities last month totaled 144,451,000 lines, a gain of 30 percent over the corresponding month of 1933.

Automotive advertising continued to lead the way with a smashing increase of 141.7 percent. The total for March 1934 was 8,261,796 lines, while a year ago it was 3,418,000 lines.

Other general advertising gained 37.7 percent, rising to 27,480,000 lines. Store sales increases were reflected in a jump of 21,268,000 lines in retail advertising to 84,717,000, a gain of 33.5 percent.

AUTO PRODUCTION CONTINUES TO RISE—YEAR'S PEAK BELIEVED CLOSE AT HAND, WITH 400,000 MARK LIKELY FOR APRIL

NEW YORK, April 25.—Automobile production has continued to gain, reaching the highest level since the spring of 1930. With 400,000 cars and trucks indicated as a possible attainment for April, including both United States and Canada, the 1934 peak of vehicle output is believed to be close at hand.

Dealers' stocks, unusually low during the early weeks of the year, doubtless have been built up materially in recent months and, in the majority of cases, probably are ample.

A tapering of factory operations would not be unexpected during the ensuing weeks of this quarter, but no drastic curtailment is believed to be in immediate prospect, in the opinion of the Standard Statistics Co., of New York.

While a close estimate of production is difficult in view of uncertain demand and labor conditions, out-turn for the entire first half of 1934 should be well above the 1,640,000 units constructed in the initial 6 months of 1931. A figure not far from 1,750,000 cars and trucks may, in fact, be attached in the current half year, whereas 1,045,000 units were built in the like 6 months of 1933.

DAILY OIL PRODUCTION MOUNTS 4,987 BARRELS

TULSA, OKLA., April 25.—Crude-oil production of the United States increased 4,987 barrels in daily average last week, from 2,472,906 to 2,477,893 barrels, the Oil and Gas Journal says.

A sharp increase in east Texas production, accounting for most of Texas' rise from 1,008,879 to 1,039,549 barrels daily, was the deciding factor in the week's statistics. Most other areas cut production. Eastern fields, including Michigan, had an increase from 127,122 to 128,904 barrels.

INDUSTRIAL REPORTS

American Hide & Leather shows for 9 months ended March 31 net profit of $455,840 after depreciation, reserves, and Federal taxes, equal to $4.56 a share on 100,000 shares of 7-percent preferred stock. In the preceding fiscal year the company reported for 36 weeks ended March 4 profit of $313,708 before Federal taxes. Net profit for the quarter to March 31 was $68,232 after depreciation and Federal taxes, equal to 68 cents a share on the preferred stock. For 12 weeks ended March 4, 1933, profit was $31,874 before Federal taxes.

Auburn Automobile and subsidiaries for the quarter to February 28 report net loss of $857,395 after depreciation, interest, taxes, minority, interest, etc., compared with net loss of $577,466 in the quarter ended the like date in 1933.

Beech-Nut Packing reports for the 3 months ended March 31 net earnings of $444,192 before Federal taxes. This compares with $403,050 for the same period of 1933. After deduction of estimated Federal tax and providing for preferred dividends on 45 shares of class A stock outstanding, a balance of $382,531 was left applicable to the common stock, equal to 87 cents a share for the first quarter on 437,524 shares of common outstanding.

Atlantic Refining and subsidiaries report profit of $613,000 for the first quarter of 1934, compared with loss of $3,127,000 for the like first quarter of 1933. The figures allow for interest, depreciation, and taxes. In the first quarter of 1933 loss of $3,127,000 included merchandise inventory write-down of $1,879,000, while profit reported in the first quarter of 1934 reflected only a minor inventory adjustment. Per share profit on the common for the first quarter was 23 cents against loss of $1.16 a share for the first quarter in 1933.

Bowman Biltmore Hotels reports income of $1,754,608 from room rentals, restaurants, concessions, etc., for the initial quarter of 1934. After deduction of interest, provision for depreciation and amortization, and Federal income taxes, net loss was $310,451.

Edison Bros. Stores and subsidiaries report for 11 months to December 31, 1933, net profit of $484,186 after depreciation, Federal taxes, etc., equal, after 7-percent preferred dividends, to $4.15 a share on 106,435 shares of common stock. For the year ended January 31 net profit was $77,295, or 26 cents a common share.

Gibson Art and subsidiary, Gibson Playing Card Co., report for the fiscal year to February 28, as certified by independent auditors, net profit of $136,094, after depreciation, interest, taxes, etc., equal to 74 cents a share on 182,739 shares of stock. This compares with net loss of $134,927 in the preceding fiscal year.

Indian Motorcycle and wholly owned subsidiary, Indian Acceptance, through E. Paul du Pont, report for the quarter ended March 31 net profit of $31,256, after depreciation and reserve of $22,078 had been deducted, compared with net loss of $46,826 for the like quarter of 1933, loss of $40,882 in the first quarter of 1932, and net loss of $21,336 in the fourth quarter of 1933. Mr. du Pont, speaking for the company, said: "From our present sales and production it appears certain the current year will be the best since 1929 for our company as well as the entire motorcycle industry and sport."

Interlake Iron shows for the quarter to March 31 net loss of $68,956, after interest, depreciation, taxes, etc., compared with net loss of $211,562 in the first quarter of the previous year.

Martin (Glenn L.) Co., in its statement for 1933, as audited by independent accountants, shows net loss of $140,341, after taxes, depreciation, interest, amortization, and other charges, compared with net income of $1,528 in 1932.

Mountain & Gulf Oil shows for 1933 net profit of $51,190, after taxes, depreciation, depletion, etc., equal to 1 cent a share on 4,000,000 shares of capital stock. This compares with net loss of $10,222 in 1932.

Conde Nast Publications, for the quarter to March 31, shows net profit of $35,774, after charges and taxes, compared with net loss of $69,998 in the first quarter of 1933.

National Biscuit reports for the quarter ended March 31 net income of $3,066,620, after charges, taxes, etc., equivalent, after dividend requirements on the 7-percent preferred stock, to 42 cents a share on 6,289,263 shares of common stock. This compares with $3,082,828, or 42 cents a share, in the first quarter of 1933.

New Bradford Oil reports for 1933 net loss of $199,948 after taxes, depreciation, depletion, minority interest, etc., but exclusive of a loss on sales of assets amounting to $204,110. This compares with net loss of $175,080 in 1932.

Pennsylvania-Dixie Cement shows for 12 months, to March 31, profit of $396,528 before depreciation, depletion, and interest, compared with $144,314 for the 12 months ended March 31, 1933. After provision for depreciation, depletion, and interest net loss was $1,549,736, against net loss of $1,819,538 in the preceding 12 months.

Pittsburgh United reports for 1933, as certified by independent auditors, net loss of $89,987 after taxes, interest, etc., compared with net loss of $81,382 in 1932.

Plymouth Oil and subsidiary, Big Lake Oil, show for the quarter ended March 31 net income of $210,314 after depreciation, depletion, Federal taxes, etc., equivalent to 20 cents a share on 1,050,000 shares of stock, including shares held by the company. This compares with $7,787, or less than 1 cent a share, in the first quarter of 1933.

Salt Creek Consolidated Oil reports for 1933 net loss of $62,498 after taxes, depreciation, depletion, and other deductions, compared with net loss of $51,581 in 1932.

Seeman Bros. reports for the third quarter ended March 31 net profit of $108,224 after all charges, including Federal tax, equal to $1 a share on 108,000 shares outstanding, as against $65,468 last year, equal to 60 cents a share on 108,400 shares then outstanding.

United Biscuit of America and subsidiaries report for the quarter ended March 31 net profit of $260,317 after depreciation, interest, and Federal taxes, equal after dividend requirements on the 7-percent preferred stock to 52 cents a share on 450,325 shares of no par common stock. This compares with $209,125, or 41 cents a common share, in the first quarter of 1933.

United States Realty & Improvement and subsidiaries, exclusive of George A. Fuller Co. and subsidiaries and Plaza Operating Co. and subsidiary, report for the quarter to March 31 net loss of $65,472 after taxes, depreciation, interest, etc. Consolidated net income of George A. Fuller Co. and subsidiaries for the quarter to March 31 was $33,958 after depreciation, Federal taxes, etc. Consolidated net loss of Plaza Operating Co. and subsidiary for the same quarter was $209,221 after taxes, depreciation, interest, etc. For the quarter just closed United States Realty & Improvement and subsidiaries, including George A. Fuller & Co. and Plaza Operating Co., reported let loss of $130,899 after taxes, interest, depreciation, etc., but before providing for subsidiary dividends.

Waldorf system reports first quarter net profit of $41,636 after depreciation, amortization, Federal taxes, etc., equal to 9 cents a share on 433,719 no par shares of common stock. This compares with $22,926, or 5 cents a share on 438,219 shares in the first quarter of 1933.

STUDEBAKER CREDITORS PLAN REORGANIZATION—DETAILS OF PROPOSAL LACKING—COMPANY IN RECEIVERSHIP

Although official confirmation was not forthcoming, it was reliably reported yesterday that plan of reorganization for the Studebaker Corporation, at present in receivership, was being discussed by leading creditors. Attorneys at the law office of Paul Cravath, counsel for the Studebaker Corporation, refused either to affirm or deny the report. Mr. Cravath is in Europe.

Improvement in the financial outlook of the corporation under the administration of the receivers—H. G. Vance, Paul G. Hoffman, and A. G. Bean—has led to expectation that some plan would be developed. According to the report, the plan is in a preliminary stage, and there is no indication of the date when its details may be made public.

In the report of receivership made public last week a definite statement was made that completion of consolidation with the White Motor Co., of which Studebaker owns 95 percent of the stock, would not be made. On this basis, it is expected that the plan provides for an arrangement for separation from White.

Studebaker during the first quarter of this year reported sales at 14,500 units, which compares with about 9,000 units for the first quarter of 1933 and 18,705 units during the first 3 months of 1932. Although it cannot be exactly determined if the corporation is now operating on a profit, because present operations exclude depreciation, property, and interest charges, the automobile trade is confident that operations are in the black. The annual report showed net working assets at about the same level as a year ago, when the receivership began.

SUGAR PRICES REDUCED

The Great Western Sugar Co. has reduced the price of beet sugar 20 points to 4.10 cents a pound in territory west of Chicago, it was announced yesterday. The California & Hawaii Sugar Co. yesterday reduced the price of refined sugar in guaranteed territory 20 points to 4.30 cents a pound.

C. & O. UNIT BUYS $1,017,000 IN NICKEL PLATE—VIRGINIA TRANSPORTATION CO. REVEALS PURCHASE OF NOTES IN I.C.C. REPORT

The Virginia Transportation Co., investment subsidiary of the Chesapeake & Ohio, acquired $1,017,000 6-percent notes of 1935 of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad last year. This was revealed in the Interstate Commerce Commission report of the Chesapeake & Ohio, which controls the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, known as the Nickel Plate road.

Refunding a maturity of $20,000,000 6's, due October 1, 1932, the Nickel Plate issued 6's of 1935 at the rate of 75 percent new notes and 25 percent cash for the old issue. At the end of 1932 the report showed no Nickel Plate notes held by either the Chesapeake & Ohio or the Virginia Transportation.

Investment of the Virginia Transportation in Erie, Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Pittston remained unchanged last year. The subsidiary and the Western Pocahontas Corporation and the Western Pocahontas Fuel Co., also C. & O. subsidiaries, held a total of $1,170,000 Chicago & Eastern Illinois bonds. These were obtained at a cost of $351,421.

In order to provide general mortgage bonds for the refunding of the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley Railroad consolidated 6s, the Chicago & North Western, according to its commission report, entered the market. The Fremont issue was covered by the first and refunding mortgage.

The road bought $157,000 general 5's of 1987 at $110,460 and acquired $225,000 6½ percent secured bonds of 1936 at a cost of $201,392. Cancelation of the latter released $268,000 of the general mortgage bonds, making a total of $425,000 obtained through the market for delivery under the refunding exchange plan. The remainder of the general mortgage issue was received on retirement of $6,355,000 5-percent debentures in May.

NEW HAVEN REVENUE UP 18.8 PERCENT OVER LAST YEAR—PELLEY TELLS HOLDERS EXECUTIVE PAY WAS CUT 51.7 PERCENT

NEW HAVEN, CONN., April 18.—A definite improvement in the operating revenues of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad was reported by John J. Pelley, president, today at the annual stockholders meeting.

Mr. Pelley said revenues have increased over $2,850,000, or 18.8 percent, compared with the same period last year. Of this total, $2,150,000 is represented by increased freight revenue.

According to President Pelley, the amount of compensation paid New Haven executives, officials, and staff assistants for 1933 was 51.7 percent less than for 1929; whereas this same class of supervisory employees for all class I railroads decreased in the amount of compensation received, compared with 1929, only 35.6 percent.

Paul Shoup, vice president, said March earnings of the company were above the same month of 1933 and also higher than February 1934, adding that the upward trend had continued in the first half of April.

"PENSY" SHOWS 2 MONTHS' NET OF 11 CENTS A SHARE—COMPARES WITH LOSS LAST YEAR—CHESAPEAKE & OHIO PROFIT UP TO 92 CENTS IN FIRST QUARTER

The Pennsylvania Railroad reports for the 2 months ended February 28 net income of $1,518,080 after taxes and charges, equal to 11 cents a share on 13,176,696 shares of par $50 capital stock. This compares with net loss of $979,949 for the like 1933 months. Net income for February was $474,601, against a loss of $939,334 in February last year.

Chesapeake & Ohio: Reports for the quarter ended March 31 net income of $7,040,496 after taxes, charges, and sinking-fund requirements, equal after preferred-dividend requirements to 92 cents a share on 7,653,394 par $25 shares of common stock. This compares with $4,487,470, or 59 cents a share, on 7,652,813 common shares in the first quarter last year. Net income for March after all charges and reserves was $3,087,592, against $1,220,955 in the like 1933 month. For the first time since March 1930 gross income exceeded $10,000,000.

Lehigh Valley: Reports to the New York State Public Service Commission total assets as of December 31, 1933, of $243,824,743, compared with $244,843,819 at the end of the previous year. Profit-and-loss surplus was $40,872,738, against $46,217,024; current assets, $7,874,113, against $7,484,251; and current liabilities $10,471,419, against $8,926,429.

Louisville & Nashville: Reports for the 2 months ended February 28 net income of $1,142,362 after taxes and charges, equal to 97 cents a share on 1,170,000 shares of capital stock. This compares with net income of $202,036, or 17 cents a share on common, in the like 1933 months. February net income was $555,661, against $178,342 in the same month a year ago.

Ann Arbor Railroad: Reports net loss for February of $20,660, against net loss of $56,431 in the same month a year ago. Loss for the 2 months ended February 28 was $47,812, against loss of $114,507 in the like 1933 months.

Chicago & Eastern Illinois: Reports as of February 28 current assets of $2,114,114, compared with $2,359,359 on the same 1933 date. Current liabilities increased to $12,363,108 from $10,535,802. Investments in stocks and bonds totaled $56,122, against $9,538.

Mobile & Ohio Railway: Reports February net loss of $144,023, against loss of $210,356 in the same month a year ago. Loss for the 2 months ended February 28 was $280,981, against loss of $452,721 in the like 1933 months.

Wabash Railway: Reports February net loss of $259,704, against loss of $703,517 in February last year. Loss for the 2 months ended February 28 was $741,540, against loss of $1,560,888 in the same 2 months last year.

Chicago & North Western: In preliminary estimates places its deficit for the first quarter at slightly more than $2,500,000 after charges, it was stated yesterday by Fred W. Sargent, president. The figure given would be about $2,300,000 less than the loss reported by the road for the first quarter last year.

CRUDE RUBBER CONSUMPTION IS UP IN MARCH—USE FOR MONTH INCREASES 163.8 OVER REQUIREMENT IN 1933 PERIOD

NEW YORK, April 16.—Consumption of crude rubber by manufacturers in the United States for the month of March amounted to 47,614 long tons, which compares with 40,609 long tons for February.

March consumption shows an increase of 17.2 percent over February, and 163.8 percent over March a year ago, according to statistics released by the Rubber Manufacturers Association today. Consumption for March (1933) was reported to be 18,047 long tons.

This organization reports imports of crude rubber for March to be 44,605 long tons, an increase of 43.7 percent over February and 60 percent above March 1933.

This association estimates total domestic stocks of crude rubber on hand March 31 at 351,064 long tons, which compares with February 28 stocks of 357,094 long tons. March stocks show a decrease of 1.7 percent as compared with February and were 10.1 percent below stocks of March 31, 1933.

The participants in the statistical compilation report 54,722 long tons of crude rubber afloat for the United States ports on March 31, compared with 53,063 long tons afloat on February 28 this year, and 29,531 long tons afloat on March 31, 1933.

March reclaimed rubber consumption is estimated to be 9,683 long tons, production 11,479 long tons, stocks on hand March 31, 25,113 long tons.

DOLLAR SALES OF AUTOS RISE 22 PERCENT

The annual dollar sales of new passenger automobiles declined 75 percent from 1929 to 1932 and recovered by 22 percent during the year 1933, according to the new monthly index of automobile sales appearing in the April issue of the Survey of Current Business published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The trend of sales was sharply downward from 1929 through 1932 and the first 4 months of 1933, but the greatest drop occurred between 1931 and 1932, when sales decreased 43.5 percent. The decrease between 1929 and 1930 was 35.5 percent and between 1930 and 1931 was 32.5 percent.

The largest months' sales shown by the index, which is based on the 1929–31 average as 100, occurred during the peak season of 1929, when the index numbers were 168.8 for March, 232.7 for April, and 205 for May. Even after allowance is made for usual seasonal fluctuations, the same 3 months of 1929 are still the largest, with adjusted index numbers of 153.5, 154.5, and 146, respectively. The lowest index numbers recorded are 17.3 for December 1933, 22.3 for October 1932, 17.6 for November 1932, and 19.3 for December 1932. But on a seasonally corrected basis October and November of 1932 become the lowest months, at approximately equal level, with adjusted index numbers of 28 and 28.5, respectively.

MARCH COTTON EXPORTS HIT BY SEASONAL CUT

Exports of raw cotton from the United States during March amounted to 550,000 bales, valued at $34,219,000, compared with 628,000 bales, valued at $37,280,000, in February and 486,000 bales, valued at $17,957,000, in March 1933, according to an analysis of the export figures by the Textile Division, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The March figures show a decline of 78,000 bales from the February total, which is seasonal. The decline in value was $3,061,000 from the value in February. On the other hand, the March figures showed an increase of 62,000 bales and $16,262,000 over the exports during March 1933.

For the 8 months of the cotton season, August to March, inclusive, the shipments aggregated 6,098,000 bales, valued at $331,831,000, compared with 6,085,000 bales, valued at $234,715,000, for the corresponding 8 months of 1932–33, representing a slight increase of 13,000 bales in quantity but a substantial increase of $97,116,000, or 41 percent, in value.

WESTINGHOUSE ORDERS UP 57 PERCENT TO $20,237,588 IN FIRST QUARTER—MARCH BOOKINGS SET MARK FOR 2½ YEARS—3-MONTH LOSS CUT TO $1,776,152

Orders received by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. for the first quarter of 1934 totaled $20,237,588, compared with $12,847,801 for the corresponding quarter of 1933, an increase of 57 percent, according to a statement made public today. At the same time it was reported that March bookings were in excess of any month since September 1931.

George H. Bucher was elected president yesterday of the Westinghouse Electric International Co. Mr. Bucher, who is also general manager of the company, has been with the Westinghouse organization since September 1909. R. B. Mildon was yesterday elected vice president in charge of marketing, engineering, manufacturing, and service of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

Sales billed by the manufacturing company for the first quarter of 1934 totaled $17,994,045, compared with $13,161,721 for the corresponding 1933 quarter, an increase of 36 percent. March sales billed were higher than in any month since April 1932.

Net loss for the quarter was $1,776,152, compared with $3,491,572 net loss for the first quarter of 1933. There were approximately 35,300 employees on the company's pay roll at the end of March, compared with 26,500 in March 1933.

"The improvement in business", continues the statement, "is most encouraging, but we would view the future with more optimism if the present restrictions curtailing and almost preventing the use of long-time credit were removed. The business of the Westinghouse Co. consists primarily of durable or capital goods which are paid for in normal times by money obtained by our customers from the sale of securities.

"At the present time little, if any, money is moving into industry from this source, due not only to restrictions on loans but also to a psychology which tends to discourage investment in improvements and betterments.

"It is a strange but significant fact that we are living in an age when any reputable citizen can borrow money with which to buy an automobile, but cannot borrow money with which to buy or build a home. Such conditions are abnormal. It is our opinion that credit conditions would greatly improve if the legislation affecting the sale and marketing of securities were handled in a manner conducive to stimulating the flow of credit from savings institutions to legitimate borrowings."

SCRIP GOING OUT OF USE IN IOWA—EASIER CONDITIONS LESSEN DEMAND FOR PAPER

DES MOINES, May 5.—Scrip, recognized by State legislation as depression money, is rapidly going out of circulation in Iowa.

Real cash from Federal C.W.A. and P.W.A. sources and improving business indexes apparently have lessened desire for the paper certificates.

The little northwest Iowa town of Hawarden, which stirred up an international flurry among economists with its first $300 scrip issue, has retired all of it at no cost. In Des Moines, county officials have likewise retired most of a $100,000 scrip issue.

"STEEL RATE AT 52 PERCENT, BEST SINCE AUGUST—HEAVY BOOKINGS, WITH HIGHER PRICES NEAR, MAKE GOOD OUTLOOK," SAYS IRON AGE—RAILROADS' ORDERS RISE—CONFUSION ON QUOTATION RESULTS FROM CONFLICTING VIEWS AMONG THE PRODUCERS

Production of raw steel has been increased this week to 52 percent of capacity, compared with 49½ percent a week ago. The present rate is the highest since the middle of last August. "Iron and steel makers", says the Iron Age, "are heavily booked for the second quarter, and with higher prices about to go into effect on most products the outlook in the industry is most favorable."

The review of this publication continues, in part, as follows:

"Some mills have such heavy commitments that they will be pressed to turn out the tonnage if buyers specify fully against their contracts. To prevent an accumulation of releases toward the end of the quarter a number of producers are already pressing their customers for shipping instructions. Under the most popular form of contract, buyers are required to order out material in approximately equal monthly quantities.

CONSUMERS ATTEMPT TO STOCK UP

"The anxiety of the mills to obtain releases is matched by the desire of most buyers to build up maximum stocks of materials at preadvance prices. Without doubt much of the pig iron and steel that will be made in the next 3 months will supply buyers' needs part way through the third quarter, barring a further acceleration of industrial activity.

"The increase in business coming from regular contract sources has been augmented by heavier releases from the railroads. Orders for car material are growing in number and tonnage, and purchases of track material have been large. Rail contracts placed in the final week before the expiration of the code provision permitting deliveries until August 31 called for 75,250 tons.

"The New Haven closed for 25,000 tons, the Baltimore & Ohio for 35,000, the Norfolk & Western for 10,000, the Maine Central for 4,200, and the Pere Marquette for 1,050. Total purchases since Transportation Coordinator Eastman first proposed Government financial aid amount to 627,000 tons, compared with his original estimate of 850,000. Only one large prospective order remains unplaced—35,000 tons for the Chesapeake & Ohio.

OPERATIONS RISE IN ALL DISTRICTS

"Operations are up 4 points to 54 percent at Chicago, 3 points to 40 percent at Pittsburgh, 3 points to 59 percent in the valleys, 2 points to 60 percent at Cleveland, 5 points to 59 percent at Buffalo, and 2 points to 70 percent in the Wheeling district. The Detroit rate continues at 100 percent, the average for the Philadelphia territory at 40 percent, and that for the South at 54 percent.

"Price advances are slow in taking effect. Under the code a price at a given basing point is considered effective until it is withdrawn. Since various producers have delayed following the lead of mills that first announced advances, the effective dates for price changes have been moved ahead, in some instances until next week. Part of the confusion growing out of the advances has been due to conflicting views of the mills."

STEEL BOOKINGS RISE—BUSINESS IN YOUNGSTOWN AREA THIS MONTH 23 PERCENT AHEAD OF 1933

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, April 18.—Steel bookings by district producers for the first half of April are 23 percent higher than for the corresponding period in April 1933, sales managers advise.

The Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. on Monday of this week received a larger volume of pipe orders than for any day in 3 years. Most of this tonnage is coming from jobbers who are building up their stocks in anticipation of larger consumer demand.

Both Republic Steel Corporation and Youngstown Sheet Tube have advanced pipe prices an average of $7 per ton. This action is expected to drive in considerable tonnage before April 24, when the increase becomes effective.

BIG GAINS SHOWN IN STEEL PROFITS—FOUR COMPANIES ALL REPORT STRIKING INCREASES OVER TOTALS YEAR AGO

NEW YORK, April 25.—Several steel companies, reporting their earnings for the first quarter of 1934 yesterday, showed striking gains over the comparable period of 1933.

Most companies showed better earnings than in the fourth quarter of last year but, with one exception, none of them did as well as in the third quarter of 1933, which included the sharp but short-lived summer boomlet.

The Inland Steel Co. reported first quarter net profit of $1,104,537, compared with net profit $529,373 in the preceding period, and a net loss of $1,012,053 in the corresponding period of 1933. It actually did better than in the September quarter of last year, when net of $623,612 was reported.

The United States Steel Corporation reported a net deficit of $6,989,965, compared with a deficit of $7,945,445 in the preceding quarter, and of $16,730,271 in the first quarter of 1933. In the third quarter of 1933 United States Steel's net deficit was only $2,717,014.

The Republic Steel Corporation reported a net loss of only $58,682 for the first quarter, compared with a loss of $1,268,472 in the preceding 3-month period, and a loss of $2,521,568 in the like period of last year. In the third quarter of last year, however, the company showed net income of $148,239.

Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation reported March quarter net loss of $1,924,524, or somewhat less than in the like period of last year, when the loss was $2,060,645. Its first quarter loss was larger than in either of the two preceding quarters, however. In the December quarter it was $626,418, and in the September quarter, $997,133.

FASTER PACE SET AT STEEL PLANTS—PRODUCTION JUMPS FOUR POINTS TO 56 PERCENT OF CAPACITY MARK

NEW YORK, April 25.—Steel production has jumped four points to 56 percent of capacity, and another week promises to put the rate above the 59-percent level of last July, which was the 1933 top, Iron Age says.

Increasing specifications against low-priced contracts have brought such a heavy rush in some products that mills fear they will not be able to clear their books by the end of the quarter, as required by the code, the review states.

"Recognizing the possibility of excessive pressure on the mills for shipments in June, an increasing number of consumers are anticipating their requirements. In other cases mills are now rolling material prior to the receipt of actual shipping orders.

"The rush to accumulate tonnage on the part of consumers is, no doubt, prompted in part by speculative motives. Besides the impetus that buying has received from recent price advances, the fear of railroad labor trouble and consequent hampering of transportation has also been a factor.

"The accelerating movement of material from producers to consumers has been sweeping in scope. May and June shipments of pig iron will be the largest in fully 2 years.

"The only developments out of step with the pronounced upward trend of business are a fresh outbreak of labor trouble in the automobile industry and further weakness in scrap prices."

The Iron Age scrap composite price has fallen to $12.42 a ton from $12.58 a week ago due to recessions at Pittsburgh and Chicago.

WRIGLEY NET IS $1,875,956

CHICAGO, April 25.—The William Wrigley, Jr., Co., manufacturers of chewing gum, reported net profit, after deducting taxes, of $1,875,956 for the 3 months ended March 31.

GAINS CONTINUING IN BUSINESS LINES—RETAIL TRADE REPORTED MOVING ACCORDING TO THE SEASON IN MOST CITIES—SALES OF AUTOS HOLD UP—STEEL INDUSTRY OPERATING AT HIGH RATE—CONDITIONS IN FEDERAL RESERVE DISTRICTS

Reports from most of the leading cities throughout the country continue to indicate rising activity and improving economic conditions, although there is occasional reference to post-Easter dullness.

Retail trade, as a whole, appears to be moving in accordance with seasonal trends. Summer wear is constituting the bulk of the department-store business, with demand for such heavier goods as furniture tapering off. There is also a good demand for paints, varnishes, and other requisites of seasonal household rejuvenation.

Sales in the automobile industry are still running at a high level, and manufacturers appear confident that they will be able to get over the bump of increased prices soon. There was some fear that the public might resist the higher prices, but that fear has vanished.

Larger shipments to automobile manufacturers, coupled with an improved volume of buying by railroads and equipment manufacturers and better structural activity, once again pushed the rate of steel-mill operations to the highest level since last July well above 50 percent of capacity.

WHOLESALING GOOD HERE—BUT RETAIL TRADE IS CHECKED BY WEATHER CONDITIONS

Weather conditions continued to exert a restrictive influence on retail trade here last week. Women's apparel and accessory departments made a better showing than in the previous week, but a slower pace developed in home furnishings. Indications are that dollar sales volume for the month thus far is about 4 to 5 percent less than in the same period a year ago, inclusive of liquor sales.

Activity in the major wholesale lines was well maintained, with merchandise for the summer season in strong request. The call for millinery was particularly heavy. Activity in the dress trade was curbed by the contractors' stoppage. The demand for grocery specialties and other foodstuffs was good. Prospects of further price increases stimulated buying of rugs. Furniture lines were quiet.

Retail sales of automobiles continued notably good. Building material lines showed increased effects of the public-works program, while the call for hardware and paints for spring refurbishing of homes was described as much ahead of a year ago.

In preparation for National Cotton Week, retailers placed a heavy volume of orders for cottons of all types. The silk and rayon markets were featureless.

Security prices were improved, largely as a result of a good rally on Friday. There had been some unsettlement on the preceding days because of weakness in the commodities, which also disappeared at the end of the week. Bonds advanced in all classifications except United States Governments, which were easy. The dollar dropped below the new parity with the franc. Bank clearings were at an unusually high level.

CLIMB IN PHILADELPHIA—PICK-UP IN INDUSTRIES, RETAIL SALES, AND BANK CLEARINGS

PHILADELPHIA, April 20.—Latest reports for the first quarter in this district indicate an increase in factory employment and a greater volume of products. Monthly progress has been made this year by many corporations, despite labor troubles.

The second quarter has started auspiciously in such industries as iron and steel, storage batteries, oil and gasoline, which report profits instead of heavy losses sustained last year. Moderate improvement is shown in the cotton, wool, and leather industries. Car loadings have increased.

There are numerous inquiries for New Jersey seashore properties for summer use.

The current week's large bank clearings are taken to reflect the improved condition of the district.

Owing to the increase in retail sales, local department stores are reporting profits instead of losses such as some important houses suffered last year.

Another indication of improvement is a shrinkage in the volume of sheriff sales, partly ascribed to the active work of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Real-estate transactions are more numerous, but work is largely centered in alterations.

For the first 2 months this year deposits of the Philadelphia Saving Fund Society increased $2,171,400 to $313,764,605. Among the 69,215 new depositors are 11,175 wage earners, 5,175 salaried employees, and 13,911 female wage earners, of whom 10,100 are wives of wage earners. In 1933 there was a $7,690,000 decrease.

NEW ENGLAND KEEPS GAINS—COTTON MILLS ARE FAIRLY ACTIVE—BUILDING CONTRACTS SPURT

BOSTON, April 20.—Industrial activity in New England is being maintained in general at about the same rate as in recent weeks. Cotton mills are fairly active. The industry as a whole has been in receipt of substantial additional orders during the last fortnight.

The woolen and worsted end of the textile industry is quiet. The better grades of worsteds have encountered distinct sales resistance. The local wool market is dead, but prices are being fairly well maintained; tops have been sagging lately.

The leather market here is strong, and buying is fairly active; shoe manufacturers are doing well for this season of the year.

Retail trade is fair; sales of furniture have been reported much improved of late. There has been a considerable increase in demand for electrical appliances.

Metal and machine plants are somewhat more active.

New building contracts for last week were the largest in some months.

CHICAGO RECORDS GAINS—WHOLESALERS REPORT UNEXPECTEDLY HIGH SALES—JOBS INCREASE

CHICAGO, April 20.—Although retail trade in the Middle West has gone below the pre-Easter totals, wholesalers reported unexpectedly high sales totals in the week just ended. Women's ready-to-wear and textile items moved in the biggest volume. Local dry-goods houses attributed the better than normal activity to restocking in preparation for May, which is always a big retail sales month.

The State Street department-store sales were reported averaging about 35 percent above last April. Sales of a large mail-order house through its retail outlets increased sharply in response to a well-advertised feature week.

Building continues to improve.

Employment is showing small increases in the State, contrary to the seasonal trend.

Steadily increasing steel orders promise an increase over the 54 percent local ingot operating ratio. Sales of a large iron jobbing company, it was announced, were nearly double those of the first quarter of 1933.

CLEVELAND ACTIVITY RISES—PRICE JUMP BRINGS WAVE OF STEEL BUYING—DRUG SALES INCREASE

CLEVELAND, April 20.—Industrial activity in this section continues to increase. The advance in steel prices has brought a wave of buying in anticipation of future needs.

Commercial failures in the area were down 72 percent in March as compared with March 1933, and in the first quarter when the drop from the 1932 period was 71 percent.

Dollar value of wholesale drug sales in the district in March was 70 percent larger than a year ago and the increase in the first quarter was 47 percent. Liquor sales were a factor in the increase.

Savings deposits at selected banks increased about 1 percent in March and at the month end were 2.1 percent larger than a year ago.

ST. LOUIS ACTIVITY LIVENS—SMALL INDUSTRIES SPEED UP, SHOE PLANTS BUSY, RETAIL TRADE BRISK

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 20.—The starting of the furnaces in the American Steel foundries plant this week, recalling of a large number of workmen, was regarded as a striking illustration of the improvement in the eighth Federal Reserve district.

Shoe plants are busy and most of them are on full schedules. Reports from numerous small enterprises indicate a steady speeding up. Retail trade shows wide gains over last year and wholesale houses have satisfactory orders.

The banking situation is clearing up. A large bank has moved into new quarters and throughout the district there are frequent reports of openings.

Bank clearings are well ahead of last year and compare favorably with the year before.

Carloadings of southwestern lines gain over the previous week, from present indications, and are far ahead of last year's totals. Reports indicate a steady reduction in unemployment.

Real-estate dealers state that the supply of rental property is rapidly decreasing and a building revival is in prospect.

Farm-product prices are steadily advancing.

Zinc and lead quotations are at fair levels and most properties are being operated.

KANSAS CITY BUYING RISES—RETAIL TRADE IMPROVES AND WHOLESALE LINES HOLD WELL

KANSAS CITY, April 20.—Retail trade in the tenth district improved over last week and wholesaler lines held up well, with the possible exception of fall clothing and furniture. The weekly statement of the Federal Reserve bank showed the first increase since March 7 in total reserves. The total had shrunk $20,000,000. The increase of $12,000,000 brought the total to $174,000,000. This is $50,000,000 above the figure for a year ago.

Bills discounted showed a decrease of $40,000, but the continuous accumulative losses since the first of the year amounted to $1,250,000 and since a year ago nearly $21,000,000. The total was only $267,000.

The reserve ratio rose a point to 65, compared with 60.5 a year ago.

Total clearings through the bank were $174,500,000, a gain of $16,000,000 over the preceding week and of $44,000,000 over a year ago.

ATLANTA BUSINESS BOOMS—DEPARTMENT-STORE SALES HIGHEST SINCE 1930—MANY LINES GAIN

ATLANTA, April 20.—General business conditions in the sixth Federal Reserve district continued on the upswing.

The volume of department-store business was about 40 to 50 percent greater than that for the 1933 week and considerably above that for any similar time since 1930.

Construction activity was brisk, with the awarding of new contracts showing only a slight let-down.

Further increases in pay rolls and lessening of relief rolls were reported.

Sales of furniture, automobiles, and building materials have exceeded expectations in recent weeks, according to a majority of leading dealers, and demands indicate increased activity in these lines.

N.Y. CENTRAL PROFITS JUMP IN FIRST QUARTER—NET OPERATING INCOME UP TO $8,211,195, AGAINST $3,365,067, WITH RISE IN MARCH EVEN SHARPER—GAINS OF 14 ROADS ABRUPT LAST MONTH—EARNINGS SHOW ADVANCE OF 204.4 PERCENT OVER 1933; GROSS ONLY 35 PERCENT HIGHER

The New York Central Railroad Co. reports net operating income for the first quarter of 1934 of $8,211,195, compared with $3,536,067 for the corresponding period of 1933. Gross revenues of the system for the quarter amounted to $75,532,887, compared with $62,189,249.

March net operating income of the system was $4,391,085, compared with $961,089 for the like month of 1933. Gross revenues for the month totaled $27,965,563, compared with $19,837,959.

Operating ratio lower

Operating expenses for the quarter were $56,253,325, compared with $47,987,258. March operating expenses were $19,846,446, compared with $15,456,854. Operating ratio of the system for the quarter was 74.5 percent, compared with 77.2 percent. March operating ratio was 71 percent, compared with 77.9 percent.

The first 14 railroads to report March net operating income had an aggregate of $14,920,000, compared with net operating income in March 1933, of $4,902,000, an increase of 204.4 percent. Gross earnings of the same roads in March amounted to $68,421,000, compared with $50,454,000, an increase of 35.6 percent.

March net far above February

In February the same carriers had net operating income of $10,034,000 and gross revenues of $58,583,000. March net operating income of these roads was 48.7 percent above the preceding month, and gross revenues were 16.8 percent above those reported for February.

WESTERN PACIFIC

The annual report of the Western Pacific Railroad Co. reveals that there are three notes outstanding in favor of the A. C. James Co. totaling $4,999,800. As security for the loans the railroad has pledged $6,249,500 general and refunding mortgage bonds.

The loan of $1,303,000 obtained by the railroad from the Railroad Credit Corporation has been reduced $22,699 through the application of distribution and tax refunds of the road and subsidiary companies, leaving a balance due of $1,280,300. During 1933 the railroad deposited $58,653 with the corporation, representing revenues accruing from emergency freight rates.

Western Pacific Railroad Corporation reports net income for 1933 of $607,594 compared with $803,128 in 1932. Combined statement of the corporation and subsidiaries shows net deficit for 1933 of $2,833,277 compared with $3,002,423 in 1932.

ADVERTISING EVIDENCE OF BUSINESS UPTURN

Continuing reports indicate upward swing in American business and sound hopeful notes for spring and summer improvement that will be most substantial.

Dun & Bradstreet report that 226 business failures throughout the United States during the week ending April 5 was the smallest number for any 1 week since the year 1920. In the same week a year before there were 418.

But the millions of readers of that popular magazine the Saturday Evening Post recently had presented to them the most satisfactory and most concrete evidence possible of the upturn. That magazine a week ago was the most bulky affair that it has been in 2 years. It was so because advertising by national concerns which use it as a medium for publicity had very substantially increased. In fact, the increase was about 70 percent over the best earlier issues.

But the spurt is noted not only by the Post but also by its brethren, the Ladies' Home Journal and the Country Gentleman. All reflect increased national business, and the story is brought home to every reader or handler of those magazines.

BOOST PAY IN WABASH PLANT—INCREASES OF 10 AND 5 PERCENT ANNOUNCED—MOVE TO AFFECT 225—MONTHLY PAY ROLL $1,400 HIGHER

WABASH, IND., May 15.—Lowell E. Longstreth, manager of the plant here of the Container Corporation of America, today announced a 10-percent wage increase for all workers getting 49 cents an hour or less and a 5-percent increase in wages for those receiving 50 cents an hour or more.

The increase will affect 225 workers in the plant, and will add approximately $1,400 to the monthly pay roll.

Previously the workers were paid the code scale of 38 cents an hour for men and 30 cents an hour for women. The increase makes a minimum of 44 cents an hour for men and 33 cents for women.

Longstreth said the increase is general in all places where the company operates plants, and brings wages in each plant up to the average wage in the territory served.

FACTORY JOBS SHOW INCREASE IN WISCONSIN

The volume of factory employment in Wisconsin is now larger than for any month since July 1931 except for September and October last fall, according to a report by the industrial commission of Wisconsin.

Other outstanding facts in the report follow:

PAY ROLLS SHOW INCREASE

"A preliminary tabulation of the pay-roll reports received from 1,066 factories in Wisconsin shows that the number of employees on pay rolls increased 2.7 percent and the aggregate amount of such pay rolls increased 3 percent between March 15 and April 15, 1934. The 1,066 reporting factories referred to above accounted for a total of 109,266 employees and a total of $2,066,606 of pay roll in 1 week of April 1934.

"Factory employment in Wisconsin is definitely on the increase. The gains appear in more employees on pay rolls, employees averaging more hours of work per week, employees getting larger weekly earnings, and industrial plants operating more hours per week.

"In Milwaukee County a group of 367 identical factories had 47,328 employees on March 15 of this year, as against 33,752 employees on March 15 last year. The operating time of these 367 identical factories has increased 3.6 percent over a year ago, while the number of persons employed by them has been increased by 40.2 percent.

AVERAGE WAGE $18.45

"Factory employees averaged $18.45 per week during March 1934, in comparison with $13.24 in March 1933, $17.47 in March 1932, $22.69 in March 1931, $25.75 in March 1930, and $26.95 in March 1929.

"Present earnings are higher than for any month since August 1931."

UTILITY FIRMS HERE REPORT SUBSTANTIAL GAINS IN BUSINESS—POWER OUTPUT FOR APRIL 40 PERCENT GREATER THAN 1933 MONTHLY AVERAGE—GAS USE INCREASES—MORE TELEPHONE AND WATER CONNECTIONS MADE REFLECT IMPROVEMENT HERE

Substantial improvement in conditions in Chattanooga is reflected in the records of the utility companies which supply electricity, gas, water, and telephone service here. The companies find that a number of new customers have been added to their books, and in the case of several of the companies the use of the service has been greater.

The Chattanooga Gas Co., for example, for the period from May 1 to May 15, added 178 customers, Manager A. J. Goss said Thursday. April, with one exception, was the biggest month from the standpoint of new customers of any month in the past 15 years. For the first 4 months of the year, with exception of one period, was the best in 15 years, he said.

POWER OUTPUT GAINS

The power output, domestic and industrial, by the Tennessee Electric Power Co. for the Chattanooga district during April showed an increase of approximately 40 percent as compared to the monthly average for 1933, J. A. Longley, vice president and general manager of the power company, said. Mr. Longley did not compjare April with April of last year for the reason that April 1933 was an abnormally low month, and a comparison would hardly give an accurate picture.

During the year ending with April, domestic customers of the power company here increased the use of current by an average of 107 kilowatts. They used on an average of 16 percent more current, for which they paid $6 less. The average price fell from 5.59 cents per kilowatt-hour to 4.05 cents per kilowatt.

During the first four and a half months of the year there was a net increase in the number of telephones in service here of 628, L. L. Billups, local manager of the Southern Bell, announced. The net increases by months were as follows: January, 165; February, 115, March, 129; April, 135; and through May 15, 84. The increasing number of subscribers to telephone and gas service and the increasing use of electricity strikingly reflect the better financial condition of the people.

TELEPHONES RESTORED

Chattanoogans who had their telephones taken out when they felt the pinch of the depression are now having them restored. Families "doubling up" are moving into homes and apartments of their own, with the result that the number of vacant houses is rapidly diminishing and there are few vacant desirable moderately priced homes and apartments, real-estate men report.

Records of the City Water Co. also reflected gains. Since the first of the year 53 new services have been connected to the system. Of these, 27 represent new services where there were two or more houses or apartments on the same meter. The remaining 26 installations represent new homes and businesses of various kinds.

Manager Goss, of the gas company, attributed the increase in the number of gas customers to two things—the new lower rates and general improvement in conditions. In April the domestic and commercial gas consumption ran ahead of last year, although the industrial consumption showed a slight reduction.

EMPLOYMENT, PAY ROLLS HERE RISE STEADILY—FIGURES FOR BUFFALO FAR ABOVE GENERAL AVERAGES FOR ENTIRE STATE

Employment in New York State factories increased 1.4 percent from the middle of March to the middle of April, continuing the upward movement apparent during the previous 2 months, according to a statement issued yesterday by State Industrial Commissioner Elmer F. Andrews. Total wage payments showed a rise of 1.2 percent during the same period. These gains raised the State labor department's index number of factory employment to 73.2, the highest point reached since September 1931, and the index of total factory pay rolls to 59, the highest level since November 1931.

Compared with a year ago, employment and pay rolls during the middle of April were 32.4 percent and 47.1 percent greater, respectively. The normal seasonal course of employment and pay rolls is downward during April.

METAL AND MACHINERY GROUPS GAIN

The metal and machinery groups continued to record sharp gains in employment, with reporting manufacturers adding 5,828 persons to their working forces, a gain of 5.4 percent over March. The slowing up of manufacturing for the spring and summer trade was reflected in reports from the clothing and millinery industry group. Reporting concerns were operating with 1,225 fewer persons in April than in March, a decrease of nearly 2.5 percent. Employment gains in the textile industry continued to be registered during April, due principally to further large increases at knit-goods mills. For all textiles combined, the rise in employment amounted to about 1 percent. Many industries in the food and tobacco group had larger working forces in April than in March, but reductions in a few divisions caused the group as a whole to show a net loss of 1.2 percent.

Factory employment and pay rolls in the Buffalo area continued to show increases during the period from the middle of March to the middle of April. The number of persons employed rose 5.3 percent and wage payments increased 8.3 percent, advancing the index numbers, which are computed with the averages for the 3 years 1925–27 taken as 100, to 71.5 for employment and 56.7 for pay rolls. Compared with a year ago, employment and pay rolls this April were approximately 60 percent and 85 percent greater, respectively. Average weekly earnings were $24.53 this month, against $23.85 in March and $21.02 a year ago.

The principal gains again were registered in the metal industries. In the metal group as a whole, reporting firms added 2,780 persons to their working forces, and paid out nearly 17 percent more in weekly wages than in March. The automotive division, which had reported a sharp decline last month, showed the largest gains this month, increasing employment and pay rolls to approximately one and one half times the March figures. Pig iron and steel plants and railroad equipment and repair shops again showed substantial increases. Smaller gains occurred in brass, copper, and aluminum, and sheet-metal and hardware concerns. Makers of heating apparatus and of machinery were slowing up operations somewhat and were letting go help.

Increases in employment and pay rolls were reported by the stone, clay and glass, leather and rubber products, and printing groups. Textile mills, water, light, and power plants, and food-products concerns had about the same number of employees as in March, but paid out more in wages. Manufacturers of wood products, paper and paper goods, and clothing showed reductions both in working forces and in pay rolls. The chemicals-and-oils group suffered sharp losses, due almost entirely to curtailment in a large plant.

BUSINESS GAINS CONTINUE, DUN REPORT SHOWS—AGENCY SURVEY FINDS SENTIMENT AGAINST RESTRICTIONS—RETAIL SALES AT NEW PEAK

Reports from every part of the country during the past week brought uniform proof of a further definite upswing in business and industry, the Dun & Bradstreet Trade Review said yesterday.

The review commented:

"While full credit is accorded the emergency legislation enacted last year for the wholesome betterment provided by the strong foundation laid for business recovery as well as for the strengthening of the Nation's banking structure, considerable stress is now being placed on the need for allowing the forward movement to proceed unhampered by new and unnecessary restrictions."

VOLUME ADVANCES

Regarding the movement of retail trade, the Review asserted:

"Almost without exception, leading retailers of the country find that the tapering off in business, which usually is apparent after Easter, has not developed, as volume last Saturday in some centers was the heaviest for any single day in 3 years, with the gain reaching 40 to 50 percent over the comparable period last year when Easter buying was at its peak.

"As the month advances gains will become larger, as spring requirements have been covered only partially thus far, and the larger income of workers, when compared with a year ago, will carry the totals to more advanced levels than appeared likely a month ago.

OPERATING SCHEDULES RISE

"In the industrial divisions, operating schedules are rising at a more rapid rate than they did in March, unaffected to any major degree by the labor difficulties still unsettled in some districts.

"The leading wholesale markets became unexpectedly active this week, as many buyers were forced to replenish spring goods, which had been ordered too sparingly."

The volume was not composed entirely of fill-in requirements, however, as many new orders were placed for merchandise needed during the next 2 weeks, the agency said.

FIGURES PROVE RECOVERY HERE—NEW DIRECTORY SHOWS BUSINESS GAINS

A "Dynamic City" definitely on the way to economic recovery is reflected in R. L. Polk & Co.'s 1934 Detroit City Directory, now off the press and being delivered to subscribers. Gains in population, gains in diversity of activities, gains in employment, and gains in numerous other angles of the city's life were encountered in the drive for directory data, the publishers said:

"In its 2,440 pages the directory lists 760,912 names, as against the 734,856 represented in the 1932–33 edition. The eligibility age limit for listing in the directory, 17, was maintained."

For the first time since the 1930 United States census, the Polk organization estimates the population of the area covered by the directory, placing it at 1,624,527. This takes in Detroit, Highland Park, Hamtramck, the Grosse Pointe communities, and Lochmoor. The publishers declined to say how much of an increase from the ebb tide of population during early 1933 this represents, but ventured the opinion that the recovery has been large.

Significant among the observations of the Polk Co. on their directory canvass were:

Longer pay-roll lists at industries than for several years past.

Thousands of reoccupied stores, offices, homes, and apartments, with a vast reduction in vacant property and a decided reversal of the doubling-up tendency of depression days.

A marked revival of hope and morale on the part of housewives interviewed, and a forward-looking feeling among business men of all classes.

A wide-spread effect in industry and trade from repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Reconditioning and modernization of homes under the Government loan plans.

Glancing over the directory one may note the new addresses of Government offices in the Federal Building; the frequency of the occupation "bartender", gone for these many years; and the return of brewing and distilling classifications and terminology in the classified and advertising sections.

APRIL PAY ROLL HIGHEST IN YEARS—UP 7.18 PERCENT FROM MARCH AND 77.18 PERCENT FROM 1933 MONTH

The greatest increase in years is noted in the average weekly pay roll for April for the city, according to figures gathered by the chamber of commerce from the banks making up the pay lists for the commercial and industrial concerns of the city. The weekly pay roll was $768,615, against $717,079 for March, an increase of 7.18 percent. The April 1933 pay roll was $433,781, showing a 77.18 percent increase.

The report today also shows a gain of 4.73 percent in postal receipts, a gain of 31.86 percent in bank debits, a gain of 67.27 percent in bank clearings, a gain of 4.20 percent in gas consumption, and a gain of 37.81 percent in electrical consumption—all indicate improved conditions.

The actual figures for these items for April of this year and April of last year, respectively, are:

Postal receipts $75,813, against $72,388; bank debits $41,019,717, against $31,108,109; bank clearings $8,422,846, against $5,035,405; gas consumption 83,517,000 cubic feet, against 84,944,900 cubic feet; and electrical consumption 12,391,000 kilowatt-hours, against 8,991,000 kilowatt-hours.

REPORT REFLECTS EMPLOYMENT GAIN

Increased activity in private industry and Public Works projects is reflected in the April report of the National Reemployment Service in Minnesota, issued today by Dreng Bjornaraa, State director.

Placements for the month numbered 15,074, of whom 13,490 were men and 1,584 women. The report included 3,929 placements on C.W.A., R.W.A., and E.R.A.; 2,752 with P.W.A. and 8,393 with private employers and local governmental units.

Veterans with dependents are given preference on Public Works projects, and 1,532 of those placed in April are from this group.

National Reemployment offices serve the State, except for the counties of Hennepin and Ramsey and the city of Duluth. Activities are centered in 12 district offices.

PLANT MACHINERY HUMS TO OLD TUNE—BRINGS BUSINESS TO OIL WELL IMPROVEMENT CO.

The machinery is humming to the tune of increasing business in the plant of the Oil Well Improvement Co. on the Sand Springs Road, it was reported yesterday. Alf G. Heggem, Tulsa industrialist, is president of the company.

During the depression the plant operated with a skeleton force of about 10 men. Now 40 men are employed there and Heggem stated yesterday that he expects to be employing a total of 100 men within the next 3 weeks.

Orders already received insure a continuous plant operation for an indefinite period, Heggem said.

FIFTY-PERCENT CUT IN STATE'S JOBLESS ARMY IN YEAR

Pennsylvania's jobless army was reduced by almost 50 percent in the year from March 1933 to March 1934 the department of labor and industry reported today.

The department's bureau of accounts and statistics reported unemployed persons in the State in March totaled 699,482, as compared with an unemployed total of 1,379,351 a year before.

None of these figures include persons temporarily employed on C.W.A. or works-relief projects.

"The trend of industrial employment in Pennsylvania continued upward in March, registering a 4 percent gain over February," the report continued. "Employment increases were shown for 47 of the 66 industries represented in the survey."

Schuylkill County, the report showed, has the largest percentage of unemployment in relation to working population, the figure being 26.7 percent. Eight other counties where the percentage exceeded 20 were Carbon, Beaver, Northumberland, Allegheny, Washington, Luzerne, Philadelphia, and Westmoreland, most of them coal-producing localities.

FOUR HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVEN GIVEN JOBS IN PAST MONTH—PLACEMENTS FOR APRIL REPORTED BY LOCAL OFFICE OR RE-EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

There was a total of 427 placements made by the Kenton County office of the National Reemployment Service, Covington, during April, it was stated Friday in the monthly report of the activities of the office, sent to Louisville by Ralph Moser, district manager.

The figures include 225 men working on the P.W.A. road project at Ryland, Mr. Moser said.

"The new district plan of the Reemployment Service has necessitated a complete change in the method of keeping records", Mr. Moser declared. "This has kept the entire force busy and prevents temporarily the usual contracts with business houses and private industries. The clean-up campaign this week had given an added impetus to employment, but these placements, of course, are only temporary.

"The difficulty now lies not in placing laborers and mechanics, but in obtaining openings for the 'white collar' class. Employers requiring store clerks, salesmen, male and female stenographers, bookkeepers, and clerks are urged to place their orders with this office at 118 West Fifth Street, or phone Hemlock 5241. Competent help is available instantly."

CALIFORNIA EMPLOYMENT CLIMBS IN APRIL

The number of employees on the pay roll of 1,146 representative manufacturing establishments in California employing more than 60 percent of the State's wage earners totaled 160,964 during April, an increase of 24.6 percent over April last year. During the month aggregate weekly pay rolls of the reporting firms increased 32.4 percent, but the amount of the average weekly pay check gained only 6.3 percent.

Wholesale and retail establishments, not included in the foregoing, reported an increase of 12.1 percent in the number of workers employed during April as compared with April of last year, and the public utilities as a group reported a decline of six tenths of 1 percent in the number of employees.

The telephone and telegraph companies reported a 3.3 percent reduction in number of workers, while the water, light, and power and electric railway and bus operators of the State reported an increase of 2 percent.

Figures on California employment are furnished by the State division of labor statistics.

DENVER & RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILROAD PUTS FORCE TO WORK—RAILROAD EMPLOYS 200 ON MAINTENANCE SINCE MAY 1

Approximately 200 maintenance workers have been employed by the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co. since May 1, announced A. J. Cronin, assistant traffic manager, Thursday.

One hundred and fifty of the men have been put on in the back shops, for locomotive and other heavy repairs, while two extra gangs of maintenance workers also have been hired, Mr. Cronin said.

"Traffic into Salt Lake is 50 percent greater than for this period last year. It is to take care of this increased traffic and to meet an expected additional increase this fall that we are putting all equipment into first-class condition", he said.

Much heavier traffic is anticipated in Utah fruits and vegetables this year than last, Mr. Cronin said. Larger acreage of vegetables have been planted and the outlook for Utah fruit, last year practically a total failure, appears good, he said.

"Although drought conditions are general throughout the region, according to reports we have received, the season is approximately 1 month advanced over the normal year, and many of the crops are expected to mature before the water supply is used up."

[From the Harrisburg, (Pa.) News, May 21, 1934]

OUT OF THE DEPTHS

Just half as many Pennsylvanians were out of jobs in March of this year as in March a year ago, official figures of the State department of labor and industry show. To many persons who have been accustomed to think that America is still in the depths of the depression, this reduction in unemployment comes as a pleasant shock.

There is only one explanation for this gratifying shrinkage in the army of the unemployed. Times are better. Jobs have been opening up. Industry and business are moving upward. How else can the absorption of 680,000 persons in jobs be interpreted?

Announcement is made that in the reduction of the unemployed from 1,379,351 in March of last year to 699,482 this year persons employed on C.W.A. projects are not included. That means that the ordinary channels of trade took on the unemployed who in March of this year were getting back to their jobs at a 4 percent faster pace than in the preceding month. Increased employment was reported from 47 of 66 industries.

The mere dissemination of such figures ought to be helpful. The American people are beginning to shed their mantles of gloom. The defeatist attitude which slowed up recovery at one time is vanishing. The conviction grows that the country is pretty much out of the marshland and little more is required than a constantly growing conviction that this is true. Such figures as have just been made public are tremendously stimulating.

JERSEY CITY REPORT SHOWS GAIN IN BUILDING BOOM—FIRST 4 MONTHS OF YEAR FIND CONDITIONS ON ROAD TO RECOVERY—A MARKED INCREASE IN BUILDING OPERATIONS IN JERSEY CITY IS REVEALED BY THE RECORD OF THE BUILDING DEPARTMENT COVERING THE FIRST 4 MONTHS OF THIS YEAR

According to figures released by Superintendent of Buildings Edward A. Spoerer this morning, there is an increase of $63,115 in cost of building operations over the same period last year.

From January 1 to April 30 last, the estimated cost of new buildings, some completed and others under course of construction, was $289,728. The amount in 1933 for the same time was $226,613.

"The increase is an indication that building operations are on an upward trend", stated Superintendent Spoerer. "In addition, our office activities have also increased."

"Jersey City", continued Mr. Spoerer, "enjoys the distinction of being the first city in New Jersey, since the beginning of the year, where an apartment dwelling is being constructed. My authority is the tenement-house commission.

NEW APARTMENTS

"Two apartment houses are in the course of construction at 166–172 Jewett Avenue. The builders are the Unix Holding Co. They are three-story structures and are being erected at an estimated cost of $80,000. When finished, the dwellings will house 16 families each. Their design and construction are the last word in apartment buildings. Located a short distance from the Hudson Boulevard, the new apartments will be within easy accessibility from every transportation line.

"Another outstanding new structure is the three-story apartment and office building at 902 Bergen Avenue. The finishing touches are being applied. When completed, the building will cost in the neighborhood of $65,000. The owner is Joseph Ellman, of Jersey City.

"Since January 1", added Mr. Spoerer, "a number of one- and two-story frame and brick dwellings have been erected.

"Many industrial companies and property owners have filed plans for the renovating and altering of their buildings. This is, indeed, a good sign, proving conclusively that real-estate values are bound to increase. People are again displaying confidence. This is evident in the money being expended for the repairing and redecorating of their properties.

HAS COME-BACK

"As a result of the property owners' activities, architects and builders are beginning to be kept busy.

"The time is not far off when building operations and real-estate activities will be on a par with conditions prevalent before the depression."

2,250,000 SHARE IN PAY ADVANCES—18,000 FIRMS REPORT TO CREDIT BUREAU

More than 2,250,000 workers have shared in wage advances in the last 15 months, it was reported by the Merchants' Credit and Adjustment Bureau in its weekly bulletin to merchants here issued yesterday.

Reports were gleaned from 18,000 firms, and while the reports indicated only 300 were in the group of those receiving increases as of January 1, 1933, the number has risen in the last month.

Most of the companies also earned a fair profit in the same period.

Merchants figure this movement has greatly expanded purchasing power and restored confidence to workers.

IMPROVEMENT IN BUSINESS SHOWN—SPRINGFIELD WORKS OF OLIVER CO. HAS SUBSTANTIAL GAIN

Substantial increase in the business of the Springfield works of the Oliver Farm Equipment Co. in recent months was reported Saturday by E. B. McDonald, plant manager. During April, Mr. McDonald said, the local works employed more persons than at any other one time since 1930.

While some seasonal decline during May prior to the annual inventory period, starting June 1, is anticipated, "there is every reason", Mr. McDonald said, "to anticipate that the Springfield plant will enjoy an even better fall and winter this year than was the case last year."

Mr. McDonald's statement was as follows:

"The Springfield works of the Oliver Farm Equipment Co. has experienced a substantial increase in business during recent months. The peak was reached during the month of April, just prior to the spring seeding season, and at that time, according to company officials, there were more people employed at the Springfield works than at any other one time since early in 1930.

"In accordance with usual yearly trends, operations will taper off somewhat during May prior to the annual inventory period which starts June 1.

"In spite of the fact that the last 3 years have been exceedingly difficult ones for farmers generally, the Oliver Springfield works has done a considerable amount of engineering and development work. A number of new products have been designed and tested in the field. These products have recently been released for sale by the dealer organization and an active demand is anticipated.

"The Oliver Co. operates four large factories, at Charles City, Iowa; Battle Creek, Mich.; Springfield, and South Bend, Ind. At South Bend the company has a particularly large foundry, and it has been found economical to make a considerable tonnage of castings used at Springfield and other plants in that foundry. With business growing better there is every reason to anticipate that the Springfield plant will enjoy an even better fall and winter this year than was the case last year."

CONTINUED IMPROVEMENT

The Dun & Bradstreet review for the week forms another record of business recovery. Despite the release of several million workers from the C.W.A. rolls, trade during the last week continued to show a gain. The tapering off in business which was looked for in many lines after Easter failed to develop this year.

The many new shiny cars on the streets and highways is another index of buying power being exercised. April sales are expected to match those of March, despite the fact that deliveries during the last 10 days of that month were the highest since May 1931, while the month as a whole exceeded any in 1931.

With steel production approaching 50 percent of capacity, it may be felt that this pivotal industry is nearing a normal production. Building, which has been lagging badly, gave most encouraging evidence of definite improvement, when contracts for the month were almost 200 percent above those of March of last year.

The progress is slow and steady and it is the absence of a spurt, such as that which came last July, which extends assurance that it is more or less of a permanent nature.

While the heavy industries are still 50 percent below normal production, the so-called "consumer industries"—those which turn out food, clothing, and other things which are used by the masses—are now within 15 percent of normal. It is corporations and larger business units which support the capital-goods trade. Naturally there has been a reluctance during this period of flux to embark upon expansions and plan rehabilitations which form so much a part of the demand for heavy machinery and other heavy products. As a matter of fact there has been little need of improvements of this sort, since the productive capacity of industry remains far in excess of demand.

The hue and cry which has been raised about the baneful effect of the Securities Act disregards conditions which would have discouraged investment along this line during the past year, even in the lack of legislation which sought to eradicate evils which were all too prevalent in the past.

With the demand for short-term gilt-edge bonds exceeding the supply at present, money must flow soon to solid capital financing.

The most encouraging change which has come about in the past 12 months is that money is again seeking investment, whereas this time last year found everyone converting whatever he could into money.

NOT SO SICK

It is current fashion for the foes of Roosevelt recovery to beat their breasts on behalf of the little man. One is told that N.R.A. has become the handmaiden of monopoly and that its codes are putting a millstone around the neck of all the little businesses of all the little men.

Yet an erroneous report from Washington that the codes for the service industries will be abandoned brings several thousand protests to the National Recovery Administration, mostly from the dry-cleaning industry, admittedly one of N.R.A.'s problem children. Manifestly most of them must have come from little men, for there are not that many big ones.

Another index of the business health of the little man is the steady decline in commercial failures. Last week, reports Dun & Bradstreet, failures were fewer than for any similar period in 14 years. They numbered 222 against 437 a year ago, and a weekly average of over 400 in predepression years.

Still another indication that all the little men are not dead or dying is the substantial decrease in the number of vacant stores, noted in Cleveland and almost every other city. They should be increasing if one is to believe the recovery critics' tales of woe, for in the main it is the little men who do business in the little stores.

Many little men in business have been having their troubles, even as have the big men. But many of them seem to be convalescing very successfully.

ROADS REPORT BIG INCREASE IN BUSINESS—PASSENGER TRAFFIC UP 20 PERCENT, CARLOADINGS 26 PERCENT

Railroad freight and passenger business in Arkansas for the first 4 months of the year show a substantial increase over the figures for the corresponding period last year. Passenger traffic has increased about 20 percent, number of passengers almost half, and freight carloadings slightly more than 26 percent.

Officials of the Missouri Pacific and Rock Island systems Friday said not only has there been an increase in business here but at most points served in Arkansas by the two roads. Business of last summer was considerably over that of the previous summer, and officials anticipate a heavy summer tourist business this year.

Some stations on the Missouri Pacific have reported number of passengers doubled over that of the same period last year, while at Little Rock the number of passengers has been about 50 percent greater each month since the first of the year over corresponding months last year. The Rock Island reported an average of about 45-percent increase in number of passengers.

Passenger revenues of the two systems is reported considerably greater than last year, while in Arkansas the increase averages about 20 percent. Little Rock passenger revenue to the Missouri Pacific has run from 5 to 20 percent greater than the same month last year, while on the Rock Island the average is about the same. Each month since December the Rock Island has had more passenger revenue here than last year.

For the first 15 days in May the Rock Island reported about an 18-percent increase in passenger revenue.

CARLOADINGS INCREASE

Figures compiled by J. C. Murray, chief of the traffic department of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce, show a 26-percent-plus increase in carloadings in Little Rock and North Little Rock from January to April, inclusive, in 1934, over the loadings of the corresponding 4 months of 1933.

Mr. Murray's figures on cotton shipments for this period in 1934 show a decrease under the first 4-month period of the preceding year. He explained that this was not significant of a decrease in cotton business, but that the difference is due to an enormous stock of cotton being held on account of Government loans.

Carloads of general merchandise and commodities received and forwarded here during the first 4 months of this year totaled 23,301 as compared to 18,477 during the corresponding period in 1933. This is an increase of 4,824 carloads, or slightly more than 26 percent. Cotton shipments, which are measured in bales rather than carloads, were 71,563 bales during the first 4-month period in 1934 compared to 84,753 bales during the corresponding period in 1933.

JOBS, PRODUCTION, PAY ROLLS INCREASE—FEDERAL RESERVE REPORTS UPWARD CURVE WHILE PRICES MARK TIME—STEADY GAINS SHOWN—FOUR MAJOR INDUSTRIES ENLARGE OUTPUTS—STORE SALES AHEAD OF LAST YEAR

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Employment, pay roll, and factory production increases were reported today by the Federal Reserve Board in a review which showed the general commodity price level marking time.

"Volume of manufacturing production increased during April, while the output of mines declined", the Board said in its monthly summary.

EMPLOYMENT LEAPS

"Employment and pay rolls continued to increase. The general level of commodity prices remained substantially unchanged during April and the first 3 weeks of May, although prices of individual commodities showed considerable changes."

Adjusting the increase in manufacturing and the drop in mining activity, the Board found its combined index of industrial production remained unchanged at 85 percent of its 1923–25 average. Analyzing the important factors, the Board said:

"The growth in manufacturing reflected increases in iron and steel, automobiles, and meat packing. Lumber production declined in April and activity at wool and silk mills was considerably reduced, while cotton consumption by mills showed little change.

PETROLEUM OUTPUT RISES

"Crude petroleum output continued to increase, but there was a more than seasonal decline at the beginning of April in the mining of both anthracite and bituminous coal. During the first 2 weeks of May steel operations increased further, but declined somewhat in the third week. Output of automobiles decreased considerably in May.

"The volume of employment and wage payments continued to increase in April, and employment in factories, according to the new index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, was larger than at any time since the end of 1930.

"There was a substantial seasonal increase in the number of workers employed in private construction, as well as in those engaged in projects financed by the Public Works Administration.

MORE JOBS REPORTED

"Employment on railroads, in metal mining and quarrying, and in various service activities also increased further, while in coal mining there was a considerable decrease."

The Board said April showed a substantial decline in Public Works contracts and a "slight increase" in contracts for privately financed projects.

Department store sales, while larger than a year ago, showed little change from March to April.

SOME COMMODITIES DECLINE

Grains, cotton, silk, and silver were named by the Board as commodities which showed sharp price declines in April, only to rise during the first 3 weeks of May. Textile products went down in recent weeks and rubber prices, after an early May advance, dropped off. While steel scrap declined, finished steel products, such as automobiles and building materials, advanced in April. Cattle and beef prices rose during April and early May, but hogs declined.

UNEMPLOYMENT CUT 40 PERCENT

NEW YORK, May 23.—The National Industrial Conference Board, in a survey issued today, estimated the total number of unemployed workers in April at 7,907,000. This figure, said the Board, represented a decline of 114,000 from the March total and a reduction of 5,296,000, or 40.1 percent, as compared with March 1933, when unemployment was at its highest point.

[From the Binghamton (N.Y.) Press, May 11, 1934]

BINGHAMPTON—INDEX HIGHEST IN STATE; WAGE TOTALS ALSO UP—BOTH E.J. AND I.B.M. PAY ROLLS LARGER THAN AT HEIGHT OF BOOM—RATED AT 117.6—INCREASE OF 2 PERCENT IN PLANT FORCES FROM FEBRUARY TO MARCH SHOWN

Climaxing a steady increase which began in March 1933, factory employment in the Binghamton industrial district, which includes Endicott and Johnson City, during March 1934 reached a peak which exceeded the high level established in 1929, according to the industrial bulletin just published by Elmer F. Andrews, State industrial commissioner.

Substantiating the State bulletin are statistics of Endicott Johnson Corporation and International Business Machines Corporation, which reveal a decided increase for March over the 1929 peak month, September, in both factory employment and total pay rolls. For the entire district the pay-roll level for March 1933 was approximately 10 points below the 1929 peak.

State computations show that the Binghamton district, leading all other State districts during March, had an index rating of 117.6, as compared with 117 for September 1929. The average for the years 1926–27 is taken for the index base of 100.

Endicott Johnson Corporation in March had on its factory pay rolls 17,874 employees, according to Bruce L. Babcock, treasurer. At the peak of employment in 1929—September—E.J. had 15,321 factory employees, Mr. Babcock said today. He explained that these figures do not include executives and others employed outside the factories. This is an increase of 2,553 employees, or 16.6 percent.

The high E.J. weekly pay roll for factory employees in March was $457,487.41, as compared with the high weekly pay roll of $430,090.62 during September 1929. This is a total increase of 6.1 percent.

Although the total weekly pay roll was increased, the average weekly earnings per factory employee decreased, Mr. Babcock explains, pointing out that the average for September 1929 was $28.07, as compared with the weekly average of $25.60 in March 1934, a difference of 8.8 percent.

Although Frank C. Venner, resident manager of the I. B. M. factories in Endicott, was unable to give detailed figures on his firm's pay rolls and employment, he estimated that employment had increased "at least 30 percent since 1929", and that total weekly pay rolls increased in a slightly smaller proportion.

Commissioner Andrews, in the Industrial Bulletin, explains that employment in Binghamton district factories increased 2 percent from February to March 1934, and total wage payments advanced 2.7 percent. Average weekly earnings for the entire district, he points out, were $24.55 in March, as compared with $24.38 in February and $17.62 in March 1933.

The commissioner's comment follows:

"Employment in Binghamton factories rose 2 percent from February to March, and wage payments increased 2.7 percent, advancing the employment index to 117.6 and the pay-roll index to 112.6. The gains since a year ago were extended to 15.1 percent employment and to 60.4 percent for pay rolls. Average weekly earnings were $24.55, against $24.38 in February and $17.62 a year ago.

UPSWING SEEN IN EMPLOYMENT FIGURES HERE—CITY ASSESSOR SAYS MANY MORE REPORTED BACK ON REGULAR JOBS

That employment is showing a steady upswing in Johnstown is the opinion of M. M. Chudy, city assessor, who is at present making the occupational-tax assessment of all residents here.

Chudy stated that many persons who last year were carried on his books as day laborers because they could find no work at their trades, have again secured employment as skilled workers. "This", Chudy said, "indicates that jobs are more plentiful than they were a year ago." The assessor said that scores of instances of this nature were found.

Chudy also was of the opinion that as prosperity returns here a great deal of money will be expended repairing homes. "The building survey conducted as an R.W.D. project indicated that many homes are in need of repairing", he said.

JOBS AND WAGES GAINED IN APRIL—EMPLOYEES INCREASED 3.2 PERCENT OVER YEAR AGO

Commissioner Edwin S. Smith, of the State department of labor and industries, said yesterday that, based on reports from 1,391 manufacturing establishments in Massachusetts, the number of wage earners employed in April, compared with March, increased 1 percent and the total of weekly pay rolls increased 0.2 percent.

"The records show", said Mr. Smith, "that for 9 prior years the averages of the percentages representing the March-to-April changes in each year were decreases of 2.1 percent in employment and 3.3 percent in the amount of weekly pay rolls.

"It is noteworthy that there was an increase of 32.6 percent in the number employed, and an increase of 59.7 percent in the amount of pay rolls in April 1934, compared with April 1933.

"In 20 of the 37 industries there were increases in employment. There were increases in the amount of the weekly pay rolls in 21 of the industries.

"The combined returns for the 115 boot-and-shoe establishments reporting showed increases in employment of 4.7 percent and in the amount of the pay rolls of 1.7 percent. The 58 cotton-goods establishments throughout the State reported a 2.5-percent gain in employment and a gain of 1.4 percent in weekly pay rolls.

"In electrical machinery, apparatus, and supplies (including radio), employment increased 7.5 percent and the wages paid increased 14.1 percent. The decreases of 8.3 percent in employment and 10.4 percent in pay roll in the 56 woolen and worsted goods mills were largely due to curtailment of production in Lawrence."

CARLOADINGS IN STATE SHOW HEAVY INCREASE FOR INITIAL QUARTER 1934 OVER YEAR AGO

Heavy increases in revenue freight carloadings during March 1934 over those for the corresponding month of 1933, are shown for most commodities in the monthly report of loadings compiled in the office of H. B. Schaefer, traffic expert of the Montana Railroad Commission.

During the month 10,092 cars were loaded with revenue freight, an increase of 3,678 cars, or 57 percent, over those for March 1933.

For the first 3 months of the present year Montana loadings of revenue freight totaled 29,974 cars, an increase of 9,307 cars, or 45 percent, over such loadings for the first 3 months of 1933, and an increase of 7,977 cars, or 36 percent, over those for the corresponding 3 months of 1932.

BUILDING MATERIALS

Indicative of a revival of building activities, the month showed increases over March 1933 in building materials as follows:

Lumber and lumber products, 160 cars; brick and clay products, 18 cars; lime rock, crushed rock, stone, sand and gravel, stucco and cement plaster, 479 cars.

In manufactured articles or raw materials for manufacture increases were:

Logs, 383 cars; copper, 217; concentrates, 268; slag and tailings, 57; ore, 1,240; crude oil, 400. Commercial coal increased 149 cars.

In movement of livestock, horses and mules showed an increase of 128 cars and cattle 118. Loadings of potatoes increased 24 cars.

Decreases were shown in flour and mill stuffs, wheat, canned goods, sheep and goats, hogs, and refined oil.

GENERAL SUMMARY

Movement of company freight, or railroad property, accounted for 2,296 carloads, in addition to the revenue freight loadings, as compared with 1,949 cars in March 1933.

Total commodity loadings, car lots, for March 1934 were as follows:

Canned goods 26, commercial coal 1,039, poultry and poultry products 1, household goods 11, farm implements 21, fruit and vegetables 1, dried peas and beans 90, potatoes 68, flour and mill stuffs 556, barley 3, flax 8, oats 34, rye 2, wheat 679, hay 77, straw 1.

Horses and mules 306, cattle 319, sheep and goats 235, hogs 33, wool 2, logs 948, lumber and products 410, poles and piling 134, wood 28, brick and clay products 20.

Copper 321, concentrates 292, slag and tailings 115, ore 2,040, lime 6, lime rock 109, crushed rock 22, stone 183, sand and gravel 234, stucco and cement plaster 123, scrap iron 7, sugar 130, crude oil 474, refined oil 342, miscellaneous 642.

EMPLOYMENT IN FACTORIES STILL GAINING—TOTAL NUMBER EMPLOYED IN QUAD-CITY PLANTS MAY 1 WAS 15,238

For the twelfth consecutive month employment in Quad-city factories showed an increase over the preceding month, according to a survey completed since May 1. On that date a total of 15,238 men, not including office employees and those in supervisory positions, were working in 73 factories, including all of the major plants of the four cities, the survey showed.

That total is the largest since January 1930, records show, when 18,000 were employed, the greatest number in several years. The increase over the same period in 1933 was 109 percent, showing that approximately 8,000 men had gone back to work in Quad-city factories in the last 12 months.

The total employment May 1 represented an increase of 814 over the preceding month, the survey disclosed. While Rock Island arsenal accounted for a good portion of the increase, every major factory in the four cities showed a substantial gain in employment.

BUSINESS GAINS IN NEW ENGLAND—FIRMS ARE EXPANDING IN MANY COMMUNITIES—GREATER EMPLOYMENT, LARGER PAY ROLLS AIDING SECTION

While the tide of recovery is not running in as heavily as it was a few months ago in New England, there is some evidence that it is still on the rise and that confidence in the future has been restored in many communities.

Fitchburg takes its place with Clinton and Peterboro, N.H., among the industrial communities that have hit the come-back trail and are making good progress toward better times. Fitchburg was one of the many New England textile manufacturing centers that suffered from adverse conditions long before the actual depression came along. Mills were closed, and there were those who predicted that they never would be reopened. This prediction is being proven far wrong.

Two new shoe factories have taken space in one building formerly devoted to the manufacturing of textiles. The Fitchburg Shoe Co. already is running on the second floor of Parkhill Mill Co., and the Corcoran-Gleason Co., formerly of Brockton, has taken 20,000 square feet of floor space on the third floor of the same plant.

Both concerns expect to employ at least 150 persons when running at capacity. While most of the skilled labor will be brought to Fitchburg from other shoe-manufacturing centers, the managements have promised that local residents will be given jobs wherever possible.

SEEK OTHER FIRMS

Several other concerns are said to be considering taking space in the mill building, and local workers for increased industrial activity in Fitchburg are hopeful of building up a shoe-manufacturing community whose value will more than offset the loss of the textile business.

In addition to these excellent signs of better business and more employment, the figures compiled by the chamber of commerce from the two commercial banks in Fitchburg show that pay rolls have been rising steadily since last June, when weekly reports were first collected. For the week ending June 5, 1933, the industrial pay roll in the city was $87,000. Last week it amounted to $119,000, and has been averaging a little less than that for sometime.

The Plymouth Chamber of Commerce this week made a report of progress in its campaign to obtain new businesses for the historic town. Two new concerns have announced their intentions to locate in now vacant industrial buildings, one in the Standish Mills factory and the other in the rivet-works building of the old Plymouth Mills. The chamber of commerce also believes that it has good prospects of inducing other concerns to use the Bradley Rug Mill.

SPURT IN TURNERS FALLS

Out in Franklin County, Turners Falls reports that the marked improvement in industrial conditions which began several months ago has struck the high-water mark for more than 2 years. Payroll figures for the first week in May showed a gain of 53 percent over the same period a year ago. At present manufacturers there say that business prospects are so favorable that increased production probably will continue for a considerable period.

Renewed activities in the Wyandotte Woolen Mill and the Maine central repair shops, together with a $31,000 public-works improvement allotment, have greatly relieved unemployment in Waterville, Maine, and officials there believe that with the coming of warm weather and resumption of strictly summer business the number of jobless will be reduced to a number not seen there in several years.

Mr. DICKINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. DICKINSON. For what purpose?

Mr. LONG. I just wish to make a few remarks to correct one or two little matters which I think are not plain in the statement of the Senator from Arkansas. It will take but a minute or two.

Mr. DICKINSON. With reference to the N.R.A.?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I simply want to connect up a few little matters relating to the N.R.A. which the Senator from Arkansas no doubt has not had the time to review as I have. I probably took a little bit more care in presenting some amendments and had some knowledge of the act, perhaps, which the Senator from Arkansas has not had.

To begin with, I offered an amendment to the industrial recovery bill, after I had made a statement on the floor of the Senate, which was pronounced ridiculous. I stated that the N.R.A. was going to be used, in my opinion, and that it could be used, in such a way that a man could not hack a crosstie without getting a permit from Gen. Hugh Johnson in Washington, D.C. That was pronounced to be ridiculous.

I thereupon drafted an amendment, which was placed in the act, to the effect that the act should not be used under any order or under the administration of the act so as to prevent a man from selling what he raised with his own hands or what he made with his own hands on a farm or as a laborer in industry. I stated on the floor of the Senate that they would even try to stop a man from hacking crossties—a little man with a jug of water and a little ax hacking crossties—and notwithstanding the fact that it was pronounced by the administration spokesman as being absurd and ridiculous to think that the administration would consider doing anything like that, actually, in the teeth of my amendment, they tried to foist on the crosstie hackers a code, on the ground that those making them in the sawmills were subject to regulation and the others were not.

I do not know what they finally did about the matter. I waited to see whether or not they would make the encroachment I anticipated, and I heard nothing further, though it was in the air that they were proceeding along that line. Later, however, a report appeared in the papers to the effect that the amendment I had offered had prevented them from extending the benevolent effect of the act to some laborers and farmers who needed protection. Thank God, they could not give them that kind of protection.

I had nothing to do with the appointment of any review board. That was attended to by the President of the United States, and certainly, everyone knows, without any consultation with me. There may be some Senator here who might be suspected of having suggested someone whom the President appointed on the Review Board, but there is one man in the Senate toward whom the finger of suspicion will never be directed, and that is the present senior Senator from the State of Louisiana. I had nothing whatever to do with the President's deciding to embellish the Review Board. He went ahead and appointed the members and, as the record will amply demonstrate, those of his choosing.

Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator from Arkansas means to indict any of us, if Mr. Hugh Johnson is unable to find anyone they can name who, after study, will say something good about them. I hope that no one who is a Member of this body, having nothing to do with these appointments, will be castigated because Mr. Johnson cannot find someone who, after investigating his board, sees fit to say something good about it.

I will say this, however, that had I been left to name someone for Mr. Johnson, either among my friends or among my enemies, who had had experience under some code, and who I could have said would have reported something good about it, I could not have named a single soul in the length and breadth of my acquaintance I could have relied upon to do it. I have never yet met a man, in my entire acquaintance in the Southern States, who has anything good to say about the N.R.A., not one single one. We admit it has been alleged it has a good purpose, namely, to shorten hours, but that was a forgery upon an effort made here to accomplish that object by direct law.

We had before us a bill here which had for its purpose the limiting of the hours of work to 30 hours a week. That bill passed the Senate. We adopted amendments and rejected amendments, over the protest of the administration, in order that the bill might have teeth in it. When the bill had passed the Senate, lo and behold, a big hurly-burly was raised, and something had to be done to sidetrack that piece of legislation, and the N.R.A. was established. That is why we have the N.R.A. They did not say a word about the iniquitous means by which things were done which no one had ever heard of being done under any preceding administration. That is why the N.R.A. was founded, for the simple reason that there was a bill here decisively, unequivocally limiting the hours of labor to 30 hours a week, and under that bill there would not have been any bureaucrat authorized to hold the sword of Damocles over the people of this country night and day, keeping them in terror lest they might violate some technical provision of one of these multifarious codes. I believe the number has run up to 537 by this time, not including codes which have been adopted by the various States.

Now we come to the case of the little New Jersey tailor. I am sorry the Senator from Arkansas has left the Chamber, because I regret that he took offense at the remark which he permitted me to make. If he were here I believe I could explain the matter in such a way that the Senator would feel more kindly toward what I wish to say.

I merely wish to make a little historical statement, based on fiction, as I recall—though I have not read the work in a number of years—appearing in a volume by Victor Hugo styled either "Notre Dame" or "Ninety-three."

We are told that when the particular character in this story, in the midst of the testimony when he was not testifying according to what the judge wanted him to say, was taken away by one of the bailiffs of the court, who beat him from head to foot, kicked him and buffed him, until he had little breath left in him, and then the bailiff returned and, said he, "This gentleman is ready to tell you, Your Honor, that he confesses, and he will also tell you that he does it voluntarily, and of his own free will and accord."

Here is the case of a little old tailor, with a flatiron and zinc tub, probably—that is about all some of such men have—a little old smoothing iron, pressing a pair of breeches, when he could find someone who had money enough to pay to have a pair pressed. They yanked him up by the collar and dragged him into court, and said to him, "You charged 35 cents for pressing that pair of breeches, when you ought to have charged 40 cents, and now you are going to jail for 30 days, and will have to pay a fine of $150, and in default of the $150 fine, you will get 6 more months in jail." That is about the way I would guess it goes, a dollar for a day, which would give him about 7 months altogether.

Lo and behold, the next thing we know they come into the United States Senate; the little man is out of jail, and we have a statement from him that he is in favor of the N.R.A. Is not that a marvelous performance to have taken place in the great deliberative body called the United States Senate? Poor little two-by-four, smoothing-iron presser, sent to the penitentiary for 30 days, and fined $150, when $150 is more money than he has heard about in the last 5 years. And now he comes out, after being released from jail, after serving a day and a night in jail, with the statement that he is in favor of the N.R.A. [Laughter.]

I hope the Senator from Arkansas, if he takes occasion to ask someone what I say, will understand that I mean no reflection whatever. I am simply connecting the case up with a comparison in history. Perhaps I have not given the exact title of the work of Hugo, perhaps it was another volume, but the incident was given by Victor Hugo about as I have repeated it, and is in line with what has happened in the case of this tailor.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas said he did not know what General Johnson had said to me. Perhaps it may be thought General Johnson has called me up and given me some of the kind of language he has given to others. The general has not done that. While I understand that the bureaucrats in Washington assert the privilege of "cussing out" most anybody when they want to, the general has been kind to me up to this time and has not done that. I want to thank him for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I did not start out here with any intention of criticizing the N.R.A. I know that we Democrats want it to die as fast as it can die, with the least possible said about it. I am not in agreement with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. He wants to reinstate the license provision, which he says they are going to let die. I do not agree with him in that. I am not in favor of reviving any limb of this creature when it dies. When the license part dies, Mr. President, let it die and remain dead. Never again, I hope, will there be anything breathed into this dying carcass of iniquity that will cause it to have another existence such as it has had since I have known about it.

As to the little tailor's case, which Mr. Johnson says he did not know anything about, I am glad he did not know anything about it, because the tailor got out of jail in 24 hours. I imagine that if my friend Johnson had known about it he would probably have let him serve out his sentence.

I admire Mr. Johnson for the direct way of performing his job. He was put there to do what he is doing. There has not been any mistake about this thing. Do not let any one tell you that there has been any mistake about what Mr. Johnson is doing on the N.R.A. He is doing just what he was put there to do. He was recommended for the place by Barney Baruch, and before Barney Baruch recommended him to be put there, Barney Baruch wrote an article in the American Magazine in which he favored regimenting and chaining up the business of this country so that it would be owned by the big masters, and directed from one big fountainhead, and the little men thereby be put out of business.

Barney Baruch wrote that letter before he was sent for to come here and to recommend anyone for the job that Mr. Hugh Johnson has. I have put a portion of that article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in which Mr. Baruch spread his philosophy that the day of the little man was gone. That is what Mr. Baruch said. He said that if anyone wanted to stay in business in this country he ought to invest his money in chain enterprises and buy stock in them, and allow the chain business to go on in this country, or words to that effect. When Mr. Hugh Johnson came out of the office of Bernard M. Baruch, the reincarnation of the prophet himself, and came here to Washington, he came here with the philosophy that the day of the little man in business was past, and he has performed in accordance with that philosophy to the queen's taste.

I am not unmindful of the few favorable letters which have come to the N.R.A. It seems that out of the several hundred thousand men who are in business in this country some 40 or 50 have sent in telegrams saying that they favored the N.R.A. That is rather spontaneous applause. Some 40 or 50 or maybe 100 or so people out of the fifteen or twenty or thirty or forty thousand that might have been heard from, or maybe 100,000, I would think at least, have said that they favored the N.R.A. Why not? The sword is over their heads. The sword of Damocles is right over them all the time.

Newspapers have been scared to death that a code was going to be put over them that they could not work under, and they have been beating the drum pretty slowly until the day of election comes close to hand, and then they will spring out like the mountain lion and do what they please. Everyone does not have to eat a whole beef to see that it is tainted. One can see what is coming from what has gone before. They can slip up on this thing quite easily, because General Johnson asserts that he has the power by which he can stop any business that he wants to stop over night.

There is not now such a thing as the Congress of the United States to deal with. There used to be a time when people feared the Congress' staying in session, because they did not know what kind of laws Congress was going to pass, and if that fear is enough to disturb business, then what more fear can be pictured, when this one gentleman holds in his hands the scepter with which he can cause wreck and ruin to the fortunes and fame of businesses and men at any time.

Mr. President, no one in the whole country today stands free from arrest under the N.R.A. The law, and the codes under the law, provide that whoever is a party to the violation of a code requirement is a criminal. In other words, it effects not only the man running the business, but if one participates in violating the code, or a provision of the code, he is guilty of a violation of the law as much as the man who violates it directly. According to that they will finally get it down, Mr. President, to the point where every man dealing with all these businesses will be presumed to know the entire contents of the 535 codes, containing all the way from 100 to 750 pages to the code. Every man before he may buy a sack of salt will have to sit down and read 533 books of 500 pages to the book in order to see what he can do before he goes and buys a sack of salt. It is getting down to that kind of business; and they know it. Why do they do that? They know that every man in business cannot know all these provisions. But they want it so that every man in the United States is a prospective law violator. They want it so that every man who is going to the polls tomorrow morning can be arrested if the powers want to arrest him. They want that kind of law. They want laws so that every man in the United States is guilty of a criminal offense every time he goes across the street, if they can make it so, and so that they can enforce the law against whomever they want to.

Mr. President, when I was Governor of the State of Louisiana there was a certain city in my State which was affected by a long list of laws and ordinances. They had a law against this, and a law against that, and I looked at the list and said, "Why, we ought to repeal these laws. There is hardly a man in this city", I said, "who does not violate one of these laws from 1 to 10 times a day." "Oh, no", said a gentleman down there, "we do not want to repeal those laws. That is how we get the chance to grant people favors. That is how we make our friends in politics. So long as we have a thousand laws here, that everyone in the city of New Orleans is violating every day, then we have a right to arrest anyone we want to arrest, and they must all stand in with the police and the recorder's court, because we can arrest every "dad-gum" one of them if we want to."

That is the old police skullduggery, the rotten political system that we have been trying to root out of every city in this country, by which everyone is made a violator of the law, so that every man who has to depend upon the law must stand in with the authorities.

Mr. President, we have that same thing extended here in this system. This N.R.A. code system is the same old system. They have 537 codes. And I understand that there are 2,000 more awaiting for final approval and compilation and publication, and other necessary formulas before they can have the effect of law. But we have 537 of them now, as I understand, with all these pages and all these provisions. Every little man in the country is subject to the N.R.A. No man knows where he is today.

The authorities have gone further than that. They have started in this country on one of the most notorious means of terrorism that has ever been known. Everyone knows how terrible it is to try a man in the United States court. He feels like he is on foreign soil when he is taken out of his little home community and carried 200 miles away to be tried. But at least the United States had accepted the principle that it would always try the man in the jurisdiction wherein he had committed his offense and wherein he lived. They have now begun the system in the States of indicting the men in districts in which they do not live if they can find that they have mailed something to another district. In my State they pulled off this rotten, low-down kind of a thing under the auspices of the Government, where a good, decent, United States citizen never was told he was violating the law, never was called upon to do anything, never was warned of anything. They did not indict him in the district in which he lives; they went 300 miles away, down to the city of New Orleans, and indicted him there, on the ground that he mailed a letter down there, taking that man 300 miles away from his home to try him down there under this kind of condition, when always that indictment should have been in the district where he lived and did the main act.

That is the kind of terrorism that Barney Baruchism has carried on in this country, and they have nearly everyone scared to death.

My God, let us scare them all. It cannot be done any worse than it has been done. The Constitution of the United States has been wrecked. Somebody has to speak the truth in the presence of the king. Here is the kind of thing we are going through here. Do we call this good government? Look at this:

Silver money issue optional with the Treasury. Billion and one half, or none, would be permitted new measure.

Silver uprising held beaten by Roosevelt coup. Congress expected to pass President's draft despite dissatisfaction with it. Critics need fall votes. Any kind of measure welcomed by westerners.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was deceived into believing he had a bill which meant something, and when the bill came in here he was so much pleased with the fact that it had come in here that he stood on the floor of the Senate giving praise; he was glad in his heart over the fact that this bill had been sent, and this message had come here accompanying that bill, and, lo and behold, when the market falls out on silver, when silver goes down considerably instead of going up, he wakes up this morning and reads an interview with the Treasury Department itself, saying that the bill does not amount to a tinker's dam, and they do not have to do anything, and that they just merely led the boys into a blind alley, and gave them a sack and sat them down to wait there until they drive the snipe by.

It reminds me of the way the country boys used to treat the city boy when he went to the country. They would take him out in a brush heap 4 or 5 miles away from town, give him a sack, and stand him up there holding that sack in the dead dark hours of the nighttime until they could go up and drive the snipe into the sack. Some city boys would stand there and hold the sack all night long. They took in some of the boys here on the silver question in somewhat a similar way. They did not take me in; I was not selected by my bloc to go to the White House to discuss the matter with the President of the United States nor with the Treasury Department. I am just one of the willing workers of the bloc. I have introduced several silver bills here and voted for all silver legislation which has been proposed; but when they brought the bill back here, ignorant as I was on the question, I did not have to take two looks at it to see that it did not amount to a dad-gummed thing.

I have not studied the silver question all these years as has the Senator from Nevada; but instead of making a 2-hour speech approving it, and then being met here by the newspaper reports that the Department had pulled off a very clever ruse and had frustrated the silver movement and left them with nothing—instead of being met with that kind of declaration—at least I can go back to the people of the State of Louisiana and say to them that the wool was not pulled over my eyes when they sent this last baby rattle in here for me to play with. That is the kind of way we are to legislate, apparently.

I want to beg pardon of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. I did not intend to take so much time, because I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill that is now before the Senate. If, Mr. President, I should consume anything like the time in expressing my views that is consumed by these statesmen in expressing their views; if I dared to take so much of the Senate's time as they take, it would be heralded from one end of the corridor to the other that I was undertaking to conduct a filibuster. Therefore, limiting my time because of the desire of the Senator from Mississippi to speed this bill along, I am going to beg pardon of the Senator from Iowa, and not express any further views which I had expected to make known on the floor of the Senate at an earlier date.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me in order that I may insert one or two letters in the RECORD?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, after listening for a little while to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and especially to the reading of the telegrams of approval of the N.R.A., I sent to my office for a sample of the sort of letters coming to my office in reference to the N.R.A. I think I can say truthfully that I have had no letters of endorsement, but I certainly have had an avalanche of letters in opposition. I take three that came on the same day. From the first one I read as follows:

I am enclosing herewith copy of record of my dealings with N.R.A., which shows conclusively that N.R.A. has ruined the small employer and betrayed the little fellow in the employee class, who does not have the backing of a powerful organization.

That letter does not come to me because of any solicitation, or in reply to any letter written by me. The writer gives me the record of his efforts to get relief, running from November 9, 1933, up to the present time, and finally ends with the statement that the result is complete destruction of his business. I should like to have the record to which he refers inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter rerferred to is as follows:

RECORD OF CASE FILED WITH N.R.A. COMPLIANCE AUTHORITIES, NOVEMBER 9, 1933, SHOWING THE FAILURE OF SAID AUTHORITIES TO CARRY OUT THEIR PROMISES, AND THEIR ATTEMPTS TO JUSTIFY SUCH FAILURES. SHOWING THAT N.R.A. HAS RUINED THE LITTLE FELLOW, BOTH EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE

Cleveland, Ohio, August 30, 1933.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Orrison Cigar Co., Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Our wire stated that we had no record that the Orrison Cigar Co. had signed the President's reemployment agreement.

Would suggest that employees obtain definite information from the company as to its intentions concerning the agreement, or toward any of the industrial codes which are now being drawn up before carrying any drastic action. You might then advise us as to the information given you so that we may know what course to follow.

Yours very truly,

M. E. WOODS,
District Manager N.R.A.,
1803 Terminal Tower, Cleveland, Ohio,

DEAR MADAM: Replying to your letter of August 30 with reference to employees working for the Orrison Cigar Co., beg to advise that we are merely seeking advice as to the attitude we should take in the absence of either a definite code or the President's agreement.

At the time we sent the telegram we had just been requested by Mr. D. V. Orrison to work at night in addition to the regular working day of 11 hours. We flatly refused to do any night work, but were uncertain as to the proper course to pursue in the matter of continuing after September 1 under the old wage scale and working conditions.

On August 31 Mr. Orrison stated that he had a considerable amount of tobacco stock cased, and that failure to work it up would entail a considerable loss, and requested us to continue working until not later than one day next week. We met this proposal with a request for an increase of 20 percent in wages, which was granted.

Again this Saturday morning Mr. Orrison stated in substance that he could secure the Blue Eagle and continue to work under the old conditions so long as he confined operations to the filling of orders already on file. He also proposed that we continue to work after the expiration of the arrangement to work up stock at the old wages with a possible 10-percent increase.

Mr. Orrison states that it is impossible for him to operate under the President's reemployment agreement because of competition of others who have not signed.

We have arranged to hold a meeting to discuss and decide the matter of continuing after working up the present stock. We are not radical in our views, nor are we seeking to take advantage of our employer. We are only trying to do our part in making N.R.A. a success and to secure for ourselves a fair deal, which we have not had in the past.

As to wages and hours, we are working under worse conditions than existed 30 years ago, and for practically the same wages, except that decidedly better workmanship is required. The average wage is less than 15 cents per hour, and possibly not in excess of 10 cents, and the total hours per week permissible is 61. It is all piecework, and, of course, the only possible way to earn maximum wages is to work the maximum hours.

If desirable, we will undertake to keep you advised as to developments locally, and in the meantime we would appreciate some advice as to the proper attitude to assume and course to pursue.

Yours for success of N.R.A.,

DISTRICT OFFICE NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION,

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Orrison Cigar Co., Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: I would like to take this occasion to thank you and the other employees of the Orrison Cigar Co. for your spirit of cooperation and moderation in attempting to obtain a satisfactory arrangement with your employer.

As you probably know, it is sometimes difficult for an employer to change his methods of doing business for the sale of merchandise, and where it would be necessary for him to raise the price in order to handle extra costs of putting the plan into effect.

I have written Mr. Orrison a letter explaining the procedure to be followed in obtaining the Blue Eagle and have also given him the terms of the cigar manufacturers' code as it applies to hand cigar manufacturers.

I am enclosing a copy of the terms of the code for your information.

May I suggest that both employees and employer attempt to work out a satisfactory arrangement, and if at any time you wish further advice we shall be very glad to be of assistance to you.

Yours truly,

M. E. WOODS, District Manager.

Mr. BOAZ LONG,
Blue Eagle Division N.R.A., Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I was named as an employee member of the local compliance board nearly a month ago, and am willing and anxious to do my part in that connection. However, the board is not completely organized and is not functioning.

I am myself not being fairly treated by my employer. In point of seniority I am much older than any of several who are at this time working, and not one of them are solely responsible for the maintenance of a home. I have a family to support, and after long months of starvation wages, idleness for even a few days is a serious matter. Have been idle for over a month, and following its usual practice, the Orrison Cigar Co. (my employer) has given me no information as to when I may expect to be recalled.

Will you please send me a copy of Bulletin No. 5, and any other available literature concerning the functions and duties of compliance boards?

Thanking you in advance for the above favor, I am,

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

BETHESDA OHIO, November 8, 1933.

The ORRISON CIGAR CO., City.

GENTLEMEN: This is to notify you that I intend to file a complaint with the N.R.A. compliance board at 5 o'clock p.m., November 9, and if I am unable to get justice by this means, I shall feel compelled to resort to other methods.

In view of the fact that commodity prices are rising and that winter is rapidly approaching, and the further fact that I have just earned $19.12½ since September 16, while others who seem to be more favored, have worked almost continuously since that date—and in point of seniority, I am one of the oldest employees—I feel that I have just grounds for complaint.

This notice is being given in the spirit of fairness and with the hope that calling your attention to some of the facts will be sufficient.

Yours truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

NOTE.—The only answer to the preceding letter was the sending home of my tools at 4:45 p.m., November 9. I was aware of the fact that I did not need to give notice of my intention to file complaint. What I meant by resorting to other methods will presently appear in the letter to Orrison under date of December 4, 1933.

BETHESDA, OHIO, November 9, 1933.

N.R.A. COMPLIANCE BOARD
(Mr. Clyde Piatt, chairman),
Bethesda, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN: Complaint is hereby made that the Orrison Cigar Co. is violating the terms, purposes, and spirit of the President's reemployment agreement.

The said the Orrison Cigar Co. is failing to pay the required wage scale and is unfairly discriminating against older employees without regard to fairness, justice, or the rights of said older employees.

The complainant, in point of seniority, is one of the oldest employees of said company, and has worked 2 weeks since September 16, 1933. The said company has had its plant in almost continuous operation since September 16, 1933.

The complainant therefore prays that your honorable board at once take the necessary action to cause the immediate discontinuance of the unlawful practices complained of.

Yours truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

BETHESDA, OHIO, November 13, 1933.

N.R.A. COMPLIANCE BOARD,
Bethesda, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN: In addition to complaint now on file with your honorable board, further complaint is hereby made that the complainant notified the Orrison Cigar Co. in writing of his intention of filing a complaint at 5 o'clock p.m., November 9, 1933, and that said Orrison Cigar Co. caused the tools of complainant to be sent home at 4:45 p.m., November 9, 1933, without just cause and without explanation. This can only be construed as an act of arrogant defiance of your honorable board and the N.R.A. and an attempt to intimidate the complainant, because every employee of an N.R.A. member has the right to file such complaints, and this complainant hereby claims the right to demand and does demand that it be so construed.

Complaint is further made that the said Orrison Cigar Co. is causing its employees to work in excess of the limitation of hours per week provided in code 1615–13.

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

Re: Complaint board.
Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 18, and regret the delay in replying, which has been due to the tremendous volume of correspondence received in this office.

According to records now in this office, a compliance board has been organized and is now functioning in Bethesda, Ohio.

I feel sure that if you will present your complaint to this board your difficulty can be handled satisfactorily.

Under regulations which have been issued, it is quite proper for a member of the compliance board to file a complaint to the board.

Thanking you for your continued cooperation, I am,

Yours very truly,

JOHN SWOPE,
Assistant to Chief, Blue Eagle Branch,
Compliance Division, N.R.A.

BETHESDA, OHIO, December 4, 1933.

CHIEF, BLUE EAGLE DIVISION, N.R.A.,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am filing herewith correct copies of complaints I have filed with the local compliance board, which I am quite sure are in accordance with your instructions of November 16.

The local board has been extremely dilatory and my urgent request that they try to get an amicable adjustment has had no effect and my family is now facing want.

I am, myself, a member of the local board and have tried to post myself and be a capable member. Now the board, after having consulted an attorney, Cummings, of Wheeling, W.Va., have decided that they cannot function, since this is a town of less than 2,500 population.

There are seven cigar factories here, employing 200 or 300 persons under normal conditions, and I have insisted that it is altogether right and proper as well as important that we have a compliance board.

The Orrison Cigar Co., which employs from 30 to 75 people, is under the control and management of D. V. Orrison, who dictates every act of the company.

He has never complied with the terms, intent, or spirit of the President's reemployment agreement, which he signed in September, and never intended to. He claims to be operating under an exception, but he is displaying the Blue Eagle without the required white bar and has not filed a petition in the form of a sworn statement for such exception. By displaying the Blue Eagle he is advertising that he is complying fully. In other words, just plain fraud and false pretense.

On August 26, the Orrison employees sent a telegram to M. E. Woods, at State N.R.A. headquarters, Cleveland, Ohio, asking for advice. (A copy is enclosed, together with a copy of the answer, which came through the Orrison office.) My name was signed to the telegram, and the answer seemed to indicate that I had made a strong complaint against the company. On September 4 the Orrison employees met at my home to discuss the situation and decide the proper course to pursue, and, acting on my advice, they decided to continue working.

It is quite evident that Mr. Orrison, ignorant of the real facts, has marked me for a dangerous and undesirable agitator who must be destroyed. He is not aware of the fact that my conservative counsel prevented a strike about 3 months ago. He is not aware of the fact that feeling was running high under the surface at that time and that there was even covert threats of violence. Nor does he know that I quietly worked with the more conservative employees to prevent such an eventuality. The credit I have gotten for this, is to be kicked out without any explanation. He has even stooped to falsehood as to my workmanship to prevent other employers from employing me.

Before the local board decided to cease to function, a committee of the board called on him and the net result was a series of honeyed lies and the statement that there is no law to compel him to employ anyone he doesn't want to. Besides, according to the report of the committee, they discussed me personally with him, which they had no right to do. As I understand it their duty was to explain the situation to the employer and ascertain whether or not there had been any violations, or get the facts in order that the board might decide the question.

Any statement he may make as to my workmanship, will only convict him of being a liar or of unfair arrogance, because no word has been spoken to me about it. I am physically unable to work on C.W.A. or other public work and for this reason the loss of my job as a cigarmaker, at this time, is extremely serious.

Therefore, I am demanding that the Orrison Cigar Co. at once right the wrong it has done me and restore my job or that its Blue Eagle privilege be revoked.

Thanking you in advance for your interest in this matter and hoping for prompt action, I am

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

BETHESDA, OHIO, December 4, 1933.

Mr. D. V. ORRISON,
Orrison Cigar Co., Bethesda, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. ORRISON: Just a few pertinent questions: Did you ever soak stamps off in the casing tub and reuse them? Did you ever use various factory numbers other than your own? Did you ever use any district number other than the eighteenth? Did you ever unlawfully cancel stamps, showing thereon factory and district number other than your own? These are just a few and you may deny them just as you denied any knowledge of my being out of work or that you had sent part of my tools and belongings home, but nevertheless I am going to inform the Internal Revenue Department, under oath, that you have done all these things and several others, unless you want to talk to me within 24 hours.

Yours most graciously,

Re: Complaint against Orrison Cigar Co.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 4, together with copies of complaints filed with the Bethesda compliance board against the Orrison Cigar Co.

This office has not been notified that the compliance board of Bethesda has ceased functioning. You state in your letter that "the board, after having consulted an Attorney Cummings, of Wheeling, W.Va., have decided they cannot function, since this is a town of less than 2,500 population." Because a town has a population of less than 2,500 population, compliance boards are not necessarily to cease functioning. I am enclosing herewith the President's Executive order, which releases certain employers in towns of less than 2,500, together with General Johnson's interpretation of this order.

I have written the chairman of the compliance board to this effect. I have also requested a report of the exact action taken in your complaint against the Orrison Cigar Co. I enclose for your information the approved substitutions to the President's agreement for the cigar-manufacturing industry.

If I can be of further assistance to you, do not hesitate to call upon me. As soon as I have had a report from the chairman of the board in regard to your complaint shall communicate with you again.

Yours very truly,

JOHN SWOPE,
Compliance Division, N.R.A.

NOTE.—Entered into verbal agreement with D. V. Orrison on December 9, 1933, wherein Orrison agreed to put me to work or order that I be put to work and kept working. In return for this concession I agreed to drop any criminal prosecution based on facts and evidence in my possession.

Was called to work on December 14, 1933, and worked 7 days, earning $13.20 (several dollars less than the N.R.A. minimum). The Orrison plant has been in operation almost continuously since January 1 and I have been left at home to fry in my own fat.

Have earned $32.32 in 27 weeks and am demanding the difference between that sum and what I should have earned, based on N.R.A. minimum, or $291.68, and at the same rate until paid. If this is not done promptly, I shall file an information with the Internal Revenue authorities, which will end the Orrison Cigar Co. and put the management in Federal prison.

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

(Copy of above was delivered to Chairman Clyde Platt, of the local board, Mar. 16, 1934, together with copies of the original complaints, which copies he requested at that time.)

BETHESDA, OHIO, February 5, 1934.

Mr. JOHN SWOPE,
Compliance Division, N.R.A., Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SWOPE: Referring to my several letters in reference to complaints against the Orrison Cigar Co., and particularly your letter of December 7, beg to advise that, after waiting 2 months for the expected advice from your office, nothing has appeared.

In the meantime, I am still unemployed and, having fought for 2 months to get it, am now on relief and compelled to live on a level which would be scorned by a Chinaman. Last week I was given an order for $1 groceries, which, on the basis of three meals a day, is less than 5 cents per meal for a family of three for a week, or less than 1⅔ cents per person. I was also left without coal for a week in subzero weather.

The Orrison Cigar Co. is more arrogantly violating the N.R.A. provisions, as well as all laws of decency, than ever.

They are still exceeding 40 hours per week, and few, if any, are receiving the minimum wages. One employee earned $2.70 for the week ending February 3. Another earned 30 cents one day and 40 cents another day. These may be extreme cases, but no employee in their department is earning half of the minimum wage.

I have been discriminated against and marked for destruction because I dared to exercise the rights of an American citizen as well as the rights guaranteed me by N.R.A.

Now, Mr. Swope, I am demanding that the Orrison Cigar Co. be thoroughly investigated and dealt with according to the facts and if it is not done I shall file affidavits with the United States district attorney concerning violations of certain statutory laws which will mean the end of the Orrison Cigar Co. and terms in Federal prison for its management on conviction. I am very reluctant to do this because it will only aggravate the local employment situation, but I have arrived at the place where patience has ceased to be a virtue.

Hoping that something can be done without further delay, and without my resorting to the above measures, I am

NATIONAL RECOVERY AMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., February 8, 1934.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge your communication which is receiving attention.

We would advise you for immediate assistance to contact your State or local Civil Works Administration office.

We are assured that these recovery agencies will give your case immediate attention.

Very truly yours,

T. G. EARLY,
Chief Executive Section, Compliance Division.

P.S.—You may contact your local Federal Emergency Relief Administration, or Maj. E. O. Braught, executive director, State relief commission, State House, Columbus, Ohio.

NOTE.—Rather elaborate instructions for the accomplishment of a thing I had just advised had been done, after a fight covering 2 months, during which I might have starved or frozen for all anyone cared.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., February 10, 1934.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: We acknowledge receipt of your recent complaint of noncompliance with the President's reemployment agreement.

All complaints of noncompliance with the President's reemployment agreement shall be brought before your local compliance board in the first instance. After the board acts on them, they are referred to us in Washington for final decision.

We are returning your complaint to you herewith with the suggestion that you bring it before Mr. Clyde Platt, chairman of the N.R.A. compliance board in your town. You may rest assured that your name will not be involved in any proceedings taken by the board unless you consent to its use.

Very truly yours,

T. G. EARLY,
Chief Executive Section, Compliance Division.

BETHESDA, OHIO, February 12, 1934.

Mr. T. G. EARLY,
Chief Executive Secretary, Compliance Division,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant just received and to say that it was an amazingly painful surprise is putting it mildly indeed.

This entire matter has been mishandled since the first letter was written by me to Mary E. Woods, district manager, Cleveland, Ohio, early in September, in an effort to secure some information. I have received many courteous letters which told me nothing I wanted to know.

Your instructions to file a complaint with Mr. Clyde Platt would be laughable if my situation were not so desperate. The files in your office should disclose the fact that this was done early in November, and that the local board (of which I was a member), after a lot of heart-breaking delays, just simply quit and refused to function. Your office has long since been advised of all these facts and furnished with copies of all papers with a bearing thereon.

I have carefully followed the instructions contained in bulletin no. 5, as well as instructions and advice from your office, and the net result has been to bring my family to a destitute condition and to place me in a situation which will probably cause me to lose several hundred dollars, because I cannot protect my interests.

D. V. Orrison, who is the head of the Orrison Cigar Co., has repeatedly lied to me, and about me, and forced me into my present situation without reason or justification. I have endeavored to adjust differences with him, without the aid of N.R.A., which I had a right to expect, only to be given promises which are unfulfilled.

Now, after having done more than my part in the matter, I am advised to file a complaint, as though nothing had been done. N.R.A. has thus far utterly failed and refused to protect me in the rights guaranteed to every employee of an N.R.A. member, and the result has been my ruin.

I am again demanding immediate action in this matter and shall leave no stone unturned to get it. And if I am unable to get it at once I shall, among other things, turn over to the national Republican organization for publicity purposes certified copies of all letters and papers bearing on the case, together with a full statement of the facts.

Trusting that I may at last receive something more than a courteous but meaningless reply, I am,

Yours truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: I have received your letter of February 12 with regard to the above-mentioned subject and have referred the entire matter to Mr. Benedict Crowell, State Director of the National Emergency Council, 1803 Terminal Tower, Cleveland, Ohio, with the request that he take charge of this case.

Very truly yours,

JOHN SWOPE,
Chief Field Section, Compliance Division, N.R.A.

BETHESDA, OHIO, February 17, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
National Recovery Administrator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am one of the oldest employees of a local concern, the Orrison Cigar Co., in point of seniority and have been discriminated against by this concern because I dared to exercise the rights of an American citizen and the rights guaranteed by N.R.A. I have been robbed of the right to earn a living for myself and family, and because of my inability to meet certain obligations I stand to lose from $700 to $1,000. Am now on relief and involved in debt, and all for no reason whatever, so far as I am aware.

I have filed complaints with the local compliance board (of which I was a member), and the board, after repeated and unnecessary delays, finally quit and refused to function. I then filed copies of complaints, together with all papers having a bearing on the case, with the Compliance Division at Washington, and was promised action. Then, after waiting 2 months, I again wrote to the Compliance Division and demanded action without further delay and was courteously advised to file a complaint with the local board.

The Orrison Cigar Co. signed the President's reemployment agreement nearly 6 months ago, but has never complied, and very evidently never intended to. They are exceeding the maximum hours and few, if any, of the employees are receiving the minimum wages. One employee recently earned $2.70 for 1 week and another earned 30 cents 1 day and 40 cents another day that same week.

Full details of my particular case should be on file in the office of the Compliance Division, and I feel that I am entitled to some action in the matter. I have carefully followed the instructions contained in bulletin no. 5, as well as direct instructions from the Compliance Division, and the net result has been to place me in a desperate situation.

D. V. Orrison, who controls and manages the company, is absolutely unscrupulous and his attitude toward my case has been one of indifference and arrogance. He has lied to me and about me. He has made promises to me, with no intention of keeping them, and at the same time lied about me to prevent my securing work with other local employers. He has no regard for his word and no conception of the meaning of honor. He will violate any law, if it suits his purpose to do so, if he thinks he can get by. I have in my possession facts and evidence by which I can prove repeated violations of certain statutory laws, and if something is not done quickly in my behalf I shall file affidavits with the United States district attorney, which will mean the end of the Orrison Cigar Co. and terms in Federal prison for its management, on conviction. I am reluctant to do this because it will mean the loss of jobs of my friends and neighbors. However, patience has ceased to be a virtue and something must be done at once. This is the last appeal I shall make to N.R.A., and if it will not protect me in my rights as an employee of an N.R.A. member I can only fight my own battle in my own way.

Trusting that N.R.A. will see to it that I get justice at once, including the wages I have been cheated out of, I am,

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION,

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: I have your letter of February 17, and by this time you must have had my letter of February 16, in which I advised you that the entire matter had been referred to the State N.R.A. compliance director in Cleveland.

I am also referring your letter of the 17th to the Director.

Yours very truly,

JOHN SWOPE,
Chief, Field Section, Compliance Division, N.R.A.

NOTE.—The above letter refers to my letter addressed to General Johnson. The General was evidently too busy being hard-boiled and with his propaganda and ballyhoo to be bothered with the sufferings and humiliation of a little fellow who has been ruined by his N.R.A.

BETHESDA, OHIO, March 1, 1934.

Mr. BENEDICT CROWELL,
State N.R.A. Compliance Director, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: On February 16 and also February 19 the N.R.A. compliance division at Washington advised me that my case against the Orrison Cigar Co. has been referred to you.

If the complaints and other papers and letters have been turned over to you, it will be quite apparent that this case has been pending for over 4 months, and that the Orrison Cigar Co. is not only arrogantly failing and refusing to comply with the President's reemployment agreement which it signed 6 months ago.

Surely if N.R.A. has any intention of protecting me, as an employee of an N.R.A. member, it is time to do it. I have been permitted to earn just $32.32 in 24 weeks, which means that I have been robbed of $255.68 on the basis of the $12 minimum.

In asking that this case be pushed to a settlement promptly and that the company be required to right the wrong it has done me, including payment of the wages it has cheated me out of, I feel that it would fall far short of compensating me for the worry, self-denial, and humiliation forced upon me and my family.

May I ask what steps, if any, are being taken in the matter? A prompt settlement such as I have suggested above is of vital importance to me, and any further delay in securing such settlement will cause me irreparable loss.

Thanking you in advance for a prompt reply and assuring you of my appreciation of your good offices, I am,

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

Re: Complaint against Bethesda Compliance Board
Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of February 17 addressed to General Johnson has been forwarded to this office for attention.

We have already taken steps to investigate the complaint which you have registered and will keep you advised of our findings.

Very truly yours,

M. E. WOODS, Executive Assistant.

BETHESDA, OHIO, March 5, 1934.

STATE N.R.A. COMPLIANCE DIRECTOR,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of February 28, headed: Re: Complaint Against Bethesda Compliance Board. Let me state emphatically that my complaint is not against the local board. I am not even interested in it. My complaint is against the Orrison Cigar Co., an N.R.A. member, and said complaint has been pending for 4 months, and as I have told the compliance division at Washington, I am demanding prompt action on the complaint.

If N.R.A. is going to permit an arrogant, unscrupulous chiseler and racketeer to ruin me without cause I want to know it at once and I shall certainly do just as I said in my letter to General Johnson. I shall fight my own battle in my own way. It may mean the breaking up of my home; it may mean that I shall lose my property, which is in bad shape financially; it may, in fine, utterly ruin me, but I shall in turn ruin the local modern industrial Moloch, against whom I can bring charges which will put him in Federal prison. Besides, I am making plans to get full publicity on my case, or rather the failure of N.R.A. to protect me in the rights it has guaranteed me as an employee of an N.R.A. member.

I have certainly been patient in this matter, but my situation is desperate and I cannot afford any further delay.

Please do not confuse the issue. The local compliance board has ceased to function long ago, and I filed my complaints with the Compliance Division at Washington and was promised action, but the matter has continued unsettled and no nearer a definite decision than it was at the start.

Hoping that this matter may be promptly brought to a conclusion and that the wages I have been cheated out of may be ordered paid to me, I am

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

STATE N.R.A. COMPLIANCE DIRECTOR,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: I regret that our letter of February 28 was headed, "Re complaint against Bethesda compliance board. It should have read "Complaint against Orrison Cigar Co." Please understand we have taken this matter up direct with the above company and are making a thorough investigation.

Very truly yours,

M. E. WOODS, Executive Assistant.

BETHESDA, OHIO, March 27, 1934.

Re: Complaint against Orrison Cigar Co.
Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Referring to above matter, you advised me February 28, 1934, that it was being thoroughly investigated and that I would be kept advised as to findings. You also advised me on March 7, 1934, that a thorough investigation was being made.

Now, Mr. Director, this case is nearly 5 months old, and I have been forced to live on relief or public charity on the basis of from 3 to 5 cents per meal for three persons in my family, and no provision is made for rent and other necessary expenses, with the result that I am being forced hopelessly into debt, to say nothing of the fact that I stand to lose several hundred dollars because of the fact I cannot meet certain obligations.

There can be no question that I have been unfairly discriminated against, and, according to the President's own interpretation of N.R.A. section 7a: "No employer shall unfairly discriminate against an employee."

I have been permitted to earn $32.32 since September 16, 1933, and, based on N.R.A. minimum, I have therefore been cheated out of $303.68 in wages for which I was entirely willing to work, and I am demanding that this amount be paid to me and that N.R.A. see to it that it is paid.

I can see no justification for any further delay in this matter, and I am demanding an unequivocal answer as to whether or not N.R.A. intends to enforce justice in this case, and if so, when. If the promises made by N.R.A. on behalf of workers such as I were merely propaganda and meaningless and without force, I want to know it now.

D. V. Orrison, who heads and manages the Orrison Cigar Co., is an unscrupulous sneak and liar, and will not hesitate to tell any lie, even under oath, to justify himself and to avoid the consequences of his violations of his word, law, or anything else. If given an opportunity to do so, I will not only make these statements in his presence but will prove them.

Insisting upon and expecting prompt action, I am,

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

NOTE.—The above letter has not been answered, and if it were, it would probably contain nothing definitely concerning the subject matter of the letter. It has been almost impossible to get any N.R.A. official to give a direct and unequivocal answer to any question or to stick to the issues and facts. They quite apparently recognize only such facts as suits their purposes.

OFFICE OF STATE N.R.A. COMPLIANCE DIRECTOR,
Cleveland, Ohio, April 10, 1934.

Subject: Your complaint against the Orrison Cigar Co., Inc.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: On Thursday, April 5, Mr. Orrison called at this office for the purpose of discussing the difficulties of the cigarmakers of Bethesda and vicinity. While he was here we took up the matter of your complaint, and we attempted to see what arrangement could be made to settle this dispute.

Mr. Orrison informed us that his business had been gradually getting lower and that he has been forced to reduce the number of employees working, and that due to the fact that it is necessary for him to guarantee a higher wage than many employees earn or could earn with the shorter hours, he has been compelled to keep those who were the fastest and best workmen. He further stated that his plant has been closed down entirely for the past 2 weeks and that the majority of the workers are now on charity.

Mr. Orrison has informed us that you were not fired, and that when your tools were sent home this was done as a matter of kindness by the foreman and without Mr. Orrison's knowledge. He cited as evidence of the fact you were not discharged but laid off, the fact that you did do some work for him in December.

We have asked Mr. Orrison to discuss this matter with you and see if there is not some possible arrangement that could be worked out whereby the two of you could work together for the purpose of reviving the industry and not work at cross-purposes to each other. We are awaiting a report from him relative to your meeting and we hope that such discussion will be carried on with an appreciation of the difficulties which both of you are facing.

We shall be glad to hear from you.

Yours very truly,

M. E. WOODS,
Executive Assistant.

BETHESDA, OHIO, April 12, 1934.

M. E. WOODS,
Executive Assistant, State N.R.A. Compliance Director,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR MADAM: I have for acknowledgement your letter of the 10th instant, with reference to complaint against Orrison Cigar Co. and advising me that Mr. Orrison had called at your office.

I am quite well aware of the fact that the cigar manufacturers have been hard hit by the new deal and that they have plenty of problems, but that does not change the facts in my case, nor give Mr. Orrison any excuse for unfair treatment or misrepresenting the facts. He has very cleverly handled the truth in such a way as to obscure the facts without actually telling but two or three lies. I know that when I make a statement like this, I am liable to be accused of being stubbornly narrow-minded, but I do not intend to let Mr. Orrison get away with any of his slippery tricks if I can avoid it.

It is true that he has been operating with reduced force, but that does not change the fact that I have been discriminated against unfairly. He may have guaranteed a higher wage than many could earn, but very few ever benefitted by that guaranty to the extent of receiving the minimum wages. Mr. Orrison might support his claim of increased costs due to meeting the minimum wage, by producing true records. His inference that I am both slow and a poor workman is in perfect character with his usual methods. I am not the fastest roller, but I am faster than the average. As to being a poor workman, does it not seem rather strange that he has been 9 years finding it out? And if my work was unsatisfactory, would it not have been the honest and decent thing to have told me about it, rather than everybody else? The fact that he has recently closed down his plant, does not alter the fact that I filed complaints 5 months ago, and that said complaints are still pending and unsettled. The fact that the majority of the workers may be on charity does not excuse his unfair and inhuman treatment of me nor justify N.R.A. in its failure or refusal to back up its promises.

I do not quite understand the statement that the foreman sent my tools home as a matter of kindness. If it was an act of kindness, would it have been done without explanation, and just when I had notified the company in writing of my cause of complaint and that I intended to file a complaint? His statement that it was done without his knowledge is absolutely untrue. He acknowledged to me on December 9, 1933, that he had discussed it with the foreman and that he had concurred with and consented to the foreman's action. It is true that I worked for him 7 days in December. But did he tell you why? Did he inform you that I had let him know that I had the goods on him and could cause him serious trouble because of many violations of certain statutory laws? Did he inform you that he had agreed to put me to work and keep me working if I would drop any such prosecution? Did he inform you that the 7 days I worked in December was his sole contribution under that agreement, and that as soon as he thought he had me silenced he violated his agreement?

Mr. Orrison has carried out your request that he discuss matters with me in a very characteristic manner. He told me that he had called at your office and discussed the local situation and that he had been advised to see if he could get the defunct compliance board together in order that he might file a petition for certain exceptions to the present N.R.A. provisions. He did not mention my case having been discussed. He stated that he had been told (by whom he did not say) that there would probably be no difficulty about it except that I (being a member of the board) would block his proposition. He carefully explained that if his petition were approved it would enable him to put a number of people to work. He gave many reasons and details to show that a reduction of already inadequate wages and an increase of tolerance ought to prove a blessing. A meeting of the board was called for Monday, April 9, and the record should show that I moved that his petition be recommended for approval. The board's report should be in your office by now. My own case was not mentioned in the meeting.

I am quite willing to cooperate with Mr. Orrison or anyone else for the purpose of reviving the industry. But I am not willing that my case, which should have been definitely settled many weeks ago, shall be dropped or die of inertia. I have worked for the last 3 days with a borrowed typewriter preparing copies of all papers and letters concerning the case, and am mailing the whole mass to my Representative in Congress, with the request that he insist upon a prompt decision of the case, based on the regulations, evidence, and its merits. I have written a complete history of the case, in narrative form, which I propose to publish if N.R.A. refuses to render a just decision.

I have now been unemployed almost continuously for 30 weeks, during which time I have earned $32.32. Based on N.R.A. minimum, that means the loss of $327.63. My past experience with Mr. Orrison is such that I cannot depend on any adjustment or agreement made with him, and I can expect him to violate any proposal which might be agreed upon mutually. I am quite willing to discuss the matter with him as you suggest, but I am not willing to accept any proposal which is not in a form that can be enforced. I went to him in December and accepted his proposition, which he promptly violated when it suited his purpose to do so, whatever that purpose may have been.

I am awaiting with no little interest Mr. Orrison's report as to the discussion of the matter with me, and assure you that I will acknowledge and verify any true statement he may make.

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

BETHESDA, OHIO, April 12, 1934.

Hon. L. E. IMHOFF, M.C.,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing herewith correct copies of letters and papers dealing with complaints I filed against the Orrison Cigar Co. on November 9 and 13. I am also enclosing a draft of the story I have written covering the case from the beginning to the present time. I have been very careful to avoid making any statement which the facts will not sustain.

If no satisfactory and prompt settlement of this case can be secured, it is my intention to release this story for publicity purposes. It is not my desire to make trouble, but I have been unjustly and maliciously wronged, and I am thoroughly determined to use every available weapon to fight this thing out from any and all possible angles.

I am sending you these copies of letters and papers with the request that you call on the N.R.A. authorities and insist that they immediately take the action which should have been taken nearly 5 months ago. Since their failure to take any decisive action has caused me to lose $327.68 in wages, based on N.R.A. minimum, I am insisting that they see to it that this amount be paid to me, together with any amount accumulating between now and the time it is paid.

Now, Mr. IMHOFF, the prompt and successful conclusion of this case is of vital importance to me, and I ask that you use your best endeavors to that end. The State director at Cleveland seems to be using the same dilatory methods which were used at Washington, and I am not willing that there shall be any further delay or that the case shall die of inertia.

Thanking you in advance for your interest in this matter and hoping that you will be able to get prompt and desirable results, I am,

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

OFFICE OF STATE N.R.A. COMPLIANCE DIRECTOR,
Cleveland, Ohio, April 23, 1934.

Subject: Your complaint against the Orrison Cigar Co.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: We have received a letter from Mr. D. V. Orrison, stating that he had had a very pleasant and lengthy talk with you relative to the matter regarding which you complained, and he informs us that you now thoroughly understand that it is impossible for him to reemploy you at present.

He stated that if you were unable to get employment elsewhere, he would be very glad to give you work just as soon as possible, or as soon as the company obtained orders for stogies of the type such as you make.

This letter states further "He understands this and I believe he understands that this complaint was really settled and terminated at the time last fall, when a committee from the local compliance board came to him with his complaint at which time I explained to the committee all conditions surrounding his being laid off, together with a number of others that were laid off at the same time.

The respondent informs us that the committee accepted these statements as facts, and informed the respondent that they could not see any reason for the complaint.

Yours very truly,

M. E. WOODS,
Executive Assistant.

BETHESDA, OHIO, April 25, 1934.

STATE N.R.A. COMPLIANCE DIRECTOR,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I have for acknowledgment your letter of the 23d instant, advising me of Mr. Orrison's letter and its contents.

I thoroughly understand that he has not reemployed me, but I do not understand the impossibility of such employment. As I have contended for nearly 6 months, I am one of the oldest employees and am capable of making any product he puts out. The factory has been in almost continuous operation during all of the time since my complaints were filed and only one of the rollers working is as old as I, in point of seniority. I am quite well aware of the fact that business has fallen off badly, but I do not admit that as a justification for the treatment I have had.

It is quite true that Mr. Orrison promises to give me work as soon as possible, but he has made like promises before, and besides I should never have been unemployed for more than short periods.

I certainly did not understand that my complaints were really settled and terminated last fall. Nor do I understand that an explanation made by an employer, satisfactory to himself need necessarily be satisfactory to me.

I thoroughly understand that so far as a lone employee, not backed by a powerful organization, is concerned, N.R.A. is impotent and a fraud. I thoroughly understand that better-known persons than I are accusing N.R.A. of having betrayed the worker—the little fellow—such as I. I thoroughly understand that N.R.A. has done nothing for me but get me into a serious situation. I thoroughly understand that the local compliance board's committee who called on Mr. Orrison last fall, betrayed its trust in discussing me personally with him and your office did exactly the same thing on April 5. Mr. Orrison repeated to me statements I had made in letters which he could have learned nowhere else. What right had the local committee to inform the respondent that they could not see any reason for the complaint? It was their duty to ascertain facts and report—not to render one-sided decisions. I thoroughly understand that N.R.A. has utterly failed and refused to take any definite action or render any decision in my case and that it does not intend to do so.

I thoroughly understand that although I had a pleasant and lengthy talk with Mr. Orrison, neither pleasantries or talk will pay my debts and I am in no manner convinced that N.R.A. has not betrayed me.

N.R.A. published the rules and methods by which the individual worker was supposed to secure speedy redress for any wrong on the part of his employer and I followed those rules carefully and the net result has been my betrayal by that division of it which was designed and created for my protection. Or was it created to furnish nice jobs for an army of administrative white collars?

I have carefully preserved all papers and letters—or copies—connected with this case and I intend to use them for publicity purposes. I have furnished my Congressman with a complete record of the case. I have also placed a copy of said record in the hands of Mrs. Cornelia Bryce Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, who is a militant worker in behalf of just such little fellows as I. It is my intention to place the facts in the hands of any person or organization who will use them. It is also my intention to publish the story in a certain paper of national circulation. I have fought a good fight, but I have not yet finished my course.

Now Mr. Director, the crux of the whole matter is just this: On November 9 and 13, 1933, I filed complaints against the Orrison Cigar Co., definitely charging certain things. The said company was either guilty or not guilty of the charges against them, and I had a right to a definite decision, one way or the other. N.R.A. has persistently refused to stick to the issue, locally, at Washington, or at Cleveland. This seems so plain that a wayfaring man, even though a fool, need not err therein.

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

Re: Complaint against Orrison Cigar Co.

Mr. O. S. HOLLOWAY,
Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR MR. HOLLOWAY: Your complaint against the company mentioned above has been brought to our attention again by your Congressman, LAWRENCE E. IMHOFF.

In reviewing the file we have on your complaint, we have had in mind your personal circumstances, and we regret exceedingly to advise you again that this administration has not been in a position to take action on your complaint. When you made your original inquiry August 26, to Miss M. E. Woods, State N.R.A. director, Cleveland, your employer had not signed the President's agreement, and therefore was under no obligation under that agreement. The Orrison Cigar Co. signed the President's agreement on September 6. You state that after September 16 you worked part time for a brief period, and that for most of the time since September 16 you have not been employed by the Orrison Cigar Co.

As you are fully advised, local N.R.A. compliance boards were established for the convenience of workers and employers, and were charged with the responsibility of securing compliance with the President's agreement through adjustment of complaints. Many complaints, of course, come to us direct, but these were uniformly sent back to the complainant with the suggestion that the alleged violation be called to the attention of the appropriate N.R.A. compliance board. In other instances, if it seemed advisable, we wrote the appropriate boards direct, advising them with respect to the details of complaints, but, of course, withheld the name of complainant.

We mention this procedure with which you are familiar, as because of our distance from the scene of complaints it was necessary that we have boards constituted according to the plan outlined in Bulletin No. 5 and on which we could rely for the determination of facts in connection with complaints. As you have studied Bulletin No. 5, we feel certain that you will agree with us that action by the National Compliance Board at this headquarters could not be taken on alleged violations. The National Compliance Board has required that violations of the President's agreement be definitely established before action could be taken by that Board.

In your letter of December 4 you state that your local board considered your complaint and called on your employer. We have never received any statement from your board that you were discharged because of your complaint, or that your employer was not complying with the President's agreement.

We are making these references to explain why action by this headquarters could not be taken, merely on your charges that the Orrison Cigar Co. was not complying with President's agreement.

As we have gone over your file again, we do not find it is established that you were let out of employment by the Orrison Cigar Co. because you made a complaint, or that at the time you were let out that the Orrison Cigar Co. was violating the President's agreement.

Yours very truly,

Re: Complaint against Orrison Cigar Co.

Mr. JAMES E. PEEBLES,
Analysis Branch Compliance Division, N.R.A.,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 26th instant, concerning above matter, is very logical and convincing if one does not insist upon sticking to the issues and to the facts.

You say in your letter, "We regret exceedingly to advise you again that this administration has not been in a position to take action on your complaint." May I ask just when I was so advised? If it is sufficiently important for N.R.A. to justify itself now, why was it not equally important 5 months ago, when the case was turned over to your headquarters, because of the failure and refusal of the local board to continue to function? Your letter was obviously designed, and its logic intended to silence a moron. Your reference to our inquiry to Miss M. E. Woods in August has no bearing on the case and is just so much dust to obscure the issue. We asked the State director for some advice and received a very courteous reply which told us nothing. We sent a rather lengthy telegram to this same Miss Woods at that time, stating our situation and asking advice. Her wire in reply was delivered by phone to the Orrison office, because it was so addressed, thus ignoring the confidential nature of the communication and beginning the series of betrayals at the hands of N.R.A., covering a period of 8 months. These communications were not personal on my part, but were written with the full knowledge and approval of the other employees. I have not in any letter stated that I had been employed on a part-time basis. I was employed very briefly on a full-time basis but did not earn the minimum wage. I mention this merely for the purpose of showing how utterly impossible it has been to maintain the issue clearly and to prevent perverting and misconstruing the facts.

In spite of all explanations and attempts to justify the shameful manner in which this case has been mishandled, the fact remains that I did my part and in accordance with the rules of procedure published by N.R.A. Your Administration was promptly and fully advised of the facts when the local board refused to carry out the part for which it was responsible, under those rules, 5 months ago. N.R.A. made absolutely no effective move to correct the situation created by this debacle. Your letter strongly intimates that the responsibility for failure to establish the facts charged is mine. Was it within my power and authority to compel the local board to act, or to replace it with a board which would act? That is why I sent the whole matter to Washington 5 months ago.

An analysis of the facts, which does not consider all the facts, may lead to a wholly incorrect conclusion and to a false and untenable position. You have apparently most carefully overlooked some very important facts in analyzing this case. It may not have been the proper procedure for the National Compliance Board to take action on alleged violations, but it was certainly up to someone to provide the opportunity to prove those allegations. I accepted the rules and provisions laid down in Bulletin No. 5 in good faith and acted accordingly and have been betrayed and thwarted at every point.

The committee of the local board who called upon Mr. Orrison last fall not only betrayed their trust (according to their own report) by discussing me personally with him but, according to a recent statement made by Mr. Orrison, in writing to your State headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, they further betrayed their trust by rendering a secret, unreported, and unauthorized decision that they saw no reason for complaint. On April 5 the State headquarters also played the part of Judas and violated the dictums and rules of N.R.A. by disclosing to Mr. Orrison certain statements I had made in letters, and which he innocently repeated to me without knowing that he was exposing anyone.

Your admission that your office has "never received any statement from your board", proves my contention completely that N.R.A. authorities have betrayed me, either passively or purposely, because you were advised of the defection of the local board. I, being a lone and unknown individual and without the backing of a powerful organization, N.R.A. just could not be bothered with carrying out its promises and enforcing its rules, since my case had no news value for ballyhoo purposes.

To advise me, in the circumstances, that my charges have not been established is merely adding insult to injury. The basis of my fight, covering 6 months, is just that. The failure and refusal of N.R.A. to provide the means of establishing the facts is the real bone of contention. It seems to me that a lengthy and analytical explanation now is somewhat belated and ill-timed. Why not have admitted 5 months ago that nothing would be done?

I can see no way by which I can compel N.R.A. to extricate me from the desperate situation into which it has led me, both through the published rules contained in Bulletin No. 5 and by direct instructions and assurances from headquarters. Neither can I see any means by which N.R.A. can prevent me from exposing its failures and betrayals.

I am not an analytical expert, but I can marshal the facts and prove them by the record, and the record will bear out my assertion that I have been betrayed and that N.R.A. is impotent or has perpetrated a cruel fraud. I can see no reason why I should not, if I so desire, cast this thing into the maelstrom of the oncoming political campaign, so long as I stick to facts and the record.

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

BETHESDA, OHIO, April 30, 1934.

Hon. LAWRENCE E. IMHOFF,
Member of Congress, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing herewith copy of a letter from N.R.A. headquarters, together with a copy of my reply thereto for your information.

Yours very truly,

O. S. HOLLOWAY.

NOTE.—No acknowledgment of above letter has been received.

Mr. FESS. Then, Mr. President, I have other letters of the same date that deal with the clay-products industry, showing the effect of the N.R.A. upon a small unit. These letters are very informing as to the definite effect of the operation of the N.R.A. on this particular industry, and I should like to have the letters inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MOWRYSTOWN BRICK & TILE CO.,
MOWRYSTOWN, OHIO, May 18, 1934.

Mr. SIMEON D. FESS,
Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the daily paper that you are one of the champions of the N.R.A. opponents, and since we have been unable to get any satisfactory adjustment with the code authority I thought I would write you encouraging you to go ahead with your work and that the great majority of the people are with you, the newspaper propaganda notwithstanding.

Anyone with any common sense knows that a plant or business employing 20 to 50 men cannot operate on the same basis as the plant or business employing up in the thousands of men, and, of course, this was one of the objections pointed out at the beginning, and the administration promised that the conditions would be adjusted for any small business that was oppressed, but of course events have proved that this was all bluff and that the little business man and manufacturer are being forced out of business every day.

My business is the poorest this spring that it has been in 25 years, and people in other lines tell me the same story, so you can be assured that this newspaper prosperity is all propaganda. As the automobile business is the only one that is greatly improved and, of course, that will slacken in a few weeks when their spring rush is over.

The building business, with all its branches, employs more people than any other one line, as you possibly know, and this business is so dead that there is scarcely a kick left in it. Since we have failed to get any adjustment from the code authorities we are living in hopes of a strong Republican victory for Congressmen this fall so that these idiotic laws may be repealed next January as soon as Congress meets.

I have talked to many hundreds of people, and I believe that 80 percent of them feel as I do about the N.R.A., and the farmers are especially bitter about the treatment accorded them.

I am enclosing copy of a letter sent to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson on January 10, and have received the first answer January 22 from R. J. Fogg, Assistant Deputy Administrator, who says that he cannot see how relief can be offered, but that he would refer it to the code authority. On May 1, I received another letter from Mr. Fogg, in which he says that he does not see how a wage exception can be made; therefore, we are shut down indefinitely, the first time this has happened in 25 years.

I feel sure that if the whole N.R.A. was scrapped we would have much faster recovery, as at the present but few people have confidence in the Government.

Yours very truly,

W. L. BELTZ.

MOWRYSTOWN BRICK & TILE CO.,
Mowrystown, Ohio, February 10, 1934.

Gen. HUGH S. JOHNSON,
Administrator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: As you will see by this letterhead I am the sole owner of the so-called "Mowrystown Brick & Tile Co.", and have been for 27 years. This is the only plant left in this part of the State out of about 20 plants that were in this district about 25 years ago. Possibly my being able to stay in the business and stand the competition of the larger eastern producers is on account of hard work and economical management, and being in a little country town where living expenses are the very lowest, so that my men could afford to work for a lot less money than some of the big plants were forced to pay, yet were able to live very comfortably and own their own property and be as independent as any of us.

Every location for any kind of business has its natural advantages and natural disadvantages. Our natural disadvantages have been high freight rate on coal and of late years distance from market and our natural advantage has been low price of labor. If the Government by the use of codes leaves me all the natural disadvantages and takes away all the advantages, that automatically puts me out of business, and all my force, which I have employed through the depression, out of jobs for an indefinite period.

Twenty years ago 80 percent of our market was within a radius of 25 miles, with an average of about 12 miles. Today 80 percent of our market is over 40 miles, with an average of about 35 miles. This, of course, applies to delivery direct by truck from the plant. Of course the rail haul would be greater.

I think that in keeping my men working 9 to 10 months per year through this hard time that I have done far more than my competitors in keeping things going, although I had to sacrifice practically all of my profit, but it has enabled a lot of people to get some good, cheap houses which otherwise they would not have been able to build.

I understand, of course, that all of the codes were written by the big men of the industry, and of course they wrote it to suit themselves and their own conditions just as far as they could, and that all of the officers in charge are city men and cannot understand how a man in a little town of 372 people can live well on $8 or $10 per week.

In talking with a number of the people in the cities I find that the average working man expects to pay a week's work for a month's rent. In this small village my men have been able with 1 week's pay to pay 2 months' rent; and since all of them have gardens and can buy produce direct from the farms without any middleman's profit, they can live well on a fraction of what it costs a man under like conditions to live in any city.

I am enclosing a chart showing prices we got for drain tile and brick and price we paid for common labor and coal delivered at the plant each year, beginning 1914, up until the present time. You will note that the highest price I paid was 30 cents per hour, when common labor in the city was getting from 60 cents to 80 cents per hour. Many of the men that worked here during the boom period of 1917–20 and from 1925 to 1930 left me and went to the cities to get those high wages, but the large part of them returned, saying they could live just as well here at half the price they were getting in the city.

In a small town like this, and a small business where not more than 25 men are ever employed, the employer and employee are nearly always friends and neighbors, and for the employer to work the sweatshop principle is utterly impossible. I have several men who have been here for from 10 to 18 years, so that if the wage and working conditions were not fair no sensible man would stay that long.

Some of our competitors have their own coal mines, and, of course, practically all that it would cost them for coal is to mine it, which possibly runs around $1 per ton, while I have to pay a high freight rate and a commission in addition to the price of coal, which gives my competitors east of us 100 miles quite an advantage; in fact, our coal at the present price delivered to the plant is $3.77 a ton on car, besides the unloading charge.

We usually work every day through the summer, or beginning about March 1 to 15, and operate till about the 1st of December (this last year we quit Nov. 15), and use the same men during the colder months for extensions or repair work. We do not intend to make any extensions, but there is some repair work to be done, and my men are anxious to get to work, and I am ready to put them to work, but not at 37½ cents per hour. By paying 25 cents per hour my pay roll will be increased just 33 percent, and that is all that I can possibly stand with the selling price anywhere near what it is now.

As mentioned before, I have been operating at 60 to 80 percent of capacity and operating many weeks just to give my men work, and, of course, being a small concern, had to sell the product largely as it was made; therefore, I do not have many millions of brick piled up like lots of my competitors. If I sell brick now, I will have to make them, and, of course, that means employment; while many of my competitors have many millions in stock, and when they sell a carload or a dozen carloads, all that labor gets out of it is the loading in the cars, and, of course, these were produced in many cases with labor at less than 37½ cents per hour. So that I do not see how a small manufacturer located as I am can work under the code and survive. This is the only industry in this small town, or, in fact, for several miles around, that employs more than five men, and to shut this plant down indefinitely is a blow to the community, especially the merchants say they can tell quite a difference when the plant is operating and when it is not.

In 1932 I paid 20 cents per hour and lost just a little money, and in 1933 I paid 15 cents per hour the first half of the year and 20 cents per hour the last half and made a little money. So you see that labor is getting their share, as I am getting all that I can get for the product as demands and competition sets the price, and I want to state again that the competition from the larger plants who have their own coal mines are the ones that are holding the price down.

My men are reasonably satisfied and can make a nice living at 20 cents per hour, but I am willing to make a try on 25 cents per hour if you will give me the authority to do so.

Hoping to hear from you promptly so that I can put these men to work on a repair job, I am,

Yours very truly,

W. L. BELTZ.

Mr. FESS. Then, Mr. President, in respect of the effect of the N.R.A. upon the small newspaper, I have a letter here which begins in this fashion:

As a printer and employer of labor for 38 years, having in our employ an average of 10 persons, paying wages in full every Saturday night for that period, I desire to call your attention, and that of the United States Senate, to the impending results of the graphic-arts code, to which we have never subscribed.

This is a most informing letter, from the owner and publisher of one of the small newspapers in Ohio, dealing with the business side of that industry in its relationship to the N.R.A. I should like to have that letter inserted in the RECORD, at the same time letting it be understood that the letters I have submitted are just general selections from a day's receipt of mail as to the opinions of the writers on the operation of the N.R.A. as it applies to small industries. I thank my friend the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from Ohio will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE JEFFERSON GAZETTE,
Jefferson, Ohio, May 18, 1934.

In re: The little man and the printers' code.
Senator S. D. FESS,

DEAR SIR: As a printer and employer of labor for 38 years, having in our employ an average of 10 persons, paying wages in full every Saturday night for that period, I desire to call your attention, and that of the United States Senate, to the impending results of the graphic arts code, to which we have never subscribed.

We signed the President's blanket code, right or wrong, and have complied with it, although the reduction in hours did not add to our employment but did add to the difficulties of maintaining what for years has been a profitable business, and satisfactory to our employees. We never have had any labor trouble, and have one man with us for 38 years and none with us now less than 5 years. We carried employees during the depression at a loss to ourselves of several thousand dollars rather than dismiss them.

We were informed by the Employing Printers of Ohio, "Your code has been signed", and were urged to attend a code meeting, after the code was signed, held at Columbus on March 16, 1934. The Employing Printers announced themselves as State regional code authority. Knowing the head of this organization we neither protested nor assented.

TAXED BY NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

About a month ago we received a letter from a gentleman—God save the name—residing in Chicago, demanding that we remit within 7 days the sum of $13 as a code assessment. On the demand was the intimation that inability or refusal, as the case might be, to remit would result in a fine and imprisonment. Therefore, in this once Republic of the United States we now have code authorities having all the power of taxation and of making rules and regulations having the force and effect of law. By what constitutional authority have there been established some 400 governments within the National Government, which the citizen has no opportunity to question and act against any expenditure, any rule, any order, and no longer has any control of his own business?

General Johnson asks where are the little men that these codes affect, and further says that if there be such who cannot comply with the terms of their codes there is no place for them in these United States. I regret that a similar statement has been made by the President of the former Republic of the United States of America.

Within a few days we have received a "black book" with white lettering, which I suppose is the code for mourning, in which we are informed as to the minimum prices we may charge for printing, and that to charge any lesser price subjects one to fine and imprisonment. These prices are supposed to be uniform in the United States, with certain reductions if permission be applied for and be granted. As job printing is usually of a rush-order business, I suppose Rip Van Winkle would now be a successful printer.

UNFAIR PRICES IN THE CODE

That the code is manifestly unfair to small print shops can be seen from examining the code price book—the book of mourning.

For instance, this letterhead is printed on a paper ordinarily costing about 15 cents per pound delivered, 20-pound stock, making the paper cost for 1,000 copies $1.50. A fair cost of composition is 50 cents to $1, and a fair cost of presswork is $1 for 30 minutes' presswork. We would make a fair profit at $5.50. Under the code we must charge $9.50 for 1,000 copies or $17 for 3,000 copies. It is needless to state that the average rural print shop order is less than 1,000 copies of any item it produces.

The prices on envelops have not been increased enough to greatly concern us.

The price of a cardboard farm auction sale bill is fixed at $12 for 100, whereas we have charged $6 per 100 for several years, and consider the gross cost to us as about $3, assuming we can produce a fair number of orders in the auction season.

The result of this price fixing is that farmers will refuse to buy sale bills and country merchants and professional men will refuse to buy printed stationery. This may mean little to some people, but it means life or death to thousands of small printers in the United States, who in few instances are competitors with the larger shops.

Prior to 1932 this shop paid for 48 hours' work one $50, two $35, one $32, one $25, three $22, one $18, and one $12. It is needless to say we cannot survive on that scale these days with business at 50 percent of the average for 15 years. This does not include anything to the two proprietors for their labor—usually more than 8 hours a day—who in fact were as much laborers as any employee.

PAMPHLET WORK

We have one customer who orders three times a year a pamphlet 6 by 9 inches, about 135 pages. The composition is known as "phat", not much to a page. For this work we receive $175 each time. Under the code we must charge $556 per job, as near as we can figure from the black book. It is needless to say the customer will drop the work (100 copies only).

We have another customer for whom we printed 3,500 copies 64 pages tabular work and advertising, price $330, which was a close figure and should have been more. The job was taken to give employment rather than profit.

But the black book proposes to send us to jail and fine us for giving employment unless we charge therefor $443 plus $31.80 for covers—a price we cannot obtain.

WHAT THE CODE MEANS

That the code is merely an effort to make it difficult for a small printer and easy for the large printer may be seen from the following on page 2 of the said black book:

"No establishment shall sell or offer to sell any product listed in the price-determination schedule issued by the National Graphic Arts Coordinating Committee of the Graphic Arts Code attached hereto and made a part hereof at a price less than 10 percent below the price for such product contained in said price-determination schedule.

Provided, that this prohibition shall not apply to any single order exceeding $500 in amount nor to any combined order exceeding $5,000 in amount, nor to any order actually contracted for and exceeding $5,000 in amount per year.

Under the second paragraph a large city printing plant can contract with the county commissioners to do all of the county printing, because it will exceed $5,000 in a year, and make prices per item as it sees fit, but the country printer, being unable to supply every county requirement, may thus be automatically barred from obtaining any printing whatever, because he must charge the utterly absurd code prices or go to jail.

Under this exemption a canvasser can come into our territory and secure all of the local printing from regular customers of this shop at prices below our ability to meet because the prices in the code on orders of 5,000 or more are low prices, and thus completely eliminate all local competition for all printing.

And this, Senator Fess, is in the United States of America called the "new deal." This is known as "revolution without the r." If this be evolution, then, Senator, I can easily understand why in evolution there has been so much monkey business.

Respectfully yours,

E. C. LAMPSON,

One of the little men for whom there is no place left in the United States, where several of his direct ancestors fought in the American Revolution—that was not monkey business.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On May 21, 1934:

S. 2825. An act to provide for an appropriation of $50,000 with which to make a survey of the old Indian trail known as the "Natchez Trace", with a view of constructing a national road on this route to be known as the "Natchez Trace Parkway."

On May 22, 1934:

S. 2845. An act to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property; and

S. 3364. An act for the relief of G. T. Fleming.

On May 23, 1934:

S. 1807. An act to provide for the exchange of Indian and privately owned lands, Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, Ariz.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I rise to submit a few remarks in view of the agitation and discussion concerning the N.R.A. and the report of the Review Board and the animadversions arising between the parties.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the very able and convincing exposition of N.R.A. operations by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If I am not mistaken, he described recent events as "a storm of wrath and vituperation." I think the description states the case. I shall address myself just to that aspect of the matter.

Mr. President, why should there be a storm of wrath and vituperation in view of a report of a Board of Review appointed by the President seeking, as I take it, to discharge its duties? Why should petitioners before a bureau or department of our Government, undertaking to describe their situation in view of the Government's operations, be subjected to wrath and vituperation? How can we reconcile with any understanding of civilization, not to say Americanism, but mere civilization, the response of men in authority to criticism by way of wrath and vituperation? It is my understanding that the humblest citizen of America may criticize his Government, may file his petition, may state his case, may set forth his wrongs and demand his rights without paying to anybody anywhere any penalty whatsoever.

I will grant the Board of Review was all wrong, though I do not know whether it was or not. I am not going to discuss the merits of its report. But the Board of Review, upon filing its report, was pilloried before the American people as having acted in bad faith. One of the officials not directly criticized responded by way of intimating that they were insane, and suggested that an examination be had as to their sanity. Is that becoming a free government? It does not even become a despotism. Mr. President, that is of the essence of intolerance, and I hope we still may feel that the air of our land is too pure for intolerance to be breathed into it.

What may we say with respect to those authorities, concerning whose operations a board appointed by the President filed a report containing some criticism and some suggestions, responding thereto not with facts but with wrath and vituperation? What shall we say of public officials, public servants—not masters in America, but servants—who, upon reading a report containing testimony of American citizens concerning their relation to operations of the Government, denounce those citizens as chiselers, charging them with bad faith, and, if I read aright, describing them as ragtags and bobtails? That is intolerance.

It is this feature of this matter that arouses me and demands my appearance here on this floor.

I am perfectly willing to give the N.R.A. the fairest opportunity conceivable, since it is the public policy. I am perfectly willing to pursue, with respect to it, the course of patience and of tolerance and of constructive helpfulness. I am perfectly willing to pay tribute to General Johnson. I believe I will. I think General Johnson has labored at his task with all diligence and with great earnestness and devotion. I give him credit for patriotic self-sacrifice; but I deny his right and I resent his course as I would resent the course of any other public servant whatsoever, no matter how high his station; I would resent the course of any Senator who responded to legitimate criticism with abuse and denunciation.

America must be free. The American man must be free. This is not the land of suppression of opinion, even of wrong opinion, by means of the intolerance of a public opinion aroused by means of public servants; and I may add here that that sort of suppression can be made more effective and more destructive of our Government than the jails of Russia or the castor oil of Italy.

I stand here, Mr. President, to maintain just one thing: Let the N.R.A. go on. Let us be helpful toward it; but, even more, let the freedom of the American man be preserved; and that means that he may stand anywhere and at any place, he may assert and seek to maintain his cause, and he must not be subjected to the restraints of official denunciation; and if we permit it by way of denunciation and wrath and of vituperation it will be but a short step to the inquisition, the rack, and the wheel.

So I protest against what appears here to have cropped out as something in the nature of the intolerance of a despotic state of mind. I stand here to say that for my part, regardless of whomsoever may be involved or whatsoever may be the cause or the law or the policy, I hope the time never will come in America when the freedom of the humblest American man, be he ever so wrong, be he ever so mistaken, will be hindered in the slightest degree by any public official. It is of the very essence of things that we shall remember that every public servant in this land is a servant, not a master. While he may respond to criticism, let him respond with the facts. Let him give us the truth and let him by all means take warning that, whether he thinks he can get away with it or not, no one will ever get away in America with the effort to suppress opinion or suppress criticism by official intolerance exercised in a policy of personal abuse.

I thank the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. After listening to the statements of the Senator from North Carolina, which are always edifying, I wish to ask him whether he recalls the classical statement of Voltaire when he said, speaking of the right of someone to say what he had in mind: "I do not believe a word you say, but I am willing to give my life to secure your right to say what I do not believe"?

Mr. BAILEY. And, if I may interrupt the Senator, while that should obtain between man and man devoted to tolerance and freedom, it is of the very essence of government that men in the Senator's position and mine shall see that it is maintained as between the public servant and the citizen.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, as stated on the floor yesterday, the right to tax is the right to destroy; and we have had grounded in the fundamentals of our Government by our forefathers that taxation without representation is unjust. Yet we see here a general tendency all along the line to disrupt the fundamentals of our Government, and, in my judgment, to strike at the very vitals of our governmental organization.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Do I understand the Senator to agree with the statement that the power to tax is the power to destroy?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is.

Mr. LOGAN. Then what are our courts for, if not to prevent unjust taxation, thereby always protecting the taxpayer from a tax which would destroy?

Mr. DICKINSON. Suppose we had a Government which imposed a tax that did destroy, and yet it came within the legal purview of the taxing laws?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator that I have had some experience in tax matters and in tax legislation. If there is any statement that was ever made by the Supreme Court that is wholly untrue, it is the statement that the power to tax is the power to destroy, because all other courts everywhere protect the taxpayer against the imposition of taxes which are confiscatory. There is no law better settled than that.

Mr. DICKINSON. The point here is, however, that if we give this power to the President he will have the right to levy a tax. It will not be levied by the representatives of our Government.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very true.

Mr. DICKINSON. It will be levied by the Chief Executive of this country. He can levy that tax in a way that will destroy an institution, and for it there will be no recourse.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senator is talking aside from the question of the power to tax being the power to destroy. This is not, as I view this bill, the power to tax at all, but it is the power to regulate commerce; and regardless of what the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator may think about it, nowhere has a single right been taken away from any citizen which he enjoyed under the Constitution by reason of any law that has been passed by this Congress during the present administration, or any other, so far as I know.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not concur in the judgment of the Senator from Kentucky; and in a little while I shall cite to him the powers which have been taken away from Congress and from the citizens of this country and from their representatives, and I shall detail the statutes that have done it.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator further, and I will not do so; but I reserve the right, after he shall have concluded, to take up his mistaken views about the matter and attempt to instruct him regarding it.

Mr. DICKINSON. With my high regard for the Senator from Kentucky, I assure him that I shall listen to his views with keen interest.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Referring to the astonishing statement of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] denying the statement of John Marshall that the power to tax carries with it the power to destroy, how can he reconcile his view with the actual fact that, while States can issue currency, and did so up to the Civil War, and could do so now, the Federal Government has taxed State currency 10 percent, thereby killing it? There has not been a single State currency issue since that day, and yet the State has the authority to make such issues, just as it always had. Is not that a case where the power to tax was the power to destroy? Let the Senator consider that when he comes to discuss the matter.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg to say to the Senator that I shall consider that, and I shall try at some time to explain it; but the statement made by the court has been quoted hundreds of times by able lawyers like the Senator from Iowa, and quoted in connection with tax questions, when it had no application.

The power to tax is the power to destroy where there is no protection in the courts against the taxing authorities; but in America, in this Republic of ours, the fathers who promulgated and adopted our Constitution specifically provided that that should not be done which would confiscate the property of a citizen. If the power to tax leads to the confiscation of property, the citizen has a plain, adequate remedy at law that will prevent such confiscation.

So no industry can be destroyed by taxation; and what the Senator from Ohio refers to was not an industry. It was the exercise by the Congress of a police power—not the power to tax, but a police power that was incidental to the power to tax.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I think the philosophy beneath this bill is entirely wrong, and I was amazed yesterday at the statement of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] when he said:

> Mr. President, may I answer the Senator from Louisiana? When this power was given the Republican President it was given to him for the purpose of raising the tariff duties, and we all know it. There is not any doubt about it. We all know exactly the purpose for which the power was given him. The power which is given the present President is to decrease tariff duties.

It has been my understanding all the while, it is my understanding now, that the President, under the existing law, has the right either to raise or lower tariffs, under certain machinery, and if this bill shall be enacted, he will have the right to either raise or lower tariffs. If this philosophy is the philosophy that is being carried out, and if it is the intention of this administration to work along this line, then I say it casts a greater fear over industry and business in this country than has heretofore been predicted.

In the general statement as to what has transpired under the new administration, I wish to quote, first, Virgil Jordan, who I think is one of the leading economists of the country, an economist for the Industrial Conference Board. He said:

> I regard what has occurred in the United States during the past year as perhaps the greatest catastrophe in the history of civilization, and certainly the most profound that has happened to us in America. Accidentally and unconsciously in this catastrophe much of the essential and unique virtues of the American system have been destroyed.

I wish to go a little further than that. A day or so ago Frank Kent, in the Baltimore Sun, under the heading "Ebbing of the Tide", published an article from which I wish to quote.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, referring to what the Senator said just a moment ago, what is the cause of the destruction?

Mr. DICKINSON. The type of legislation enacted, the character of program adopted, and the effect of that program upon the economic, financial, commercial, industrial, and agricultural interests of this country.

Frank Kent, in yesterday's Baltimore Sun, said:

> Within recent weeks there has been a rapidly increasing belief that he—

Referring to the President—> has started a great many unsound, unnecessary, unmanageable, and terrifically expensive things, which cannot work out. The general confusion, which in the N.R.A. has almost reached the point of demoralization, is sensed by the people. There is a hint of disintegration in the air. Through personal appeal it is possible the President may rally popular support and reassure the people that we are still "on our way." It is possible, too, the administration propaganda can keep up the illusion that criticism comes exclusively from the wicked.

> It is doubtful, however, that anything can restore the unrestrained enthusiasm of a year ago, which enabled the administration to launch its program with almost united support. Six months ago public opinion and private opinion were identical and almost entirely favorable. Today public opinion is still to a large extent supporting, but private opinion has swung the other way. This is evident, not only among business men but in Congress and within the administration itself.

Then Frank Kent goes on to cite, first, the cancelation of the air-mail contracts; second, the effort to prosecute Mellon criminally; third, the effort to commit the Senate, including such a man as the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], to a commission and stock exchange bill; and then, in the end, have a reversal of the policy.

Next he refers to the treatment of the Darrow report in the N.R.A., where it was concealed for a week or more, and its authors were accused of bad faith, and so forth. Last he names the silver question, which we have had both pro and con here all winter long; and he suggests that all this leads to uncertainty in the mind of the American citizen as to what he will be able to do on the morrow to prevent the kind of collapse which inevitably will come unless something can be started on the upgrade.

Following out the same suggestion with reference to the transferring of legislative power to the Executive, I wish to suggest that the first time that question was brought up under the present administration was in the inaugural address. I shall now quote from the address of President Roosevelt, delivered at the time of his inauguration, when he said, as appears on page 4:

> But in the event that the Congress shall fail to take one of these two courses, and in the event that the national emergency is still critical, I shall not evade the clear course of duty that will then confront me. I shall ask the Congress for the one remaining instrument to meet the crisis—broad Executive power to wage a war against the emergency, as great as the power that would be given to me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe.

Let me suggest that no legislation was ever asked that was refused, and no proposed legislation was ever sent to the Congress that did not have embodied in it a request for the transfer of legislative power; and, of course, I refer to major pieces of legislation.

We started with the Economy Act, wherein we gave all the power to the President to fix pensions, undoing legislation which had been on the statute books for 75 years.

Then we took up the other measures, all of which implied the transfer of legislative power to the Executive.

If the Executive were carrying out the platform on which he was elected, I would not feel so bad; but I find that he is not carrying out the platform upon which he was elected, and therefore it is essential for us to know whether or not there is a tendency toward a dictatorship or an Executive assumption of power that was not intended by the electorate when they voted for the present incumbent.

First let us take the Industrial Recovery Act. It is stated in section 1:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce which tends to diminish the amount thereof; and to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups, to induce and maintain united action by labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision, to eliminate unfair competitive practices, to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries, to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required).
> * * * * * * *
> To effectuate the policy of this title, the President is hereby authorized to establish such agencies—

And so forth. That is the basis of the Executive orders which have made up the industrial recovery administration.

Let us go a little further: Who was there in the Senate or in the House of Representatives who expected, when the National Recovery Act was passed, that we were going to have 75 or a lesser number—I have forgotten; the last time I counted the number was somewhere around 45—new bureaus, of different kinds, various councils and boards, all for the purpose of doing a particular thing, and most of them for the purpose of interfering with private business? Yet they grew up under the National Recovery Act, purely under the authority conveyed to the President by that legislation.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Hoover administration was very much criticized for the boards brought into existence by it, was it not?

Mr. DICKINSON. The Democratic Party made an issue in the campaign the fact that there were useless bureaus which should be eliminated, and that Government expenditures should be curtailed.

Mr. HATFIELD. Does the Senator know the number of additional bureaus in this administration over the number in the Hoover administration?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is my understanding that it is somewhere around 40; some have put the number as high as 60, but I do not know of anyone who can make an accurate inventory. I understand that the last one was named to give out information along that line, a man by the name of Walker, resigned because he could not keep up with the procession.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, any figure given today would be out of date tomorrow.

Mr. DICKINSON. It would be out of date tomorrow because if something happens, another professor is called in, another million dollars is allocated, and a new bureau is set up.

Mr. HATFIELD. Does the Senator happen to know the number of laboring people out of employment at the beginning of the present administration?

Mr. DICKINSON. My recollection is that it was somewhere around ten million.

Mr. HATFIELD. Does the Senator know how many are out of employment now?

Mr. DICKINSON. The last report, as I recall, showed that 10,800,000 were out of employment.

Mr. HATFIELD. And that, notwithstanding all the power that has been given by Congress to the Executive?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; notwithstanding all the power that has been given by the Congress, and notwithstanding the expenditure of some five or six billion dollars of borrowed money, at the expense of the people of the United States.

Mr. HATFIELD. The borrowed money to which the Senator has reference comes from the Tresaury of the United States and must be repaid by the taxpayers some day?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; they must foot the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. But what would the Senator say as to the amount of money that has been collected from the industries to carry on the National Industrial Recovery Act?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have some data with reference to the trucking code. It was estimated that over $3,000,000 was collected from the trade to pay the expense of the board of managers for that one code alone; and it has been estimated that if we could get together all the codes and show the expenses that are levied on the various business enterprises of this country, it would run up to a half billion dollars a year.

Mr. HATFIELD. I think the Senator underestimates the amount, Mr. President. For instance, in the bituminous-coal industry, which is a very large one, some groups of that industry pay 2 percent; other groups pay 5 percent; others pay 3 percent. I think the Senator from Iowa would be well within a safe estimate to put the figure at least at $1,000,000,000 a year. None of these collections are made upon the basis that the amounts have been paid. They are simply requests for a contribution over a certain period of time—say, 1 month or 3 months—with the books left open to make additional collections if it becomes necessary in the estimation of those who are responsible for the administration of the act.

Mr. DICKINSON. As a matter of fact, they are simply direct levies on all business.

Mr. HATFIELD. Absolutely.

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand that in the automobile business every retailer is charged 0.1 of 1 percent on the total amount of his sales. If he sells a car for $1,000, 0.1 of 1 percent, or $10, goes to the code authorities to maintain their existence.

I think the vicious feature is the fact that we know of specific instances where certain assistant directors who have been working in the N.R.A. have been taken out of their particular positions and put in charge of code authorities, and given very large salaries. That situation ought to be investigated by the N.R.A., or by a Senate committee, or by someone, so as to find out how much the poor public is being imposed upon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator understands that all these items go into the cost of production.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes; but the consumer pays the bill. There is no question about it. He is the victim in all these enterprises.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator is aware of the fact that the prices paid today for commodities, for instance, of the staple industries such as the coal business and, possibly, the automobile business, are higher than at any time since the war.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; and on top of that, competition has absolutely ceased. For instance, I heard of a situation where 400,000 barrels of cement were being contracted for. There were four or five or six companies bidding, and every one of them bid exactly the same price to a nickel.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, is it not a fact that those who are operating under the codes are penalized if they dare to sell for one cent less than the price prescribed under the code by the code authorities?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is absolutely true; and it is a part of the whole machinery.

Mr. HATFIELD. And the penalty is $500 fine, with 6 months in jail, and each individual day of offense is an individual crime.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator will not overlook the fact that the increase of the price of commodities is the major purpose of the present administration, on the ground that prices have become too low, and that there can be no prosperity without an increase in prices; so the administration has started on an artificial method of insuring increased prices. The danger is that there is no control over the increases, and after a while there will be a cry that prices are too high instead of being too low.

Mr. DICKINSON. The new slogan is going to be to reduce the cost of living, and the consumer is the one who will have to be protected.

Let me proceed a little further on the subject of the delegation of legislative power.

We find in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, title III, section 43, that—

> The President is authorized, in his discretion to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into agreements with the several Federal Reserve banks and with the Federal Reserve Board whereby the Federal Reserve Board will * * * purchase directly and hold in portfolio, for an agreed period or periods of time, Treasury bills or other obligations of the United States Government in an aggregate sum of $3,000,000,000.

We find this delegation of power in practically every piece of legislation we have been passing.

What will be the next thing? The President will ask to have executive authority to authorize and direct the purchase of silver, and to maintain its value at a certain ratio. That is the new silver bill which is coming before the Senate.

The next bill that is coming in is the one from the Committee on Mines and Mining, which has to do with absolutely putting the coal business and the price of coal in the hands of the President to direct and fix the prices all along the line.

I wonder how much further we have to go, and whether or not we are going to Hitlerize this Government by saying that Congress is not capable of performing its functions any more, that it ought to turn everything over to the Executive, and go home and give him a drawing account on the Public Treasury to see how much he can spend.

Next, we have an innocent statement with regard to amendments to the A.A.A., which is the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Every time I suggest anything against the grant of authority now proposed I am asked, "How did you vote on the Agricultural Adjustment Act?" I will say that I voted for it, and I voted in favor of it for only one reason, which was my hope that under part 2 we might be able to readjust farm mortgages and make an adjustment of the credit of the farmers of this country to their benefit. I do not find that we have made as much progress as should have been made, and I do not know that I was justified in voting for that law on account of that provision. I do say, however, that under the Agricultural Adjustment Act we put the authority in the Secretary of Agriculture and not in the President. Now we find that a new bill is brought in under which the food processors are to be licensed. It is now on the calendar. I hope the Senate will be able to arouse itself to the point where it will at least stand up and determine the question as to whether it is going to transfer all its powers to the administration at its request.

Let me suggest further that the most vicious example of the transfer of authority of which I have spoken is found in the pending tariff bill. We have not had any piece of legislation which transferred so much direct control over the private interests of the people of this country as does the alleged tariff bill which is now before us for consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has been referring to delegations of power to specific and identified authorities. That is bad enough; but it is infinitely worse to find power delegated to unidentified administration agencies which were never contemplated at the time of transfer.

If the Senator will permit me to make a comment in his time which is particularly pertinent in connection with the pending bill, it appears that there is a so-called "executive-policy committee." It further appears that this committee is serving without congressional authority as a sort of super-tariff commission, receiving from the Tariff Commission reports of investigations under the flexible-tariff laws and under section 3 of the N.R.A., and determining what disposition is to be made of them and what action is to be taken on them. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Iowa ever before heard of the executive-policy committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. I never heard of it before.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is at the moment one of the most powerful agencies at work in respect to the policies of the Government. Inasmuch as the pending bill contemplates a certain grudging allowance of hearings before the final sentence of death is passed by the President upon the industries which are marked for slaughter, I take it as a matter of reasonable deduction that it will be this executive-policy committee which will be called in under this further delegation of power to pass upon these tariff questions. So that the country and its industries and its agriculture may have some casual understanding of who it is who is to be its supreme court in this aspect, I should like to state for the RECORD that this executive-policy committee consists of the following gentlemen:

Mr. Francis B. Sayre, chairman, representing the State Department.

Mr. M. S. Eccles, representing the Treasury Department.

Mr. Jacob Viner, representing the Treasury Department.

Mr. John Dickinson, representing the Commerce Department.

Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell, representing the Agricultural Department. I am sure that name is familiar to the Senator.

Mr. H. R. Tolley and Mr. L. R. Edminster, representing the A.A.A.

Mr. Oscar B. Ryder, representing the N.R.A.

Mr. Robet L. O'Brien, representing the Tariff Commission—the same Mr. O'Brien who testified that he would be glad to do anything the President wanted him to do.

Mr. DICKINSON. Whether he thought it was right or not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With respect to the administration of the tariff law, regardless of the obligation of the law itself.

Mr. Thomas Walker Page, of the Tariff Commission, and Mr. George N. Peek, who is now running the export and import bank.

These are the members of the executive-policy committee, existing without warrant of law, exercising powers unidentified in any statute, and, so far as I can deduce, the probable outfit which will have the economic life and death of America in its hands after we shall have concluded this final delegation of power upon which we are now embarked.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the Senator for the contribution. I had not heard of that, and the personnel is intensely interesting, in view of the fact that apparently everyone whose name is on the list is connected with, or is at least an applicant, for membership in the "brain trust."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I entered the Chamber a little bit late. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how many were named by the Senator from Michigan in this list of superficial council?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There are 11 names on the list.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, there is one name on there that is of considerable interest—Francis Bowes Sayre—who has been sitting here beside the Chairman of the Finance Committee on the floor of the Senate, and who, I understand, is the one who has been collecting most of the data and doing most of the work, and who undoubtedly will have a great deal to do with the State Department policy under this bill if it shall be passed.

I thought I should like to find out who he was, and so I consulted Who's Who in America. Of course, I knew that he was Woodrow Wilson's son-in-law, and a very estimable gentleman, but I wanted to know something about his experience, because, Mr. President, I say to you that the State of Iowa is interested in the agricultural schedules, and we know that if we cannot have the agricultural schedules exempted from the operations of this bill, those who will be in charge of the administration of this measure will be in a position to ruin the dairy interests of Iowa, the beef interests of Iowa, and the poultry interests of Iowa.

I find that Mr. Francis Bowes Sayre was born April 30, 1885; that he graduated from various institutions. Who's Who goes on to tell about him as follows:

Deputy assistant district attorney, New York County, N.Y., 1912–13; assistant to president of Williams College and instructor in government in the college, 1914–17; Thayer teaching fellow, Harvard Law School, 1917–18; assistant professor law, Harvard University, 1919–24, professor since 1924; lecturer, University of Southern California, summer session, 1923; leave of absence, 1923–25; director, Harvard Institute Criminal Law, 1929; trustee, Massachusetts State training schools, with supervision of juvenile delinquents of State, since 1932.

Here is a feature of the statement in Who's Who, which I should like to have the Senate note:

Adviser in foreign affairs to Siamese Government, 1923–25; appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Siam, 1925; juris consult to ministry of foreign affairs, Siamese Government, since 1925; negotiated on behalf of Siam new political and commercial treaties with France, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, and Sweden, 1925; Norway and Italy, 1926; abolishing extra territoriality in Siam; also treaty of arbitration with Great Britain, 1925. Created Phya Kalyan Maitri by the King of Siam, 1924—

I do not know what that is, but presume it is some kind of recognition or honor—

awarded the Grand Cross of Crown of Siam, 1924; Grand Cross of White Elephant (Siam), 1925; Grand Officer Order of Orange-Nassau (Netherlands), 1925; Knight Grand Commander, Chula Chom Klao (Siam), 1926; Commander Order of the Dannelbrog, first class (Denmark), 1926; Grand Cross Royal Order of Isabel la Catolica (Spain), 1926; Grand Cross of Order of Christ (Portugal), 1926; Commander Order of Saint Olav, first-class (Norway), 1927—

Of course, I do not know what he would do if it were third-class, but " first-class " seems to be all right—

Grand Cross Order of Crown of Italy, 1927; Grand Officer de la Legion d'Honneur (France), 1929. Y.M.C.A. work, Mexican border, summer 1916.

Of course, he might get down to earth on the Mexican border; but he would not have much chance of getting down to the economic questions of this country while he was around gathering up decorations from the King of Siam, and so forth, and so on.

The point I want to impress upon the Senator is that this man is going to be sitting in a controlling position, as I shall show by his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In view of the disclosure respecting this executive-policy committee, I wonder if the Senator would not agree that it would be quite appropriate for the Senate to inquire by resolution just what this instrumentality is, and why it is, and what its powers are?

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to see the Senator from Michigan sponsor such a resolution, and, in case he does not want to do so, I should like to sponsor one myself, because I think it would be well worth while.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Michigan in reading the roster mentioned Mr. Tugwell's name, did he not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. Of course, that is not any novelty, because the Senator will find his name on any important document of this particular dispensation.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I have a bit of information here which I think will throw light on the background of what is going on at the White House, so far as Mr. Tugwell is concerned.

Mr. DICKINSON. I should be glad to have the information put in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. FESS. I hold in my hand a volume containing the issues of the American Economic Review for 1932 with the supplement, printed in March 1932, containing the " papers and proceedings of the forty-fourth annual meeting of the American Economic Association." That meeting was addressed, among others, by Dr. Tugwell. His address is on the Principle of Planning and Laissez Faire. From page 88 of this volume I read this statement, which I think all Senators, as well as the country, will be very glad to have, because it evidently is the explanation of what is going on, so far as Mr. Tugwell is concerned. Speaking of our present economic system, and indicating that there must be a change, he makes this statement:

The setting up of even an emasculated and ineffective central co-ordinating body in Washington will form a focus about which recognition may gradually gather.

He then indicates the changes that must be effected.

The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with constitutions, and with government.

Remember that he has in mind a change in the Constitution.

Mr. DICKINSON. In other words, that goes to the very fundamentals of government as laid down by the forefathers.

Mr. FESS. Precisely. I quote further from Dr. Tugwell:

The intention of eighteenth and nineteenth century law was to install and protect the principle of conflict; this, if we begin to plan, we shall be changing once for all, and it will require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police power for enforcement.

Read that in the light of the A.A.A. as well as the N.R.A.

We shall also have to give up a distinction of great consequence, and very dear to many a legalistic heart, but economically quite absurd, between private and public or quasi-public employments. There is no private business, if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest.

I want the Senator especially to notice this next statement:

Furthermore, we shall have to progress sufficiently far in elementary realism to recognize that only the Federal area, and often not even that, is large enough to be coextensive with modern industry, and that consequently the States are wholly ineffective instruments for control. All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea.

I should like to have the Senator also notice the third statement here:

The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear.

What does that mean?

Mr. DICKINSON. I should say that if he shall be on this tariff advisory council it would mean that business will disappear.

Mr. FESS. And he further goes on to say:

This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant. The essence of business is its free venture for profits in an unregulated economy.

This is the statement of the keyman in this administration along the line of reforms that are going on down here. Why should anybody be surprised at what is going on, in view of such statements as to fundamentals?

Mr. DICKINSON. And let it also be remembered that in the statement I made on the floor of the Senate sometime since I quoted from a textbook written by Mr. Tugwell, in which he said that national planning means the final ownership and acquirement of all property in the United States.

This simply indicates the trend of the day. I am going to give just a few more illustrations before I leave this particular phase of the subject.

Many of the administration's legislative measures have met with the criticism that they are unconstitutional; that they are destructive of traditional individual liberties; or that they contain fascistic, socialistic, or communistic implications incompatible with fundamental American political doctrines. That is exactly the point made by the Senator from Ohio.

In defense the rejoinder has usually been not a categorical denial, but, rather, arguments justifying extraordinary temporary measures designed to meet an emergency which is claimed to be as destructive to humanity as war. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] only a few days since replied to such arguments by making the unanswerable comment that no emergency ever added an additional power to the Constitution of the United States, and yet most of these new measures and new ideas are being presented solely on the ground that they are designed to meet an emergency. Indeed, the subterfuge of inserting an emergency clause into the preamble of bills in order to improve their chances of being sustained in the courts has become such an accepted practice that Secretary Wallace casually suggested such a procedure in amending the Bankhead bill for compulsory cotton control, although the legislation is obviously a far-reaching experiment which might be applied to all basic agricultural commodities and thus by its nature is likely to become a permanent measure.

It is becoming increasingly apparent that many of the laws enacted by the Seventy-third Congress, or likely soon to be enacted with administration sanction, are intended by their proponents to be made permanent law, or to be extended for continuing periods on what is apparently the assumption of a future state of perpetual emergency.

Let me suggest that I did not refer to the transfer to the Executive of the right to handle the finances of the country, to debase the dollar, making it as many grains of gold as he thought suited his fancy; in other words, playing the finances of the country to the point where he thought it would be of advantage in negotiating with the rest of the world in an effort to raise prices.

Let me quote from a Frank Kent article of April 20, in which he said:

With no one grasping their full implications, a series of great regulatory schemes, not one of which had been thought through, going in different directions and some sharply clashing with others, was launched with bewildering rapidity. Men who disbelieved or doubted were overwhelmed. It was unpatriotic to criticize. Criticism as a constructive alternative was deemed wicked.

That is just what we have been talking about in connection with the N.R.A.; that is, that whenever we criticize we are supposed to be doing something that is unpatriotic. In my judgment, the most patriotic citizen we have had has been the citizen who could point his finger at the defects of the program and show the reasons why it would not bring about the benefits which were expected in the social and economic order of the day.

Mr. Kent continued:

Criticism as a constructive alternative was deemed wicked. Those who raised their voices in protest were denounced as tories or tom-tom beaters. Enchanted, the people watched the Presidential juggler as he threw the glittering balls in the air, persuaded that the show would go on forever and a way had been found to suspend the great natural law that what goes up must come down.

I wish to go just a little further and refer to two or three other phases of the matter. Here is the comment of Norman Thomas, the Socialist. Norman Thomas received only 800,000 votes on the Socialist platform in the 1932 campaign. Yet it was found, when the twenty-odd million people who voted for Roosevelt had placed him in authority, instead of carrying out the program which was outlined in the Democratic platform, he carried out practically all the provisions of the Socialist platform. This is what Norman Thomas said with reference to the new deal:

Those who want to undo the revolution to State capitalism through which we are now going may cause trouble, but they cannot go back. The great significance of the new deal, and the N.R.A. in particular, lies in the social forces it has unloosed and put into play. How they are to be used, whether for fascism or socialism, rests largely with the workers. By now it is absolutely evident that without effective organization of the workers involved, the new deal is bound to become the instrument of a slave state.

In other words, he says we are going to have State socialism. That is the comment of Norman Thomas on the new deal.

David Lawrence, under date of April 1, 1934, made this statement:

Certain phrases were inserted in the preamble of existing law as a substitute, namely, to give the lower courts a chance to uphold the alleged constitutionality of measures which were sought as a means of regimenting the American people under a system entirely alien to American traditions.

I want to refer for just a moment to dictatorship.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. My office has just sent me a copy of a telegram which I did not notice before I left there this morning, which shows the effect the pendency of the tariff bill is having. This is from——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator has not secured unanimous consent to read the telegram or to place it in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. I do not have to have unanimous consent to read the telegram. The Senator will not object, will he?

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly shall not object, but if the Senator is going to place the telegram in the RECORD he ought to get unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, it is not necessary for the Senator from Louisiana to have unanimous consent to read the telegram. He may read it in his own time without having unanimous consent. He would have to have unanimous consent if he wanted to print it in the RECORD without reading; but as I understand, he wants to read it. I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. LONG. The telegram is from Deridder, La. That is in the cut-over region of the State of Louisiana, where the pine timber has been cut off for many miles to the north, south, east, and west. It is a large sheep-raising section of the State. Considerable wool is grown there. The fact is, we have a climate much better than the West and North for woolgrowing, and we are raising many sheep down there. This is a telegram from a gentleman at Deridder. I do not remember whether I know him personally, because the name is not an uncommon name. His telegram reads:

Senator HUEY P. LONG:

The discussion in Congress of the tariff on wool is creating a disastrous effect on the sale of wool. Will appreciate knowing what is going to be done with this bill. It is holding up mills, which will not buy our wool. Please use your best efforts in settling this matter to the best interests of the wool growers.

F. L. MILLER,
President Southwest Woolgrowers' Association.

This is typical of what we may expect under the operation of the bill. The reason is that every day we are debating this matter the wool grower does not know but what the President is going to be empowered to throw the entire tariff barriers down and permit the free entry of wool into the United States. As a result wool sales are declining. The farmers who have nothing except the sale of wool from which to make their living are faced with the fact that the mills dare not buy their wool because very likely there will be provision made, or there can be provision made under the terms of the bill, which would mean that foreign wool could be brought here for perhaps one third the price of American-grown wool.

The situation is further aggravated by this fact: I understand from reliable sources that while there has been no particular definite commitment made in writing here, there has been a general rumor or general assurance of some kind given that wool is to be left out of the program. But what is that assurance worth? It is not worth anything. We have had the promise of the Democratic Party and the President of the United States against this kind of thing anyway. If we could not accept their promise in one instance, what is the use of having some other promise from them? Therefore the wool market is just going to pot, and the farmers are left with no sale for their wool.

I understand, if the Senator from Wyoming will pardon me for infringing further on his time, that the Colombian Treaty, which was going to be sent to us today, or rather, which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said there was no objection to sending here, will not be sent; that the Department of State officials have now decided that it is not a good thing to send the treaty to the Senate.

I understand, and I can state as a fact, not at second hand, because I know it to be a fact, that the State Department has today said, or late yesterday said and reaffirmed it today, that it would be against the public interest for the Senate to know what is contained in this treaty that has been made with Colombia.

I am glad my friend from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has come into the Chamber. I will ask the clerk to send back to me that telegram, because I want the Senator from Wyoming to have an opportunity to read the telegram I have just sent to the desk. I find, however, that I have a copy here. I will ask to have this copy handed to the Senator from Wyoming.

What I was saying, Mr. President, is that this matter is getting to be surcharged with an air of mystery which perplexes even the State Department itself. It does not know how far it can trust the United States Senate, not only to act, but the State Department does not know how far it can trust the Senate to know. In other words, we have gotten to be a very, very strange body. The State Department on yesterday, so the Senator from Mississippi said to us, decided that it would not hurt anything to let the Senate know what it was planning to do in connection with the Colombian treaty. This morning, after thinking the matter over a little while, I am informed that the State Department said, "Well, now, on second thought, it is not going to be a good thing for the Senate to know too much about this treaty, so we are not going to send it to the Senate." As a matter of fact, I know of my own knowledge that the State Department has decided not to send the treaty to us.

That is the condition we are up against. The bureaucrats in the little Department up there, headed by a man who said before the American people and before Congress that the kind of legislation that is now being enacted into law was iniquitous, unjustifiable, and in no way to be considered proper, have made a treaty with the Republic of Colombia, and are undertaking to make more treaties of a similar character which are to become law as a result of the passage of the pending bill, and they will not let us know what kind of a treaty they signed because, if they do, it will not be in the public interest. In other words, the condition is soon going to be that the State Department and other bureaucrats will regard the United States Senate as a dangerous menagerie, and that they will not dare allow the fruits of their brain power and of their negotiating opportunities to be subjected to surveillance by the United States Senate at all.

That is what we are up against today. After all the assurances given here only yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi that there is no reason why we could not have this treaty that we will ratify if we pass this bill, the bureaucrats of the State Department are going to tell us now that they cannot send the treaty to us because it is not in the public interest for the United States Senate to see it; and away back in the interior the poor farmers of Louisiana and of the West are crying aloud that they have no market for their wool, they are losing the market for their products, because a bill of this kind is pending here.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to state that wool in Wyoming was bringing very fair prices until this tariff bill was discussed. The last clip of wool before that time was sold for 33 cents. There has been only one clip of wool sold in the State during the past 90 days, and that was sold at 22¼ cents, a decrease in price of 30 percent, due to the fear of this tariff bill.

Mr. LONG. That is just exactly what is happening down in Louisiana, only we cannot sell ours at all. We cannot sell it even at a 33-percent reduction. Nobody will buy it.

Mr. CAREY. There has been only one clip sold in the State.

Mr. LONG. In the State of Wyoming?

Mr. CAREY. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Wyoming is better off than Louisiana is, according to the telegram which I have handed to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], according to which, as I read it here a few moments ago, the farmers down there cannot sell their wool at all. As a matter of fact, that is a reasonable view to take of the subject. If I were in the mill business I would not buy any wool. While I represent the woolgrower and the farmer who has sheep that he has to shear if he is to live, yet at the same time I can see the viewpoint of the wool buyer.

Whose word are we going to take? Are we going to let a law be put on the statute books that will make it possible for the dealers in Argentina and South America and Australia and the other wool-growing countries to send wool in here for 7 and 8 and 10 cents a pound, and when a man has bought wool at 20 and 25 cents a pound, have him at a disadvantage of perhaps 75 percent on the raw material, as against a competitor who is waiting to take advantage of one of these trade agreements? How do we know that this Colombia trade agreement has not some wool in it? For all I know, it has. I do not know what is in it; and the bureaucrats of the State Department are negotiating half a dozen more of these trade agreements or treaties. I am told, and I know this to be reliable, that the State Department says it is in the act of negotiating another bunch of these treaties, and that it would not be a good thing to let the Senate know what is going on right now, because the Department has to complete some more of these things.

In other words, this whole fiasco of taking a dagger and putting it within easy reach of every industry's throat, this system by which tomorrow morning the business man of this country is liable to meet some kind of a reciprocity that will dash to the ground the hopes of his business, whether it has to do with wool or apples or tropical fruits or anything of the kind, is what we have to consider today. If this mere threat, the mere fact that this bill is liable to be passed, has this disastrous effect on the market, what will it mean when we actually pass the bill, Mr. President, and the power is there every morning and every night to put into effect some treaty by which America will be put out of business in some line of endeavor?

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Iowa. I want to make just one more little reference, and then I shall be through for this time.

Lately I have been reading another article. It is from Mr. Machado, the deposed President of the Republic of Cuba. Mr. Machado says that the trouble in Cuba today is that the tariff wall is preventing them from bringing Cuban sugar into the United States at a price low enough to permit Cuba to restore its own agriculture. That is his statement. I know as a matter of fact—this I have to rely upon no one to tell me; I know it of my own knowledge—that every effort on earth is being made to tear down the walls protecting the beet-sugar industry and the cane-sugar industry of the United States by bringing Cuban sugar in here almost on a free-trade basis, if it can be done that cheaply. When we pass this bill it will be possible for the Tariff Commission to take the 1½-cent tariff we have left—because we have already taken off one half cent of it—and reduce it to three fourths of a cent on the 50-percent authority the Commission has, and then, under one of these reciprocal tariffs that may be made with Cuba, 50 percent more may be taken off, and it will bring the tariff on sugar down to a point where we will have a duty of 0.37 of a cent instead of the 2-cent duty which is necessary to maintain this business.

We are liable to wake up some morning to find that the entire investment that all the farmers of Louisiana have made and all the beet farmers of the West have made has been wiped out. Every one of them is liable to wake up some morning—and will do so, if the interests behind this bill have their way about the matter—and find all the beet and sugarcane farmers of this country in the same predicament that the wool growers are in today. In fact, the condition is going to be even worse for the wool growers, and it is going to be worse for the cane growers; and what is the use of an assurance?

Someone may go out and get a letter from somebody saying that he is not going to apply this proposed law to a certain industry; that this pickle is in the soak for somebody else. In other words, every man is being told that his industry will not be hurt; that this law will be applied against the other man. Everybody is being told, "Now, do not worry; we are not going to bother you. It is somebody else who will get the knife." But what is the use of going out and getting letters from them when I have in my hand the declarations of the Democratic Party in their platform, and the pronouncements of the Secretary of State, and the pledge of the President of the United States that the Democratic Party, if intrusted with power, would not enact any such law as this, but, on the contrary, that they would repeal the flexible provision of the tariff, which lodged in the hands of any one man the authority to change the tariff of the United States?

I thank the Senator from Iowa for yielding to me. If anyone can give us any courage, if anyone can give us any balm, if there is any balm of Gilead anywhere for the farmers of this country who are being afflicted by this kind of a threat today, I certainly hope it will come out soon, because telegrams of desperation such as I have sent to the desk, showing the hundreds of thousands of people who are being deprived of their means of livelihood by such matters as the proposal now before the Senate, are everything except what should be desired by a Government that is trying to restore prosperity to its suffering people.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, it is my contention that this tariff bill to encourage foreign trade will be just as ineffective as the N.R.A. has been in relieving economic conditions. In other words, it embodies a theory which will not work; and it will simply lead to one more disappointment, because the people who are expected to get relief from the proposed legislation will not be able to receive any relief.

Mr. President, among the commodities in the export of which there has been a material decrease we find numerous agricultural products. One of the reasons presented for this type of bill is the fact that power must be granted so that the Government may act quickly. I am going to quote from the pamphlet America Must Choose, as follows:

Our Government today is at an almost hopeless disadvantage in its efforts to restore that measure of foreign trade which we must have if our prosperity is to return. A general revision of our tariff laws by Congress, which has been the ordinary method of our making, would be entirely ineffective to meet the situation which exists today. Anyone who has witnessed the course which such a congressional revision follows would appreciate that. It would be far too slow.

That is from Secretary Wallace's book, America Must Choose.

I turn to the next page and read this:

And those thoughtful Republicans who agree with him—

Having reference to Mr. Secretary Wallace—that even though the President does get the tariff powers requested in the bill now before the Senate, it will probably take several years of the most careful negotiating before a sufficient volume of foreign purchasing power will be restored to enable our export American agriculture to proceed again in normal fashion without governmental help for readjustment—

And so forth.

In other words, we find on one page of America Must Choose that revision by Congress is too slow. On another page we find the prophecy that it will take a number of years before we will be able to get any material benefits from the very machinery he is proposing to set up as a substitute for the existing tariff-making power.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield, I am afraid he did not notice it, but on the floor of the Senate yesterday the leaders on this side of the Chamber announced that the purpose of the bill was to reduce tariffs. In other words, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], in the presence of our Democratic leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], stated that the purpose of the bill was to make a reduction in the tariffs. In other words, there is no folderol about it; this is a bill, he says, for the purpose of reducing the tariff, and that is not disputed.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, further to carry out the machinery by which this tariff bill is to be operated, I want to quote from Mr. Sayre, the gentleman who has been honored with so many splendid decorations by the King of Siam. I do not remember just where Siam is, but it is around somewhere. What does Mr. Sayre say? I quote from page 344 of the hearings before the House committee on House bill 8430. He said:

Mr. SAYRE. I do not think you are being asked to take anything on faith. You have, many of you, been pressing the question again and again: What specific individual trades would I make, and with what countries? My reply to that, sir, is that it is utterly impossible to answer that question at this time for two reasons. First, the answer will depend upon a very careful and comprehensive and deep study of the whole picture of production in this country and of international trade. There is a vast mass of material gathered and being tabulated from time to time by the Department of Commerce, by the Tariff Commission, by the Department of State, by various Government agencies—excellent material.

If this bill passes, as I trust and believe it will, it will be the work of a group of men studying intensively and working to collect and focus that data, to ascertain the various points in which trades might be possible, to find out whether those trades would unduly work injury to American business or American interests, to learn what the economic effects would be; to map out some kind of a comprehensive, cohesive, Nation-wide program from the national viewpoint.

When we get a group of " brain trusters ", such as are listed as members of the executive-policy committee and the Tariff Commission working together, I wonder how quickly they will be able to reach an agreement and say that the tariff ought to be raised or lowered on any commodity. I suggest that I would rather trust Congress getting it through before a business man was strangled to death, rather than wait for a research investigation, an agreement by the various economic forces in the various bureaus, submission of the whole matter to the executive-policy committee of the Tariff Commission, approval by the Tariff Commission, and then finally its O.K. by the Executive of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this executive-policy committee is not related to the Tariff Commission; it is a White House appendage.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes; it is to be the adviser of the Chief Executive, and not of the Tariff Commission. I thank the Senator from Michigan for the correction.

As a matter of fact, if we want aid in tariff-making, I should like to know how we are going to get it by working out that type of logarithm. It is almost equal to Mordecai Ezekiel's equation on hog logarithms which the Senator from Michigan presented on the floor of the Senate one day. We are simply getting into confusion worse confounded when we adopt a policy of this kind.

It is said they are going to do this in order to protect agicultural products, because we have a surplus of certain agricultural products. The trouble we have, then, is simply this, that the great majority of the countries with whom we want to trade export agricultural products. If we are to trade with Canada, what does Canada want to sell us? Wheat and livestock. The wheat growers of North Dakota do not want any Canadian wheat brought in. The livestock growers of the Northwest and the cattle feeders of Iowa do not want any livestock imported into the United States. They prefer to increase their own production in order to come as near meeting domestic demands as possible.

What do we find as to South America? Practically every country down there has one of two privileges. Either they have a product for export which is imported into the United States, and is admitted free of duty under the existing law, or they want to export a product which is competitive with a surplus-production commodity of this country. Only a year or two ago, one could go into practically any store, particularly the chain store in the Middle West, and buy Libby's canned meat, canned in Paraguay, and Uraguay, and Brazil, and other countries in South America. That foreign meat was being sold right in the Middle West, where we produce the greatest supply of meat products in the United States.

It is said, " If you do not do this, there is no way of meeting this problem." I wish to make this suggestion, that there has not been a single agricultural-relief measure presented here in the last 12 years which has not been based upon the protective-tariff system. The first export-debenture plan was absolutely dependent upon a productive-tariff system. The McNary-Haugen bill was absolutely dependent upon a protective-tariff system. The present N.R.A. is absolutely dependent upon the protective-tariff system. The A.A.A. is absolutely dependent upon the protective-tariff system. In my judgment, it is cropping out on the other side of the aisle all the while that the main motive in pressing the pending legislation is not an adjustment of tariffs, but the lowering of tariffs. Let us see what happens with reference to exports from the United States.

I hold in my hand a map produced by the American Manufacturing Export Association of New York. I think they are wrong in their purpose in presenting it, but it contains some interesting figures. I want to show some of the reductions in the exports of various commodities from the various States of the Union, and I will start in with Iowa, because that is pretty dear to my heart.

In 1929 the value of exports from Iowa was $37,000,000. In 1932 the value was $9,000,000. The principal exports are lard, meat products, oatmeal, corn sirup, vegetables, and food products.

Next, I take North Dakota. In 1929 the exports amounted to $9,000,000. In 1932 the exports amounted to $2,000,000. The principal exports are radio apparatus, lard, nonmetallic minerals, vegetable products, and animal products.

Michigan: 1929 exports, $355,000,000. 1932, $48,000,000. Principal exports are automobiles, automobile parts, trucks, metal-working and industrial machinery, accounting machinery, medicine and pharmaceutical preparations, and coke.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is interesting at that point to observe that the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce testifies that automobile exports increased 100 percent in the first quarter of this year, indicating that export expansion is entirely possible without trading away our birthright.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is a very good suggestion. I thank the Senator.

I simply desire to indicate that the trade of the world is being carried on according to the need for given commodities. People are buying the things they actually need. Their first purchase is their prime necessity. It is the things they can do without which they are not buying.

Why does this tabulation from which I have read present the year 1929? Because that was the year of overexpanded exports. It was the year when we were loaning money. We can increase our exports now if we will but finance the people who want to buy. That was the reason why we had the great expansion of exports in 1929.

We all know now that we would have been much better off had we not expanded our exports and had we not loaned a great deal of money in foreign countries; but we adopted the course of lending them the money, we took their securities for the loans, and now we find that we may not be able to collect much of the money that was loaned for business purposes.

We come next to the State of Louisiana. In 1929 the exports were $221,000,000. In 1932 the exports were $81,000,000. Principal exports: Cotton, petroleum, lumber, rice, and lard.

The State of Oregon: In 1929 its exports amounted to $70,000,000. In 1932 they were $16,000,000. Principal exports: Wheat, flour, apples, dried fruit, lumber, and hops. We will use more of the hops at home from this time on, I understand.

New York: In 1929 the total exports were $957,000,000. In 1932 the exports were $248,000,000. Principal exports: Textiles, automobiles and parts, undressed furs, flour, books, maps, printed matter.

Delaware: In 1929 the exports were $6,000,000. In 1932 the exports were $2,000,000. Principal exports: Leather, vulcanized fiber, chemicals, aircraft, cotton cloth, and so forth.

Now I want to come to the oil area and consider Oklahoma. The exports from Oklahoma in 1929 were $35,000,000. In 1932 the exports were $8,000,000. Principal exports: Petroleum, cotton, wheat, flour, paraffin wax, milk, and cream.

That gives the Senate some idea of the general relativity of the exports from the various States of the Union and their respective interests in the question of exports.

What I have in mind is that most of the States I have mentioned will not materially benefit by the proposed bargaining. Why? Because we find that when the bargaining power is exercised, the thing we have to sacrifice is something which either is not subject to an import duty at the present time or which will procure no advantage so far as trade negotiations are concerned with the country which wants us to import a similar commodity into this country.

Agriculture will be particularly at a disadvantage. I desire to recall to the Senate the experience we had under what are known as the old "Kasson Treaties", which I believe were negotiated about the time of the McKinley administration. After negotiating for a long time, what was done? Treaties involving four commodities came before the Senate; and what were those commodities? Sugar, molasses, hides, and wool—every one of them an agricultural product. Why? Because then, as now, the people who are most desirous of trading with the United States are people who produce a surplus of agricultural or raw products. Therefore, what we are doing here is setting up a bargaining agency which has to meet a competing agency in twenty-odd countries in the world producing the things of which we produce a surplus, and therefore we have a chance of 20 to 1 of holding our own against those agencies.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to be absolutely correct—and I know he does—I have in my hand a document giving the precise dates.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do wish to be correct, and I shall be glad if the Senator will state the dates.

Mr. FESS. The reciprocity treaties were signed July 24, 1899, and March 8, 1901.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What happened to the Kasson treaties when they reached the Senate?

Mr. DICKINSON. They died at the door of the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why did they die?

Mr. DICKINSON. Because of the conflict of interest all along the line on both sides, on the part of those who were interested in the trading off of these products and on the part of those who were interested in trading with those who produced the products.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, when the bargains had to be submitted to the direct representatives of the American people, the bargains failed to obtain approval.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is absolutely true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Therefore, we are now asked to create a system which will omit the necessity for approval by the representatives of the people, so that we shall not be embarrassed on the one hand nor shall the bargain be repudiated as the result of the protest of the American people.

Mr. DICKINSON. And the American people will have no opportunity to protest until the next Presidential election, because the power will be placed in the hands of the President.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. It is a little worse than the Senator states. The American people cannot affect what may be done until the time of the treaty has run out. As I understand, these treaties can exist for 3 years beyond the term of the President of the United States. In other words, these reciprocal-tariff agreements can extend for a period of 3 years from the dates on which they are made. There is nothing to keep the present President of the United States from renewing the tariff agreements on the day before he goes out of office.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is true.

Mr. LONG. In which event two more Congresses will have to be elected before the work can be undone.

I should like to state what I understand to be the genius behind this bill, if the Senator will permit me to state it, as I gather it in the general atmosphere around the corridors and in the outer chambers, where we sometimes talk a little more freely than we do within the Senate Chamber, but without quoting anyone or giving anyone's idea.

If my mind comprehends what might be said to be the final essence that comes through the funnel, it is that the only way we dare lower these tariffs and break up these American industries is to have it done by some sort of council which is not elected by the people, which can be called from various parts of the country, a certain gentleman being called out of one university, and perhaps some little fellow from some other institution, and they sit down and run this thing, and they do not report to Congress, because if they were to allow the agreement to go through Congress the people would not stand for it.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is the Senator's understanding that everyone has to be a professor, and also has to be in Who's Who, in order to get on this strategy board; is it not?

Mr. LONG. I guess he would call himself a professor, or a doctor, or a master of something; but the point I am making is that he must not be elected by the people. They must take this thing out of the hands of men elected by the people, because the people would not stand for it. That is all there is to this bill.

When we boil it all down to what this thing really means, it is that the Congress of the United States must not be allowed to handle the tariff. That is all this bill means. That is the essence of it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Right along that line, let me suggest that Mr. Sayre said, in a news release to the New York Times under date of May 18:

> Economic nationalism today seems to offer a convenient method of escape from insistent, present difficulties, but in the long view it offers no escape. Eventually it increases the fundamental difficulties and multiplies the conflicts which make for war.
>
> If we are to make effective the good will of the peoples of the world toward one another, there is only one way: We must realize our essential oneness—that no nation can permanently prosper at the expense of another; that due to the intricacies of modern commerce and banking and exchange, the suffering of one is the suffering of all, the prosperity of one is the prosperity of all. Surely the last war and its aftermath has made this painfully clear.
> At the bottom the problem is one of spiritual values. It is the age-old conflict of self-centered struggle, each against the other, making for the suffering of all, versus common efforts for the larger welfare, in which the readiness to sacrifice present for larger future ends dominates the picture.

There is the situation. Our country has been the dominant country, and is the dominant country of the world today. We are dominant not only in one field but in many fields. Yet it is said that in order to work out our relationships with the rest of the world we should say to one man, "It is your privilege to see what business you shall sacrifice and what business you shall benefit." In other words, this is a pig in a poke. There is absolutely no commitment on the part of anyone here as to what commodities shall be affected, or how they shall be affected. That, to my mind, is the most vicious feature of the whole thing; and my belief is that agricultural commodities will be the ones which will suffer most.

I shall now read to the Senate from an address by Frank G. Arnold, president of the Nebraska Federation of County Taxpayers Leagues, at Norfolk, Nebr., his statement with reference to the tariff:

> There is a school of thought in the United States today that many people believe should be carefully noted by farming interests. It refers to the propaganda so prevalent at the present time against tariffs. Authorities posted on this subject tell us this propaganda is promoted principally by capitalists who wish large imports of foreign agricultural products to repay foreign debts to the United States.

That is one thing which I think is vicious. Those who want to collect their money are willing to sacrifice the agricultural interests of this country in order to make their collections. I desire, also, to suggest that the General Motors Co., one of the outstanding advocates of reduced tariffs, does not care so much about domestic trade, because it knows that it has a monopoly of that, but it is sufficiently large to want to monopolize the automobile market of the world for their products without obstruction. Therefore they say, "We want tariffs reduced." I am free to confess that, in my judgment, they will sell a great many more automobiles to people who can be protected and made prosperous under the American tariff than they can by attempting to absorb the automobile business of the rest of the world. I continue the quotation:

> This undoubtedly seems logical to people who invested in foreign securities, but to the hard-headed, common-sense American farmer it means that there is grave danger that domestic industry and domestic agriculture will suffer in just the degree that reciprocity agreements are consummated.

Now, I want to go a little further. I have here a statement by George N. Peek. I will say in behalf of George N. Peek that I think he is one of the most capable men who is in a key position in the present administration. I have known Mr. Peek for a good many years. He is very efficient and very thorough, and I know why, or I think I know why, he had to get out of the A.A.A. It was because of the socialistic theories of many of those connected with that organization which were offensive to him, and therefore he had to resign from that position and take a new one.

Mr. Peek is the head of what is known as the "International Bank", by means of which we are going to trade with Russia. He has my sympathy. I am perfectly willing that he shall trade with Russia if, on the other hand, he will protect the domestic interests of the United States. The minute he starts in to sacrifice the domestic interests of the United States, I do not care whether those domestic interests are agricultural or industrial, then he ought to be called to account.

The other day, seeing that Mr. Peek was at the head of the International Bank, capitalized with $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money in order to finance new trade relations with Russia, I picked up what is known as the "Soviet Union Review", of April 1934 and began to look through it to see what were the principal Russian exports for the year 1932 and the year 1933. I find that one of the principal Russian exports is wheat. How much more money have we got to put into the International Bank or how shrewd a manipulator has Mr. Peek got to be in order to make exchange trade agreements with Russia which will help out the wheat farmers of America, when Russia produces wheat for export and her exports in 1932 were greater than in the year 1933?

The next Russian export is barley. We produce barley in our own country.

The next large Russian export is flax. I wonder how North Dakota would like to have a trade arrangement with Russia whereby Russia would be given a market for vast quantities of their flax in this country?

I find that their next export is butter. I am not taking these commodities in their order, but I am taking them according to the groups which are given here. Butter is one of the principal exports of Russia. Very well. What is the new International Bank under Mr. Peek's management going to do in order to increase the trade relations with Russia when they want to sell us, as naturally a country wants to sell, the products of which they produce an exportable surplus? That is the only way they have of getting money; that is the way Russia has of securing the finances with which to carry on her noble experiment over there.

Her next export is lumber. Between 1932 and 1933, when the exports of the other nations of the world were decreasing materially in percentage, the lumber exports of Russia maintained a parity. Therefore I am wondering what the lumber interests of the South, the lumber interests of the Northwest, the lumber interests of the North will want to have done in order that Russia may export more lumber into this country.

I could mention fish, fowl, poultry products, and so forth. I am merely citing these facts to show what would be the prospect of making a trade arrangement with Russia which would be of material interest and benefit to the American farmer.

The National Grange has for its legislative representative here in Washington, Mr. Fred Brenckman. He made a statement with reference to the pending tariff bill from which I wish briefly to read:

> Among the objections of the pending bill are:
> 1. As it is now written, the feature of the measure which authorizes the President to proclaim modifications of existing duties and "other import restrictions" is so sweeping that it would be possible to bring cattle into this country having the foot-and-mouth disease.

In other words, under this proposed legislation, the power to be placed in the Executive is to be so great that it will be possible, by means of an Executive order, to ignore the health regulations which are put into effect for the protection of the American people.

I quote further from Mr. Brenckman's statement:

> It would also make it possible to set aside the Lenroot-Taber Milk Act, providing that imported milk must conform to the same sanitary requirements as are in force domestically. That provision in the present revenue bill, which imposes an excise tax upon certain imported oils, could be voided; the antidumping laws could be suspended, and convict-made goods could be imported into this country under the present wording of the bill. Import restrictions enter into all these matters.

Another objection mentioned by Mr. Brenckman is the following:

> Everybody agrees that tariff tinkering unsettles business and creates uncertainties.

And that is the primary objection to this bill—

> That is true even when the tinkering is done in the open and everybody knows what is going on. The more secrecy there would be in negotiating reciprocal trade arrangements, the greater would be the uncertainty. It would seem that the bill should make provision for public hearings before agreements are consummated.

There is provision for a species of semiofficial notice or hearing, but I do not expect to discuss that phase of the bill. It will be, however, properly discussed in due time by some other Senator in connection with the consideration of the pending measure.

What I have read, Mr. President, gives some idea as to how agriculture feels with reference to this proposed legislation. I have tried to show, first, that it is an unwarranted delegation of power to the Executive; second, that I do not believe speed can be worked out under the machinery provided; and, third, that it is not for the benefit of agriculture. I want to take up the question of the permanency of the policy adopted by the different parties.

Mr. President, a very interesting minority report was filed on the last Republican tariff bill by the minority members, to which report the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Rhode Island referred a few days ago; I think most of those who signed that report are still Members of the Senate, in fact, all of them, I believe, are so, except one.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I am going to make a suggestion to the Senator. Is he about to read what the Democrats said?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am only going to quote a paragraph or so and to comment on that paragraph.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator is going to read what the Democrats declared in public—and I think I know what the Senator is going to read—I want to have the opportunity to call for a quorum in order that Senators on this side of the Chamber may come back and be enlightened as to what they said.

Mr. DICKINSON. I hope the Senator will not insist on a quorum. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is here, and I am sure he will be glad to tell them about this report, if any of them have forgotten it.

Mr. LONG. The people of the United States remember what the Democratic Senators said, but Democratic Senators have forgotten it. I am the only one here right now who remembers it, though there are several others, I understand, who are getting some memory of it who have not expressed themselves as yet.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to yield to the Senator from Washington?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator from Louisiana recall what the Republican Senators said about the same proposition?

Mr. LONG. I do not answer for them. I hope they accepted the verdict of the people.

Mr. BONE. A great many gentlemen in the Congress are going to have to accept the verdict of the people a little later on unless there shall be some very drastic changes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, right on this point, I have here the document entitled "Hawley-Smoot Tariff Bill of 1930—Yea-and-Nay Votes." I will be glad to refer to a few of these votes in view of the discussion which has just taken place. On page 11 of this document, known as "Document No. 177, Seventy-first Congress, second session", I find that Senator Smoot had pending to the tariff bill an amendment which gave the Tariff Commission the right, after investigation as to the cost of production, and so forth, to make a report to the President, and the President, in turn, could either raise or lower the tariff duties 50 percent. I find that when the Smoot amendment was pending the then Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Simmons, offered a substitute which required that the report of the Commission should come to Congress for either approval or disapproval. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] said:

> I desire to offer the following amendment to the amendment: At the conclusion of paragraph 2, page 2, strike out the period following the word "Commission" and insert a comma and the following language:
> And if Congress fails or refuses to take action thereon within 3 months and complete such action within 4 months thereafter, the President is authorized, by proclamation, to put into effect the changes in the rates of duty in accordance with his recommendation to the Congress: Provided, Such changes in rates shall not exceed 50 percent of the rates of duty provided in the law, either as to increases or decreases; but this proviso shall not apply to the free list.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] said:

> Mr. President, I am not going to take time to discuss my amendment to the amendment. It is to meet a situation which I conceive will arise in two thirds of the cases that may be submitted to Congress. The substitute provides that the Tariff Commission shall report to the President and that the President shall transmit that report to Congress with his recommendations respecting any increases or decreases in the rates of duty. Now, if that recommendation is satisfactory to the Congress, there is no need for any congressional action at all. The evidence that Congress finds it satisfactory will be established by the failure or declination of Congress to act within 3 months after the recommendation is made to it. I think that will meet probably two thirds of the cases which will be presented. There is no need for congressional action in such cases.

I find numerous Senators who are still in the Senate voted for that amendment. This simply shows the tendency at that time, in connection with tariff matters, that there should be no exclusive jurisdiction placed in the hands of the President without some manner of review, some yardstick, some way by which the interest of the public could be protected; and that it should not be merely subject to the whim of one man to do as he pleased.

Among the various amendments I find another offered by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. This indicates the procedure Senators had in mind when we had before us the famous Smoot-Hawley tariff bill with reference to the flexible provision of that law. The pending bill goes much further and provides that there shall be no way by which we may judge the cost of production. It permits us to ignore everything, and suggests that in some way Congress should abdicate its authority to fix a yardstick by which the matter could be determined, and should give to some executive authority the right to carry out the program.

In the minority report on the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill signed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], at page 4150 of the RECORD of October 2, 1929, I find paragraph 2 reads as follows:

> The question involved is one that, in our opinion, strikes at the very roots of constitutional government.

In other words, they meant it would be a sacrifice of the rights of the people by their representatives to transfer from the authority of Congress to the authority of the Executive the right to do something which they contended should not be done. This report, let it be remembered, was against the adoption of the flexible provision of a tariff law which had to have a yardstick, which involved research, and a program laid down which must be followed, before a change could be made at all. It was entirely different from and less offensive than the one we are now considering.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it not also a fact that any change in the tariff under the provisions to which they objected at that time could be again changed at any time by the Congress?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. While the changes proposed to be made by treaty cannot again be changed at any time unless we can get the consent of the other contracting nation. It is infinitely more binding on our people.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes; and it would bring the other contracting parties here and enable them to say how we should control our own domestic affairs.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. In other words, it is proposed to do away with being embarrassed either by the people or by their Representatives in Congress.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is true.

Mr. FESS. And to free themselves from any embarrassment of that kind.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. Let me continue reading from the report. Remember, this is the Democratic minority report on a bill which limited the authority and fixed the yardstick:

It concerns the preservation unimpaired or the abandonment of the power of levying taxes by that branch of the Government which the forefathers agreed should alone be charged with that duty and responsibility.

It seems to me that when the Democrats, by reason of the coercion of the administration, come here and reverse themselves with that signed report confronting them, we have reached a peculiar situation with reference to our representative form of party government. Let me quote further:

The issue is one of taxation by one official, be he president or monarch, in contrast to taxation by the representatives of the people elected.

That is, taxation without representation, as complained of by the colonial forefathers.

The issue is one of taxation by one official, be he president or monarch, in contrast to taxation by the representatives of the people elected, intrusted exclusively with the power to seize the property of the citizens through taxation. If proof be needed that the danger which the forefathers foresaw is inherent in this issue, a mere casual inquiry into the methods employed, selfish influences used, sinister schemes and contrivances brought to bear, one need but examine the record.

The principle is: Are taxation laws and their application to be made virtually in secret?

In secret? Yes; and by one man, and when they have a treaty already made, about which they apparently do not want the Senate to know anything, they provide a type of notice that is not effective, and proper notice cannot be given to anyone. I continue to quote:

The principle is: Are taxation laws and their application to be made virtually in secret, whatever may be said about a limiting rule, or are they to be enacted by the responsible representatives of the people in the Congress, where public debate is held and a public record made of each official's conduct?

Is it not a great thing now to have this record of official conduct? No such record as this would be available if the bill now before us should become a law and go into effect. The President would not have to come to Congress to ask for anything. He could do as he pleased, and do it when he pleased. Yet it is expected that business is going to recover. Here we are trying to expand 7 percent of foreign trade, at the risk of punishing 93 percent of domestic trade, with the idea that we may, if you please, punish 93 percent of our domestic trade for the chance, because immediately when we try to adjust these schedules we only run a chance of getting the export trade; we are not sure of it; we do not know whether we are going to be able to get it or not, because we are competing with the nations of the world.

I continue to read from the minority report:

The arbitrary exercise of the taxing power, all the more dangerous if disguised and not obvious, in its basic character is tyranny. Resistance to the impairment of this popular right has largely occasioned many of the wars and revolutions of the past.

Someone expressed a good idea here.

An issue of this importance should not be associated with the opinions or necessities of those interests, States, or sections that directly profit by some rate schedule in the body of the tariff act. With respect to the principle here at stake any trading or logrolling is especially unjustifiable and indefensible. Neither should we be unduly influenced by the attempt to divert attention from this momentous issue by condemnation of and emphasis upon the dilatory and unsatisfactory results of congressional procedure.

That is the very thing the administration is saying is the principal reason why we ought to adopt the pending tariff bill!

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to say for the benefit of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who just rose, that I have some quotations from statements made by him which I shall submit in a few moments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Maryland is very happy to have the Senator from Iowa use any quotations he desires from the remarks of the Senator from Maryland. What I rose to ask, however, was whether the Senator had any suggestions as to how we might approach this situation.

It takes about 6 or 8 months to pass a tariff bill in Congress. In the present depression a great many governments have conferred the tariff-making power on a single individual. I read the other day that there were five or six men in the world who could change the tariff acts of their countries overnight.

Without taking issue as to the merits of the question as it has been expounded by the Senator from Iowa, I am sure he will concede that we are at a disadvantage in that we have to have legislative action in order to change our tariff, while other governments have relinquished legislative action in tariff making. I was wondering, therefore, if the Senator had any suggestion as to how we might meet that difficulty otherwise than by the procedure which is proposed in the measure now pending.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would meet it by the method which is the result of 150 years of tariff experience in America, and that is this: The countries which give executive authority along the line the Senator suggests usually are countries of limited industries, countries which have only a limited number of commodities in which they are interested. We are a country of practically all commodities and all interests. What I would do would be to follow the same rule that should be followed by a clothing merchant, for example. If I were a clothing merchant in this city and wanted to sell clothes, I would not say to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] when he came in to buy a suit of clothes, "I will sell you a suit of clothes, and I will throw in a necktie and a pair of suspenders and a pair of socks", and then, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] came in, say to him, "I will sell you a suit of clothes, and I will throw in a necktie and pair of suspenders", and forget the socks, and when the Senator from Maryland [Mr TYDINGS] came in, sell him a suit of clothes and throw in the necktie with neither of the other two articles. In other words, I do not believe we are in a position where we ought to make special bargains with any country in the world. I would put up the tariff barriers to a point where I thought they protected domestic interests, and then I would say to the world, "Come and trade with us under these rules and regulations, and your trade is welcome. Otherwise, we will try to get along without you."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will admit that, outside of 4 or 5 products, practically all the products we import are also produced in America. Coffee, rubber, and a few other commodities, we do not produce at all, and there are some of which we produce a little; but really we produce nearly all the commodities that our people consume.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the reason why I suggested the rule I have just announced.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does not the Senator think that according to his philosophy it would be a good thing if we should entirely prohibit all imports of commodities which we produce?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; I am not an embargoist.

Mr. TYDINGS. At what point does the Senator feel that such a course would be injurious?

Mr. DICKINSON. The point is determined by the economic conditions of the period in which we happen to be acting.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator said a while ago that he was not primarily interested in what went on in the rest of the world.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; I did not say that. I am interested in foreign trade.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said he would not deal with any of the other countries on the basis of agreements of that kind. He said they might go ahead with their executive authorities, but that we should not meet that grant of power at all. I see his point there; but what I am trying to bring out is, since he so believes, why does not the Senator, as a matter of logic, believe that we should not import any article which we produce in this country?

Mr. DICKINSON. The conclusion is not at all justified by the premises.

Mr. TYDINGS. At what point is the conclusion not justified?

Mr. DICKINSON. It depends upon the economic conditions of the period in which we happen to be acting, which means wages, cost of material, supply of material, and so forth.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, I take it the Senator is not opposed to the importation in some cases of goods which are also produced in the United States.

Mr. DICKINSON. We produce sugar, and we also import sugar. We have to do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. I say, the Senator is not opposed to that?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; but I am in favor of putting up the tariff to a point where it will protect the domestic producer.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the Senator is not a 100-percent protectionist.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; I am.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator claims in one breath that he is a 100-percent protectionist, but he admits in the next breath that he is willing that some of the things we produce in this country shall come in from abroad.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; the Senator is trying to draw from certain premises a conclusion which is not warranted.

Mr. TYDINGS. In what respect is it erroneous?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is erroneous for the reason that I said to the Senator that the action would depend upon the economic conditions which we faced at the time. The only reason why we have this tariff bill before us today is that we confront an economic condition, and the Senator's party is taking a complete somersault in dealing with it. I have the record of the various members of his party and the statements they have made, including the statement of Secretary Hull, who says, "Why, this would be bureaucracy going mad."

Senators on the other side are all trying to explain away their action by saying that this is an emergency, when, as a matter of fact, it will result only in disaster to try to deal with the emergency in this way.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will yield further——

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to get away from the point I was originally trying to make. I will return to that; but I do not think the Senator's logic is good, because, if I recall correctly, he voted then for the very thing of which he is now complaining, and the only difference is one of degree.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no!

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, yes!

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no! [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, yes! The Senator voted to place in the hands of the President the right to raise and lower tariff duties within 50 percent of the rates prescribed by Congress.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; but after a certain stipulated action had been taken.

Mr. TYDINGS. Now the Senator is complaining about Democrats who were opposed to that authorization then and who now favor it, when the Senator heretofore favored the authorization and now opposes it; so the difference is one of degree only.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is the Senator through?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. I have only begun what I desired to say.

Mr. DICKINSON. I desire to answer the Senator when he completes his statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will let the Senator go ahead. I will not interfere with his answer.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that the person who says there is here only a difference in degree has not looked up the history of legislation. Why? Because there is all the difference in the world between a case where there is a yardstick by which a thing must be done, as in the matter of fixing railroad rates, and a case where we say to one man, "You may do as you please without any information, without any investigation." The latter authorization puts in one man's hands a dictatorial power by which he can destroy or benefit any particular industry in which he happens to be interested.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator knows just as well as I know that placing in the hands of the President the right to raise a tariff or to decrease a tariff 50 percent, from the standpoint of protection, places in the hands of the President the ability to destroy protection.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no!

Mr. TYDINGS. I can go through the tariff list and show the Senator a hundred items where, if the tariff were reduced 50 percent, there would be no protection.

Mr. DICKINSON. I agree to that.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Iowa voted for that; and now he charges Democrats with playing fast and loose with the very things which he himself defended.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me ask the Senator whether he sees any difference between giving one man the right to do that and giving an investigating board the right to make an investigation and a report, and fixing the standards by which the investigation must be made, and the facts which must be found before the change can be made?

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator said he was opposed to the bill because it places in one man's hands the ability to destroy the tariff structure, when every Senator knows that when we placed in the hands of President Hoover and President Harding and others the ability to lower the tariff rates 50 percent, we placed in the President's hands the ability to destroy the protective tariff if he wanted to do so; and nobody can say otherwise.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not agree with the Senator at all. The Senator is entirely wrong in his conclusion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Tell me one tariff duty where it would not do it. Name one.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator let me answer that question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment; let me have my inning with the Senator from Iowa first, please. Name one tariff duty where it would not do it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not suggesting that any President would change a rate 50 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator's party put in the President's hands the power to do it. Neither are we suggesting that he would reduce a rate 10 percent; but what I am getting at is that the other time the Senator from Iowa voted to place in the President's hands the very power of which he now complains.

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not vote to place it in the hands of the President in the form in which it is being placed in his hands in this tariff bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator wants to read quotations, I will read quotations from him where he voted and spoke for that proposal.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator wants to be consistent, let him show where the power he heretofore voted to place in the President's hands would not enable him to reduce the tariff.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. It may be all right for the Senator from Maryland to argue with a Republican, but the Senator from Maryland and I hitched ourselves out on this question. I will show, Mr. President, what happened shortly after my entry into the Senate, when I followed the Senator from Maryland on this proposition and other leading Senators on this side of the Chamber. I say "on this side of the Chamber", meaning that we still adhere to the Democratic doctrine.

The Republicans had adopted this flexible-tariff provision and the Democrats went on record that they would undo it. The Democratic Party, along with the Senator from Maryland, took the position that even though a certain change in the tariff were advised and recommended and found to be justified by a fact-finding body, none the less they were going to take out of the hands of any President or any bureaucrat the right to change the tariff.

I came here as a tariff Democrat from the State of Louisiana. I came here as the successor of Senator Ransdell, who had voted for the present tariff-making authority, which can be exercised only when the facts have been found by a body supposed, at least, to be independent. Later on I led the fight to elect the opponent of the other Senator from Louisiana who had voted for that tariff-making authority. I came here as a tariff Democrat, and stood for the Constitution, and stood for Democracy, notwithstanding the fact that I was a tariff Democrat.

The first vote that I cast in the Senate on the tariff is found on April 1, 1932, when the Senator from Maryland and I voted to take out of the hands of the President such authority as he now has to fix tariffs, and here is that vote.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not said that I did not vote in that way. I am just arguing the other way. Nobody in the Senate knows how I am going to vote on the pending measure. The Senator from Iowa has disclosed his position, and I am trying to show that it is in conflict with the position he previously took. So far as I am concerned, I have not disclosed my position, and nobody is able to say that I shall not be consistent.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that sounds mighty good to me. I believe the Senator from Maryland is the type of man who will not go before the country and go back on this record and these promises of our party. I do not care what the Republicans do. A plague on their house, so far as I am concerned. [Laughter.] I am trying to save the Democratic Party, and I am glad to have that expression from the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not say how I am going to vote.

Mr. LONG. I know the Senator did not say. I am assuming that the Senator will be just as honest with himself as he has been with the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Maryland is one of the clearest thinkers in this body, and when he makes a statement such as that he made a while ago, and argues with the Senator from Iowa, I am considerably disturbed.

The present law gives to the President, within the limitation of 50 percent, power to increase or decrease tariff rates upon the recommendation of a fact-finding commission, that fact-finding commission acting upon the authority of Congress, limited by the direction of Congress, to find the difference between the cost of production in competing countries and our country, which is the basis of all tariff legislation, outside of revenue tariffs. The Senator from Maryland says that a law thus limited by the direction of Congress is exactly the same as the law now proposed, which would give power to the President to make changes in tariffs, and which is limited, it is true, within certain rates, but is not limited by any direction of the Congress to action upon facts reported by any commission whatever, and he then insists that those of us who voted for the present law and are now resisting this law are inconsistent. How a clear-headed man like the Senator from Maryland can make such a statement I cannot understand.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. Before I yield further, I should like to insert something in the RECORD.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will not the Senator allow me to reply before he goes on with that? I will not take long.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Ohio conjures a picture, and it strikes me that he turns its face to the wall before he takes a look at it. He says it is all right for the Congress to fix the limitation and then turn the yardstick over to the President to fix a rate, and in the act of Congress we fixed the limitation at 50 percent. The Senator is on sound ground in making that observation.

Let us suppose that we fixed the limitation at 60 percent; would it still be a congressional yardstick? Suppose we fixed it at 70 percent; would it still be a congressional yardstick? Suppose we fixed it at 99 percent; would it still be a congressional yardstick?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think a yardstick has 36 inches in it; and since the Senator goes to 35⅞ inches, I do not see any use in arguing over the other eighth of an inch.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator totally avoids the differentiation I have mentioned. So far as the limitation in rate is concerned, the two measures are identical; but there is a world of difference in that the pending bill would give to the President plenary authority to proceed on his own ipse dixit, while under the present law that cannot be done, but the President is guided by the facts found by a commission, and that commission is limited to one formula fixed by Congress. There is nothing of that kind in the pending bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if the contention of the Senator from Maryland is correct, we might as well say there is no difference between legislation passed by Congress and signed by the President and that signed only by the President without being passed by Congress.

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is exactly what Congress did. Congress said, "Notwithstanding the legislation we have passed, you can change it up or down 50 percent." The Senator from Ohio says that it is perfectly within the yardstick proposition to say, "Here is what we have passed. You can change it 99.44 percent." Therefore, having conceded that the whole act of Congress can be changed by the Presidential ipse dixit, what was the use of passing it? If the yardstick is 36 inches long, he can wipe out the whole tariff, if we give him 100 percent leeway, and we will not have any tariff at all. When Congress gave him discretion up to 50 percent, it marched up and laid down the precedent which has brought us to the exact situation in which we are today.

If the President can reduce a tariff fixed in an act of Congress 99 percent, then we might as well let the President determine the rate in the first place, because he can say, "Notwithstanding the action of the Congress, you have given me the right to change all the tariff rates if I want to." The Senator cannot get away from that.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator from Maryland might as well say that if one takes one drink he is just as drunk as if he takes three.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I did not say that. What I say is that if one takes one drink, he is drinking liquor, and there is no use arguing he is not drinking liquor when he takes one drink. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, on September 27, 1929, as appears on page 4023 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] said:

If the Senator from Texas will yield to me for about 2 minutes, I should like to point out that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], while not intentionally, of course, has been somewhat unfair in his statement. There are any number of men who believe in the principle of a flexible tariff who do not believe, however, that the power under the flexible provision should be placed in the hands of the President of the United States.

That is what is being done now.

To argue for the flexibility of the tariff is one thing; to argue that the President shall exercise the power given under the flexible provision of the law is another thing.

There are many Senators in this body who are not opposed to the pending amendment, who would not be opposed to having the flexible provision retained in the law were the power under it to be exercised by some agency of the Congress. What we are contending against, as the Senator from Ohio is contending to the contrary, is that Congress should not give up its power to lay taxes and transfer that power to the President of the United States. Mr. Chester Gray is with those of us who take the view that Congress should retain that power. He is not with the Senator from Ohio, who has just put his letter into the RECORD, because Mr. Gray wants the President eliminated so far as the exercise of that power is concerned.

I can see the logic and the force and the wisdom of having some agency set up between that may take care of injustices and inequalities which may develop in any tariff law, the passage of one bill and the enactment of another, but we can do that without surrendering the legislative power to the Executive of this country. If such a measure shall be offered, drawn along fair and proper lines, I will be inclined to support it, but I am unalterably opposed not to the flexible provision itself so much as I am placing the power to exercise that flexibility in the Executive, who is not the lawmaking branch of the Government and has no more right to lay taxes than has the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who heads the judicial department of the Government.

Those were the words of the Senator from Maryland on the flexible provision of the tariff.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. They are still my words, but, notwithstanding the eloquence and the logic with which the Senator from Maryland appealed to Senators on the other side of the aisle to take the same ground then which he took at that time and which he now takes, they saw fit to go in the opposite direction, and now the Senator from Iowa charges those who voted against that provision with inconsistency.

Why did not Senators over there then stand with the Senator from Maryland? The Senator from Maryland then was fighting the battle the Senator from Iowa now seems to be fighting. I believed what I said then, and I believe it now. There is no inconsistency in my position. The Senator from Iowa did not believe it then, but he does believe it now. He is the inconsistent one, as made out by his own evidence before his own colleagues. He says the remarks I made were splendid, yet his colleagues immediately voted the opposite way.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well. We will insert now in the RECORD section 336 of the present tariff act and in parallel columns I will ask to have inserted House bill 8687, and I will ask the Senator from Maryland, who is a good lawyer, to read those two measures tomorrow, and if he does not find sufficient distinction between them to cause a good man to take one view of one and another view of another, then I am no judge of national legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 336. EQUALIZATION OF COSTS OF PRODUCTION

(a) Change of classification or duties: In order to put into force and effect the policy of Congress by this act intended, the Commission (1) upon request of the President, or (2) upon resolution of either or both Houses of Congress, or (3) upon its own motion, or (4) when in the judgment of the Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, upon application of any interested party, shall investigate the differences in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article. In the course of the investigation the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings. The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. The Commission shall report to the President the results of the investigation and its findings with respect to such differences in costs of production. If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that the duties expressly fixed by statute do not equalize the differences in the costs of production of the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article when produced in the principal competing country, the Commission shall specify in its report such increases or decreases in rates of duty expressly fixed by statute (including any necessary change in classification) as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences. In no case shall the total increase or decrease of such rates of duty exceed 50 percent of the rates expressly fixed by statute.

(b) Change to American selling price: If the Commission finds upon any such investigation that such differences cannot be equalized by proceedings as hereinbefore provided, it shall so state in its report to the President and shall specify therein such ad valorem rates of duty based upon the American selling price (as defined in section 402 (g)) of the domestic article, as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences. In no case shall the total decrease of such rates of duty exceed 50 percent of the rates expressly fixed by statute, and no such rate shall be increased.

(c) Proclamation by the President: The President shall by proclamation approve the rates of duty and changes in classification and in basis of value specified in any report of the Commission under this section, if in his judgment such rates of duty and changes are shown by such investigation of the Commission to be necessary to equalize such differences in costs of production.

(d) Effective date of rates and changes: Commencing 30 days after the date of any Presiden-

H.R. 8687

An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930

Be it enacted, etc., That the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by adding at the end of title III the following:

"PART III—PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE

"SEC. 350. (a) For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States (as a means of assisting in restoring the American standard of living, in overcoming domestic unemployment and the present economic depression, in increasing the purchasing power of the American public in the present emergency, and in establishing and maintaining a better relationship among various branches of American agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce) by regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States, the President, whenever he finds that any existing duties or other import restrictions are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States or that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the use of the powers herein conferred, is authorized from time to time—

"(1) To enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof; and

"(2) To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign trade agreements, as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder. No proclamation shall be made increasing or decreasing by more than 50 percent any existing rate of duty or transferring any article between the dutiable and free lists. The proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall apply to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of all foreign countries, whether imported directly or indirectly, except that nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the granting of exclusive preferential treatment to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the Republic of Cuba: Provided, That the President may suspend the application to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any country because of its discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in this section; and the proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall be in effect from and after such time as is specified in the proctial proclamation of approval the increased or decreased rates of duty and changes in classification or in basis of value specified in the report of the Commission shall take effect.

(e) Ascertainment of differences in costs of production: In ascertaining under this section the differences in costs of production, the Commission shall take into consideration, insofar as it finds it practicable:

(1) In the case of a domestic article: (A) The cost of production as hereinafter in this section defined; (B) transportation costs and other costs incident to delivery to the principal market or markets of the United States for the article; and (C) other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition.

(2) In the case of a foreign article: (A) The cost of production as hereinafter in this section defined, or, if the Commission finds that such cost is not readily ascertainable, the Commission may accept as evidence thereof, or as supplemental thereto, the weighted average of the invoice prices or values for a representative period and/or the average wholesale selling price for a representative period (which price shall be that at which the article is freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal market or markets of the principal competing country or countries in the ordinary course of trade and in the usual wholesale quantities in such market or markets); (B) transportation costs and other costs incident to delivery to the principal market or markets of the United States for the article; (C) other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition, including advantages granted to the foreign producers by a government, person, partnership, corporation, or association in a foreign country.

(f) Modification of changes in duty: Any increased or decreased rate of duty or change in classification or in basis of value which has taken effect as above provided may be modified or terminated in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations (including time of taking effect) as is provided in this section in the case of original increases, decreases, or changes.

(g) Prohibition against transfers from the free list to the dutiable list or from the dutiable list to the free list: Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize a transfer of an article from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list, nor a change in form of duty. Whenever it is provided in any paragraph of title I of this act, or in any amendatory act, that the duty or duties shall not exceed a specified ad valorem rate upon the articles provided for in such paragraph, no rate determined under the provisions of this section upon such articles shall exceed the maximum ad valorem rate so specified.

(h) Definitions: For the purpose of this section—

(1) The term "domestic article" means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of lamation. The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'duties and other import restrictions' includes (1) rate and form of import duties and classification of articles, and (2) limitations, prohibitions, charges, and exactions other than duties, imposed on importation or imposed for the regulation of imports."

SEC. 2. (a) Subparagraph (d) of paragraph 369, the last sentence of paragraph 1402, and the provisos to paragraphs 371, 401, 1650, 1687, and 1803 (1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 are repealed. The provisions of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall not apply to any article with respect to the importation of which into the United States a foreign trade agreement has been concluded pursuant to this act. The third paragraph of section 311 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall not apply to any agreement concluded pursuant to this act with any country which does not grant exclusive preferential duties to the United States with respect to flour.

(b) Every foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall be subject to termination, upon due notice to the foreign government concerned, at the end of not more than 3 years from the date on which the agreement comes into force, and, if not then terminated, shall be subject to termination thereafter upon not more than 6 months' notice.

(c) The provisions of this act shall terminate 3 years from the date of its enactment.

the United States; and the term "foreign article" means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of a foreign country.

(2) The term "United States" includes the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia.

(3) The term "foreign country" means any empire, country, dominion, colony, or protectorate, or any subdivision or subdivisions thereof (other than the United States and its possessions).

(4) The term "cost of production", when applied with respect to either a domestic article or a foreign article, includes, for a period which is representative of conditions in production of the article: (A) The price or cost of materials, labor costs, and other direct charges incurred in the production of the article and in the processes or methods employed in its production; (B) the usual general expenses, including charges for depreciation or depletion which are representative of the equipment and property employed in the production of the article and charges for rent or interest which are representative of the cost of obtaining capital or instruments of production; and (C) the cost of containers and coverings of whatever nature, and other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the article in condition packed ready for delivery.

(i) Rules and regulations of President: The President is authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for carrying out his functions under the provisions of this section.

(j) Rules and regulations of Secretary of Treasury: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the entry and declaration of foreign articles of the class or kind of articles with respect to which a change in basis of value has been made under the provisions of subdivision (b) of this section, and for the form of invoice required at time of entry.

(k) Investigations prior to enactment of act: All uncompleted investigations instituted prior to the approval of this act under the provisions of section 315 of the Tariff Act of 1922, including investigations in which the President has not proclaimed changes in classification or in basis of value or increases or decreases in rates of duty, shall be dismissed without prejudice; but the information and evidence secured by the Commission in any such investigation may be given due consideration in any investigation instituted under the provisions of this section.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know what it is that the Senator has asked me to read, but I hope it is of sufficient——

Mr. DICKINSON. It is the present tariff law; the flexible provision thereof.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand that, and I do not blame the Senator at all for the remarks he is making. I see the logic of his position. I think there is a great deal to be said on the side of the argument which he is taking; but I point out again that there is very little difference between giving a President 50-percent power over tariff rates and giving him 100-percent power. When Congress gave the President a 50-percent power it started this country upon its way. Now the Senator must not complain if, after having pointed the finger in the direction we should go, others come along after the depression and follow in the footsteps of the Senator's party.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. But because of the fact that the Republicans had made a slight or even a material step in that direction, the Democratic Party introduced in Congress a bill to undo what had been done. That was voted on by Congress in March 1932, I think.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is not going to make out our friend from Iowa as being even more inconsistent than I have made him out to be?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not have any concern about Republicans. I am trying to save a good Democrat. In other words, I do not want the Senator from Maryland to say that because Mr. Hoover did a thing of this kind that is a good reason why it ought to be done. In other words, while Mr. Hoover did take a step in that direction—we must admit that much—while it is true that he had a fact-finding board which had to find as a matter of fact that whatever tariff rate he set represented the difference in cost of producing a commodity abroad as compared to what it cost here, yet when that fact was found he himself had the right to establish a tariff to take up that difference, provided it did not exceed 50 percent. The Senator from Maryland and the Democratic Party condemned the granting of that power, however, and we rightfully condemned it. We introduced a bill in Congress after the election, which the Congress passed, known as the Harrison bill, which I have in my hand, to undo this flexible tariff, and I voted for it. Though I was a tariff Democrat, though I came from Louisiana, I said, "Though I be a tariff Democrat, I am not willing to have the taxing power taken out of Congress and placed in the hands of the President of the United States." We took that stand to undo it.

Now my friend from Maryland is leaving the Chamber, so I shall not continue further on that subject.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Maryland leaves the Chamber, I desire to suggest that if I had the option of going back and repealing the flexible provision, or liberalizing it to the extent suggested in this bill, I should go with the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think that is a very honest and a very fair remark for the Senator from Iowa to make. That point is exactly one which drew me into the debate. The Senator having voted for a thing in principle, although the pending bill may vary in degree from what he previously voted for, I do not see how he could rightfully complain as vehemently as he seems to be complaining, when he himself established the precedent.

Mr. DICKINSON. I never complain about anything. I always take things in good nature.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Maryland insists that there is no material difference between the pending legislation and the legislation which the Senator from Iowa and I supported, I wonder why there should be so much effort toward having the present law changed.

Mr. DICKINSON. Of course, everyone knows that the present machinery will not permit the doing of that which it is attempted to do under the pending bill.

Mr. FESS. And everyone knows that there is a world of difference between the two.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is absolutely true. It is true, as the Senator from Maryland contends, that the existing law contains provisions which are flexible in their scope; but if I were to be compelled to elect between the extreme of this bill and going back to the repeal of the flexible provisions, I should do the latter, because I do not want to put that uncertainty ahead of industry in this country.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of fact, I had planned to propose at a later time to the Republicans and to the Democrats that we take the word of the people on this matter anyway. Would it not be better for us to take the platform of the Democratic Party and make it the law? The Democratic Party won out on the issue that this flexible authority ought to be repealed. At the proper time I shall offer as a substitute for the bill which is now before the Senate the bill voted by the last Democratic House and Democratic-Progressive Senate, which was known as the "Harrison bill", to repeal the flexible provision of the tariff law. That ought to be voted for by every good Democrat, because that is what we carried before the people; and the Republicans, rather than have this power extended, ought to accept the will of the people and join in and vote as good Americans for that which was promised by the Democratic Party, on which it won out before the American people.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, continuing the discussion along this line, I desire to quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 12, 1929, page 3542. Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, then the minority ranking member of the Finance Committee, said:

> That would mean but one thing, namely, that the Congress of the United States, invested by the Constitution with the sole power to impose taxes, had deliberately delegated a large part of that legislative power to the executive branch of the Government—taking from the people and giving to the President practically one half of a power which can kill or make alive; which can destroy or build up. It is an Anglo-Saxon principle that the people, through their legislative representatives, should at all times retain control of the purse strings of the Nation. Talk about centralized government! Nothing would tend to centralize all power in the head of the Government at Washington to as great an extent as the flexible tariff scheme now proposed.

If we were that much wrong, how much more wrong would we now be if we should vote for this legislation?

Continuing to quote from former Senator Simmons:

> But if the President is given the latitude and discretion in fixing these rates provided in the bill now pending, an entirely new situation would be created, and industries desiring an increase in statutory rates would go to the President and the Tariff Commission instead of coming to Congress for the relief they wish. They would have to deal only with one man instead of having to deal with nearly 600 representatives of the people in the two branches of the Congress.
>
> * * * * * * *
> Personally, I have no doubt as to its unconstitutionality, but there are others here.

He summarized by saying:

> By its liberalization of the flexible provisions, enlarging the powers and discretion of the President, the latitude allowed the President in the imposition of additional duties is dangerously expanded.

I now quote from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who, at page 3667 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 16, 1929, inserted an article from which I quote:

> Obviously Congress cannot delegate its taxing power to any commission. Many of the greatest lawyers and jurists of the land believe that the present provision of the law, which permits the President to exercise authority in raising or lowering the duties without reference to Congress, is close to the line of unconstitutionality.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said, on September 17, 1929, page 3685:

> I admit that I have fears of bureaucracy, and distrust Executive authority in the exercise of discretionary power.

Former Senator Simmons, on page 3867, September 23, 1929, said:

> I outlined in general terms what that scheme would be, namely, to retain the Tariff Commission with the functions which it possessed prior to the passage of the flexible tariff provision, but require them to report to the Congress instead of to the President.

I now quote from the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on September 26, 1929, page 3979, when he said:

The principle of the difference in cost of production at home and abroad on the basis of just competition I believe is sound.

* * * * * * *

The main argument against the flexible provision, the Smoot amendment, and section 366, is it places too much power in the hands of the President.

That is of record here as against the type of law that we were then considering.

The late Senator Walsh, of Montana, said on September 26, 1929, at page 3981:

Now, Mr. President, to the matter before us.

The essential feature of the provisions under consideration contemplates the transfer of a part of the taxing power, as the present law transfers a part of the taxing power, from the Congress of the United States, the legislative branch, to the President, the executive branch.

* * * * * * *

Moreover, why should we undertake to fix the rates at all? Why not just declare in the bill what commodities shall go on the dutiable list and what commodities shall go upon the free list, and then provide that the Tariff Commission shall ascertain the difference in the cost of production with respect to these commodities at home and abroad and give the Tariff Commission power to fix the rates?

That was not done. The then Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh, said, on page 3981, on the same day:

I add here that, when the question was before the Senate in 1922, there were just 2 votes on the Democratic side in favor of the flexible provisions. Every other Democrat voted against them, as well as distinguished Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

The attitude of the Democratic Party with respect to these flexible provisions, I undertake to say, is better determined and judged from the action of Democratic Senators in 1922, and by the platform adopted in 1928.

In other words, they were no longer running true to form so far as their platform was concerned.

The then Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh, on September 26, 1929, at page 3984, also said:

Mr. President, if we can constitutionally grant this power to the President, why should we not give him the right to transfer specific rates to ad valorem rates in order to equalize the difference in the cost of production? Evidently Senators on the other side, enlightened by whatever discussion took place upon the floor, concluded that they had better not take a chance on giving any such power to the President.

* * * * * * *

The fact is, as has been stated here this morning, that a perfectly impossible task to put up to the Tariff Commission and to the President of the United States to ascertain what is the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

He was against the entire provision. I continue to quote from Senator Walsh, of Montana, at page 3985:

Mr. President, I said I am not going to discuss the question of the constitutionality of this measure in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, except as the question remains unsettled in respect to the bill as it came from the House. But I want to call attention to the fact that the act was sustained by the opinion of the Supreme Court by the adroit avoiding of every controversial question there was in the case, the Court contenting itself with glittering generalities concerning propositions which no one denied or controverted.

* * * * * * *

The Tariff Commission ought to be continued to discharge the work for which it was created. We should not impose upon it the obligation to levy duties—and that is what this scheme amounts to, because it is perfectly obvious to everybody that the President cannot possibly devote the necessary time to it, that his connection with the thing will be largely nominal. To repose any such power in the President or the Tariff Commission is not only violative of fundamental principles of government but it is contrary to sound business principles.

I want to suggest here that the pending bill not only goes that far but under it the President does not have to consult the Tariff Commission; he does not have to consult anybody; and, according to Assistant Secretary Sayre, all they are going to do is to have some research made, and then he is going to make it known as to what he thinks ought to be done and change the tariff just as he wants to. That is what the upshot of this bill will be. I quote from the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] on page 3989 of the RECORD of September 26, 1929:

The minute, Mr. President, you take from the people the right of their representatives to levy taxes and put that right in the hands of a man who can practically perpetuate himself in office for 8 years, you repeal the thirteenth amendment in effect, because we are all economic slaves, and the only difference is that we have a little hope in 8 years of removing our bonds, where under most forms of slavery that hope cannot be entertained.

I quote now from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who on September 26, at page 3995, said:

It affords a club of power over the industries of this country. So long as it is in the President's power to act under such a provision they have got to kotow to him; they have got to consider him; they cannot take a stand against him, because they do not know when he may use this power against them. It is a tremendous power, which was given in the first instance by the American people to the Congress of the United States. * * *

The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was right. If we can give away this power, if we can turn over to the President the power to legislate on revenue, we can delegate to him any other power than we may have under the Constitution.

* * * * * * *

We ought not to give to the President this great power of raising revenue. It is immaterial, as I have shown, as it has been administered heretofore; but the great trouble is that it is a club which we put in the President's hands for the future, if he desires to use it in that way, toward the industries and toward the farmers and toward the consumers of the country.

Next I shall quote from the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] on September 27, 1929, at page 4017:

We all have a deep affection for the Constitution and desire it to be preserved in letter and in spirit. But there is sometimes indifference to fundamental questions and to the importance of restricting each branch of the Government to the sphere to which the Constitution assigns it.

That is one of the things we are facing here at the present time.

I quote again from the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] on September 27, 1929, at page 4018:

Let us suppose that we do give to the President this power to raise and lower the taxes on imports. Would it not be just as sensible to give him other powers similar to that, to increase or decrease the size of the Army without recourse to Congress or to increase or decrease the size of the public debt without recourse to Congress?

Of course, no one questions that this proposed law goes very much further than any measure we have ever previously had before us.

On September 27, 1929, at page 4026, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said:

For myself, Mr. President, my conviction is that that power, surrendered in 1922, ought to be recaptured by Congress and redeposited where it belongs, in the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. President, I want to quote from Secretary of State Hull while he was a Member of the House. I served with him over there for 12 years. He is most estimable in every way, but I do not know how he is going to be able to reconcile his change of position on this question.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator does not know, perhaps, that at a much later date Mr. Hull spoke in regard to this question, after he had drafted the tariff platform of the 1932 Democratic National Convention at Chicago. I presume the Senator is about to read from something Mr. Hull said in 1929, is he not?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am about to read from remarks made by him on May 13, 1929.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Hull spoke on this question about 3½ years later, and if the Senator will allow me to give that later authority I should like to do so.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would be very glad to have it.

Mr. LONG. I should like to bring it up to date, because Mr. Hull was then on his way to becoming Secretary of State. Here is what he said on May 19, 1932:

I am unalterably opposed to section 315 of the tariff act and demand its speedy repeal. I strongly condemn the proposed course of the Republican Party, which contemplates the enlargement and retention of this provision, with such additional authority to the President as would practically vest in him the supreme taxing power of the Nation contrary to the plainest and most fundamental provisions of the Constitution—a vast and uncontrolled power, larger than has been surrendered by one great coordinate department of government to another since the British House of Commons wrenched the taxing power from an autocratic king.

I am quoting from Mr. Hull speaking 3 years later than the quotation which the Senator from Iowa is about to read.

I quote further from Mr. Hull:

The proposed enlargement and broad expansion of the provisions and functions of the flexible tariff clause is astonishing, is undoubtedly unconstitutional, and is violative of the functions of the American Congress. Not since the Commons wrenched from an English king the power and authority to control taxation has there been a transfer of taxing power back to the head of a government on a basis so broad and unlimited as is proposed in the pending bill. As has been said on a former occasion, "This is too much power for a bad man to have or for a good man to want."

That is from Mr. Hull speaking in 1932, and saying that a bad man should not have this power and that a good man would not take it.

Mr. President, there came a time when George Washington was importuned to accept some of the powers that belonged to the law-making body, and Washington declined to accept them. There came a time when Lincoln was importuned to assert a right and to allow Congress to abdicate; but Lincoln declined to do so. Jackson also declined to do so. In this particular case Mr. Hull, after making these remarks on the 19th day of May 1932, went over to Chicago and drafted the Democratic platform, and the plank is now in the Democratic platform, and reads:

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference.

After that had been done, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt caught the spirit—or already had the spirit, no doubt—and said on July 30, 1932:

It is a difficult and highly technical matter to determine cost of production abroad and at home. A commission of experts can be trusted to find such facts. Then the facts should be left to speak for themselves, free from Presidential interference.

That is the statement of Mr. Roosevelt. I have quoted the statement of Mr. Hull; I have quoted the Democratic platform; and the distinguished Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee at this time, then the ranking minority member of the committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], said this on May 29, 1930:

It is all wrong that such an opportunity as resides in this flexible tariff provision should be afforded to any President of the United States. That statement applies, of course, to a Democratic President.

I just want the Senator from Iowa to know that the pledge of the party is not 3 years ancient. There are some people who feel that after 3 or 4 years have passed that such a pledge does not amount to anything in this quick-changing time and scene of passing events, but this is the platform of the Democratic Party.

If I may be permitted, at this point, while I read it into the RECORD yesterday, I should like to have an opportunity to read again a little quotation. The Democratic Party went on record in favor of telling the truth. There are many who do not believe that, but it is a fact. Whenever I am contradicted on that point I want to assert again that the party did go on record and actually said it was telling the truth and that it wanted the people to believe it was telling the truth. I am going to read that statement again. I read from the Democratic platform of 1932:

We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe.

The people are entitled to know, said the platform, in plain terms the contract that we are asking them to sign. What are those plain terms?

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference.

Is there anybody in the United States who does not understand those plain terms which they said were a covenant with the people? Is there anyone who does not understand the words of the Secretary of State in the year 1932 on the 19th day of the month of May? Is there anyone who does not understand what President Roosevelt meant when he said what I have just read? I have numerous other statements to that effect.

But what have we before us now? We have no issue except whether the Democratic Party is going to tell the American people, "We made that statement, but we have decided we are not going to do it", or whether they are going to say, "We made that promise, you elected us on our promise, and we will be an honest party and keep our word and go through with what we have advocated and what we pledged to the people." That is the issue, not as ancient as 1929, but made in 1932.

I thank the Senator from Iowa for yielding to me.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I want to insert in the RECORD one further quotation. Under date of May 13, 1929, at page 1211 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Representative Hull, now Secretary of State Hull, said:

Mr. Chairman, the proposed revision provides in effect that the valuation by appraisers shall be final except by appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury. This astonishing proposal strips bare the jurisdiction of the Customs Court and its authority to adjudicate unquestioned and hitherto unchallenged rights of the citizens. This is bureaucracy run mad. The very suggestion that the most valuable property rights of the citizen can be disposed of or dealt with as a finality by the Treasury Department without the slightest recourse to the courts of the country is wholly impossible to understand.

Then he proceeded to make various deductions with reference thereto.

What I want to suggest here is the trend we are taking all along the line. I have shown the transfer of power to the Executive from the legislative branch of the Government. We have it involved in a hundred ways. We find that now it is proposed to transfer the power to control crop production by the Secretary of Agriculture. We have a processing tax which is a penalty upon the producer all along the line.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me at that point to enable me to read a letter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield for the purpose indicated.

Mr. FESS. There has just been handed to me a letter discussing the operation of the processing tax on farm products, especially with reference to hogs. I have not received at any time any statement from any individual that is quite so succinct and quite so convincing as the letter I have in my hand at this moment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio from whom the letter came?

Mr. FESS. This is a letter from a citizen of my State living only a short distance from my home. I know him to be a very distinguished agriculturalist. Its importance rises out of the fact that the writer of the letter does not belong to the party to which I belong. He belongs to the administration party. He is an honored and distinguished member of that party in my State. Here is the statement he makes in the letter to me:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 24, 1934.

Hon. SIMEON D. FESS,
United States Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Having been in the Capital for some 2 or 3 weeks in reference to the stockyard code, in which I am interested, I have tried on various occasions to interest somebody in some way in the drastic steps of the processing tax on hogs as it exists today. Let me illustrate to you in this way:

I sold one hog weighing 250 pounds at 3½ cents per pound, the hog costing the killer $8.75. The processing tax on this hog was 57 percent of the gross sale, making the hog cost the packer $13.73.

Now, Senator, I want you to know that at no time in the history of any nation on earth was there ever a tax levied in time of war, peace, or pestilence that equaled 57 percent of the gross sale of the product. This is not only true in the case of this one hog but it is true in the case of 100 hogs, 1,000 hogs, or a trainload of hogs.

In my conversation with some of the agricultural experts while here a gentleman told me that his wife had invited him to come to dinner early, and he being in the Agricultural Department, she stated that she had meat for dinner. After the dinner was over she informed him that she ate two slices of the fresh side, the maid ate one, and he ate the balance; that the pound of fresh side she had purchased that afternoon cost 54 cents per pound. He inquired why that great cost. I explained the best I knew how that after the processor had received the hog costing $8.75, and the processing amounted to $4.98 on top of that, making the cost $13.73, that $13.73 was the cost of the hog in the packer cooler.

Before this hog could get to the consumer it had to be cut up, wrapped, packed, carted to transportation, transported, transported the second time to the ultimate retailer, uncrated, unpacked, cut up, sold over the counter, distributed by deliverymen to the consumer.

When the gentleman grasped this, he said, "My God, I cannot see why it did not cost me 75 cents a pound!"

Now, Senator, when a processing tax on hogs is 57 percent of the ultimate sale price, the hogs in Chicago today cost on an average of less than $3.50 per hundredweight, cattle on the same market cost $9.50 without a processing tax; lambs on the same market without a processing tax, $10.25; calves on the same market, $7.50.

Is there no way before this adjournment of Congress that that ruinous processing tax can be removed from the hogs. If that can be done, in one day the hog market in all interior points will jump from $2 to $2.50 per hundredweight.

Two hundred million dollars has been appropriated for the processing tax on cattle. Is there no way that could be diverted to finish paying for the pigs immolated last fall, and the residue toward the farmer for the corn-hog plan, thus relieving the hog of that excessive tax?

With a tax that high, no man, whatever his occupation, will consume a product with that tax. Farmers, and all classes of people, will buy another species of meat that they know does not have a ruinous tax. In some instances beef sold over the same counter as pork is cheaper in certain cuts than pork, but the consumer is opposed to the tax, and if it could be removed, he would find the greatest boon to the farmer that had happened to him for many a day. Besides the $2 to $3 immediate rise in the hogs, all doubts and uncertainty would be removed as to the future processing tax on cattle.

The farmer would know where he stood. The Southwest is full of cattle. The eastern pastures need them. The Southwest would immediately disport the cattle to the eastern pastures. Can you not see the benefit to all parties concerned? Even the railroads would have a general pick-up by increased carriage of livestock.

I do not want to bother you with a lengthy argument or a lengthy sob story, but if something is not done before the adjournment of this Congress to relieve the farmer of that tax, I am afraid that before this thing is over with, the U.S.A. will not stand for the United States of America but for the United States of Agriculture. I know wherein I speak, having at one time occupied the position of the largest individual livestock shipper in the United States. I know the farmer, and I know his needs. Ninety-eight percent of the farmers in the agricultural districts are opposed to this processing tax on hogs. The only persons in favor are those who are receiving $4 a day and mileage occupying the position that the snoopers did when snooping under the Volstead Act. Now they count the farmer's pigs, measure his acreage to see if he has been chiseling, and to tell him when and how to sell and to reap, and to wet nurse all of his activities.

Yours very truly,

FRANK DEWITT,
Washington Court House, Ohio.

Washington Court House is very close to my home. I know this gentleman as an outstanding citizen. As I have stated, his letter cannot be of a political or partisan character because he is a distinguished Democrat; and I read it and put it in the RECORD for what it is worth.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is the Senator from Ohio aware that in the sugar bill there is included a penalty section which provides that if a dealer in a commodity on which there is a processing tax makes any false statement with reference to the processing tax or its effect on prices, and so forth, he is subject to a fine and penalty and imprisonment?

Mr. FESS. I am; and the worst feature of that is that it is not the result of law. It is the result of an agreement that is later on announced by the Secretary of Agriculture in pursuance of a general law giving him power to say not only what the law is but what is to be the penalty for its violation, and how the penalty is to be administered. That is the un-American part of it, for which I do not think the country is going to stand very long.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, because of the numerous interruptions, I find that I shall not be able to conclude my remarks tonight. For today, therefore, I yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, has the Senator concluded his speech?

Mr. DICKINSON. For today.

Mr. LONG. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] if he wishes to speak at this time. Does the Senator wish to speak now?

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should very much rather let my remarks go over until tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. LONG. The Senator would prefer to take that course?

Mr. WALCOTT. Very much.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to interfere; but if I will not interfere with the Senator from Connecticut, who has so kindly agreed to wait, since I may not be here very many more days, I should like to conclude the remarks that I announced the other afternoon I should finish at an early date.

I first send up an amendment which I ask to have printed and lie on the table, and also ask to have it printed in the RECORD, I intend to offer this amendment as a substitute for the pending bill. This amendment is the bill which was passed by the last Congress, known as the "Harrison bill", and was vetoed by President Hoover.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table, and, without objection, will also be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG'S amendment, in the nature of a substitute, is to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 336. Recommendations for adjustment of duties.—(a) Upon the request of the President of the United States, or upon its own motion, or upon application of any interested party showing good and sufficient reason therefor, the Commission shall investigate and ascertain the differences in the cost of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article. If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that the duty imposed by law upon the foreign article does not equalize the differences in the cost of production, when efficiently and economically produced, of the domestic article and of the foreign article when produced in the principal competing country or countries, then the Commission shall report to the President and to the Congress its findings and its order with respect to such increases or decreases in the duty upon the foreign article as the Commission finds to be necessary in order to equalize such differences in the cost of production. Any such increased or decreased duty may include the transfer of the article from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list, a change in the form of duty, or a change in classification. The report shall be accompanied by a statement of the Commission setting forth the findings of the Commission with respect to the differences in cost of production, the elements of cost included in the cost of production of the respective articles as ascertained by the Commission, and any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commission. Sixty days after the date of the report to Congress of such order by said Commission, such changes in classification shall take effect, and such increased or decreased duties shall be levied, collected, and paid on such articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila): Provided, That if before the expiration of such period of 60 days the Congress then in session shall have by joint resolution declared said order of said Commission rejected, then the changes in classification, forms of rate, or increases or decreases in rates of duty specified in such order of said Commission shall not go into effect.

"The President, upon receipt of any such report of the Commission, shall promptly transmit the report to the Congress with his recommendations, if any, with respect to the increase or decrease in duty proposed by the Commission.

"Any bill having for its object the carrying out, in whole or in part, of the recommendations made by the Commission in any such report shall not include any item not included in such report; and in the consideration of such bill, either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate, no amendment thereto shall be considered which is not germane to the items included in such report.

"(b) No report shall be made by the Commission under this section unless the determination of the Commission with respect thereto is reached after an investigation by the Commission during the course of which the Commission shall have held hearings and given reasonable public notice of such hearings, and reasonable opportunity for the parties interested to be present, produce evidence, and to be heard. The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable rules of procedure as may be necessary to execute its functions under this section.

"(c) In ascertaining the differences in costs of production under this section, the Commission shall take into consideration, insofar as it finds it practicable—

"(1) The differences in conditions of production, including wages, costs of materials, and other items in cost of production of like or similar articles in the United States and in competing foreign countries;

"(2) Costs of transportation;

"(3) Other costs including the cost of containers and coverings of whatever nature and other charges and expenses incident to placing the article in condition, packed ready for delivery, storage costs in the principal market or markets of the United States and of the principal competing country or countries, and costs of reconditioning or repacking wherever incurred;

"(4) Differences between the domestic and foreign article in packing and containers, and in condition in which received in the principal markets of the United States:

"(5) Differences in wholesale selling prices of domestic and foreign articles in the principal markets of the United States insofar as such prices are indicative of costs of production, provided such costs cannot be satisfactorily obtained;

"(6) Advantages granted to a foreign producer by a foreign government or by a person, partnership, corporation, or association in a foreign country;

"(7) Any other advantages or disadvantages in competition which increase or decrease in a definitely determinable amount the total cost at which domestic or foreign articles may be delivered in the principal market or markets of the United States; and

"(8) Definition of costs of transportation: Costs of transportation for the purposes of this section shall be held to include, insofar as applicable:

"(1) Freight charges and all other charges incident to transportation, including transit insurance, costs of loading and unloading, and port charges and landing charges. These costs shall be computed to such principal market or markets of the United States as may most nearly insure equal competitive opportunity to domestic articles and like or similar foreign articles in the principal consuming region or regions of the United States. If this purpose may be best accomplished thereby, such costs on domestic articles and on like or similar foreign articles shall be computed to different principal markets of the United States.

"(2) (A) In the case of an imported article, the cost of transporting such article from the areas of substantial production in the principal competing country to the principal port of importation of such article into the United States; and (B) in the case of a domestic article, the cost of transporting such article from the areas of substantial production that can reasonably be expected to ship the article thereto, to the principal port of importation into the United States of the like or similar competitive article."

SEC. 2. All uncompleted investigations instituted prior to the approval of this act under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 prior to its amendment by this act, including investigations in which the President has not proclaimed changes in classification or in basis of value or increases or decreases in rates of duty, shall be dismissed without prejudice; but the information and evidence secured by the Commission in any such investigation may be given due consideration in any investigation instituted under the provisions of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as amended by this act.

SEC. 3. Consumers counsel: (a) There shall be an office in the legislative branch of the Government to be known as the office of the Consumers' Counsel of the United States Tariff Commission. The office shall be in charge of a counsel to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No person shall be eligible for appointment as counsel if such person has at any time acted in tariff matters before Congress or the United States Tariff Commission, either on his own behalf or as attorney, at law or in fact, or as legislative agent. The counsel shall be appointed for a term of 4 years and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The counsel shall not actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as counsel.

(b) It shall be the duty of the counsel to appear in the interest of and represent the consuming public in any proceeding before the Commission. In any proceeding before the Commission in which the counsel has entered an appearance, the counsel shall have the right to offer any relevant testimony and argument, oral or written, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses and parties to the proceeding, and shall have the right to have subpena or other process of the Commission issue in his behalf. Whenever the counsel finds that it is in the interest of the consuming public to have the Commission furnish any information at its command or conduct any investigation as to differences in costs of production or other matters within its authority, then the counsel shall so certify to the Commission, specifying in the certificate the information or investigation desired. Thereupon the Commission shall promptly furnish to the counsel the information or promptly conduct the investigation and place the results thereof at the disposal of the counsel.

(c) Within the limitations of such appropriations as the Congress may from time to time provide, the counsel is authorized (subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended) to appoint and fix the salaries of assistants and clerks, and is authorized to make such expenditure as may be necessary for the performance of the duties vested in him.

SEC. 4. International economic conference: That the President is respectfully requested to initiate a movement for an international economic conference with a view to (a) lowering excessive tariff duties and eliminating discriminatory and unfair trade practices, and other economic barriers affecting international trade, (b) preventing retaliatory tariff measures and economic wars, and (c) promoting fair, equal, and friendly trade and commercial relations between nations; but with the understanding that any agreement, treaty, or arrangement which changes any tariff then in existence, or in any way affects the revenue of the United States, must first be approved by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi how long he intends to continue the session tonight?

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped we could remain in session until about half past 6.

Mr. LONG. Well, that is a little bit late. I do not care to speak that long; but I will proceed for a while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

[Mr. LONG addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about 1 hour and 30 minutes he yielded the floor for the day. His speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of William W. Durbin, of Ohio, to be Register of the Treasury, in place of Edward E. Jones.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Herman Oliphant, of Baltimore, Md., to be general counsel for the Department of the Treasury.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Leon Dominian, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 3 and a consul general to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Claudius T. Murchison, of Chapel Hill, N.C., to be Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in the Department of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

CONVENTION ON THE NATIONALITY OF WOMEN

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report back favorably a treaty, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Nevada would tell us what this treaty is. I do not suppose it is anything in which I am interested, but I am rather afraid of treaties.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is a treaty on the subject of the nationality of women, growing out of the Seventh International Conference of American States at Montevideo. Article 1 of the treaty provides that nationals of the respective countries, without regard to sex, shall have the same privileges and rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive J, Seventy-third Congress, second session, the convention on the nationality of women adopted at the Seventh International Conference of American States and signed on December 26, 1933, by plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and of other countries represented in the said conference, at Montevideo, Uruguay, which was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Who, after having exhibited their full powers, which were found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE 1

There shall be no distinction based on sex as regards nationality, in their legislation or in their practice.

ARTICLE 2

The present convention shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Uruguay shall transmit authentic certified copies to the governments for the aforementioned purpose of ratification. The instrument of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE 3

The present convention will enter into force between the high contracting parties in the order in which they deposit their respective ratifications.

ARTICLE 4

The present convention shall remain in force indefinitely, but may be denounced by means of 1 year's notice given to the Pan American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory governments. After the expiration of this period the convention shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces but shall remain in effect for the remaining high contracting parties.

ARTICLE 5

The present convention shall be open for the adherence and accession of the States which are not signatories. The corresponding instruments shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union which shall communicate them to the other high contracting parties.

In witness whereof, the following plenipotentiaries have signed this convention in Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French and hereunto affix their respective seals in the city of Montevideo, Republic of Uruguay, this 26th day of December 1933.

HONDURAS

The delegation of Honduras adheres to the Convention on Equality of Nationality, with the reservations and limitations which the constitution and laws of our country determine.

M. PAZ BARAONA
AUGUSTO C. COELLO
LUIS BOGRÁN

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The delegation of the United States of America, in signing the Convention on the Nationality of Women, makes the reservation that the agreement on the part of the United States is, of course and of necessity, subject to congressional action.

ALEXANDER W. WEDDELL
J. BUTLER WRIGHT

EL SALVADOR

Reservation to the effect that in El Salvador the convention cannot be the object of immediate ratification, but that it will be necessary to consider previously the desirability of reforming the existing naturalization law, ratification being obtained only in the event that such legislative reform is undertaken, and after it may have been effected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive J, Seventy-third Congress, second session, the Convention on the Nationality of Women adopted at the seventh international conference of American States and signed on December 26, 1933, by plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and of other countries represented in the said conference at Montevideo, Uruguay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification [putting the question]. Two thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the injunction of secrecy be removed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy is removed.

CLAUDIUS T. MURCHISON

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination of Claudius T. Murchison to be Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is that the matter about which the Senator from North Carolina spoke to me today?

Mr. BAILEY. It is.

Mr. McNARY. What is the name of the nominee?

Mr. BAILEY. It is the nomination of Claudius T. Murchison, of North Carolina, to be Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. McNARY. Is there now a vacancy in the office?

Mr. BAILEY. There is.

Mr. McNARY. And the committee reported the nomination unanimously?

Mr. BAILEY. The report is not unanimous. I have seen 12 members of the committee. It was discussed in the committee meeting.

Mr. McNARY. Has any objection been manifested to the nominee?

Mr. BAILEY. There is no opposition whatever. All 12 agree upon the confirmation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is the gentleman who has been nominated to succeed Mr. Thorp. Mr. Thorp's nomination was withdrawn, and this gentleman was appointed to take his place.

Mr. McNARY. I now recall the history of the matter. The nomination of Mr. Thorp came before the Commerce Committee, and there was opposition to him, largely from the chairman of the committee. The result was that his name was withdrawn by the President, and this man has been appointed in his stead?

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator says he has polled the committee?

Mr. BAILEY. I have polled the committee to the extent of 12 members. I have not seen the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. He has left the city, I understand. I have not seen the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], because I have not been able to find him. I have not found the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], nor the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. All the others I have seen. The Senator from New York is now here.

Mr. COPELAND. I never heard of the nominee before.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the position is a very important one. This afternoon, when the Senator spoke to me hurriedly, I did not recall the case, and I did not make the proper statement. I think the committee should take action on this nomination in a rather formal way. If the Senator will let it go over until tomorrow, I think we can take it up then. For that reason, I object to the consideration of the nomination at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The calendar is in order.

CALENDAR—TREATIES

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the treaties on the calendar be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaties will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

REGISTER OF THE TREASURY

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the nomination has been reported today from the Committee on Finance of W. W. Durbin to be Register of the Treasury. The two Senators from Ohio have conferred with me, and it is desired that this nomination be confirmed. I ask unanimous consent to act on the nomination today.

Mr. McNARY. What is the position to which the nominee has been named.

Mr. HARRISON. He has been nominated to be Register of the Treasury.

Mr. McNARY. Has the committee acted on the nomination today?

Mr. HARRISON. The committee has been polled, and there is no opposition to the nomination that I have heard from anyone. I have talked with both the Senators from Ohio, and there does not seem to be any opposition.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed legislative session.

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 25, 1934, at 10:30 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1934

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, countless are Thy witnesses. The numberless stars are but a little part of them and the prayers and the aspirations of the hearts of men will never cease to praise Thee. Humbled amid Thy manifold glories, may we find a blessed assurance in the simplicity of the Galilean Teacher. Heavenly Father, hasten the time when man shall love Thee as Thou hast loved the world and when the sword and the spear shall be made into the plowshare and the pruning hook and the desert shall blossom as the rose. Strengthen us for the work of today; help us to do it faithfully, cheerfully, and courageously, and may we be counted worthy in Thy sight and have the just approbation of our fellow citizens. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 9530. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Pierce, a legal subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Puget Sound, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as "The Narrows";

H.J.Res. 345. Joint resolution to provide funds to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of the acts approved April 21, 1934, and April 7, 1934, relating, respectively, to cotton and to cattle and dairy products, and for other purposes; and

H.J.Res. 347. Joint resolution to prohibit the sale of arms or munitions of war in the United States under certain conditions.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3040. An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in actions at law.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On May 23, 1934:

H.R. 878. An act for the relief of Kathryn Thurston;

H.R. 1254. An act for the relief of H. Forsell;

H.R. 4516. An act for the relief of B. Edward Westwood;

H.R. 5405. An act for the relief of Nicola Valerio;

H.R. 7356. An act to provide, in case of the disability of senior circuit judges, for the exercise of their powers and the performance of their duties by the other circuit judges; and

H.R. 8208. An act to provide for the exploitation for oil, gas, and other minerals on the lands comprising Fort Morgan Military Reservation, Ala.

On May 24, 1934:

H.R. 3673. An act to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 5950. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

CAPT. FRANK HAMER

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in taking this fragment of time is to congratulate the Nation and the State of Texas and Capt. Frank Hamer, ex-Texas Ranger, and other officers who participated, for the work done in ridding our State of its public enemy no. 1, Mr. Clyde Barrow.

I feel, generally speaking, that in matters of this sort the attention of the country should be directed to the fact that efficiency still exists in the ranks of those who have to do with the enforcement of our country's laws. The State of Texas, of course, has been equipped for many years with a constabulary which, in my opinion, has done great service to the Nation without reference to the infinite good they have done the people of the State of Texas in the invaluable service they have rendered from the time of their creation as an official group for the protection of the peace and dignity of my great State.

I do not want to take too much time this morning, but while Mr. Frank Hamer was not at the time of the apprehension of Clyde Barrow and his consort a member of the Texas Rangers, he had served as a ranger for over 25 years, and it goes without saying that he knew his business. I think it would be well for the country generally to find out just exactly how the problem of apprehending this man was worked out in the brief period of time after Captain Hamer took his trail. I would suggest to the Department of Justice that they might learn something of benefit were they to look into the actual machinations and development of the plan which finally brought this career of crime to an end.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute; I wish to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not my colleague think that the most efficacious way of stopping organized thugs in the country would be to adopt Texas Ranger Hamer's slogan of "shooting the devil out of them"?

Mr. KLEBERG. It might be an excellent idea to let men such as Hamer work things out in the way they feel is best fitted.

Mr. BLANTON. Hamer's method is the quickest and most effective way of disposing of them. We do not capture alive and try rattlesnakes. We shoot their heads off before they strike.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 384 and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 144]

Allen	Cummings	Kee	Rayburn
Allgood	De Priest	Kelly, Ill.	Reid, Ill.
Andrews, N.Y.	Dickstein	Kennedy, Md.	Robinson, Utah
Auf der Heide	Dingell	Kniffin	Rogers, N.H.

Britten	Fiesinger	McFadden	Smith, W.Va.
Brown, Mich.	Fitzgibbons	McGugin	Studley
Brumm	Foulkes	Maloney, La.	Sumners, Texas
Buchanan	Frey	Marland	Swank
Buckbee	Gavagan	Marshall	Taylor, Colo.
Bulwinkle	Gillespie	Martin, Colo.	Tinkham
Cannon, Wis.	Goodwin	Merritt	Tobey
Carley	Goss	Miller	Underwood
Carpenter, Kans.	Green	Milligan	Wadsworth
Carpenter, Nebr.	Griffin	Monaghan, Mont.	Waldron
Celler	Haines	Moynihan, Ill.	Wallgren
Chapman	Hamilton	Murdock	White
Chase	Hart	Norton	Whittington
Chavez	Hughes	Oliver, Ala.	Wood, Ga.
Connery	James	Palmisano	Wood, Mo.
Cooper, Ohio.	Jeffers	Peterson
Corning	Johnson, W.Va.	Pettengill
Crump	Kahn	Prall

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eighteen Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. ROGERS, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HILL, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. KVALE, the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Goss, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. JAMES, did not answer this roll call because they were engaged in conducting, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, an investigation pursuant to the instructions of the House.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee be excused from attendance for such time as may be necessary this afternoon. They are in a very important committee meeting, so I am advised. I am not going to enumerate their names.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman has made a sufficient announcement.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if permission should not also be asked for the members of the Ways and Means Committee? I am not authorized to make such a request for them, but this committee, too, is holding a very important meeting this afternoon. If the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are to be excused, I think the members of the Committee on Ways and Means should be excused, too.

Mr. BYRNS. I hope if the gentleman is going to be absent he will not, between now and the time he leaves, make any more points of no quorum.

Mr. TREADWAY. The measure that has been called up this morning is so important that a very important financial bill was laid aside to take it up, and it seemed to me that we should have a full attendance.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I state to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to the Members of the House that it is extremely important that every Member stay in his seat today, because it is necessary to act not only upon the bill that is about to be considered but upon the deposit-insurance bill as well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill (S. 1595) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establisment who served during the World War, taken from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what this bill is?

Mr. RANKIN. It is a bill extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know if this is done in order to keep intact the clear record of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation of not having any meetings this session?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know, but it will certainly help carry out the record of the gentleman from Massachusetts in not voting for benefits for World War veterans except under pressure.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has not said anything about having meetings this session.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the minority leader desire to be heard on any legislation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] calls up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 384

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 2837, to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill or any amendment recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution to make in order the Wilcox bill (H.R. 2837) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes. The rule provides for 2 hours' general debate on the bill.

Since there is an hour on the rule, which will be largely devoted to a discussion of the merits of the bill, I offer a motion to amend the resolution by striking out the word "two", in line 10, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "one", which means reducing general debate from 2 hours to 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia offers a committee amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. This is not a committee amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the committee has never acted on the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts not prepared to consent to this amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is in charge of the resolution and the time. He has the floor and he may offer any amendment he wants to offer.

The SPEAKER. The point of order of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is sustained.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I question the gentleman's authority to amend the rule without a meeting of the Rules Committee.

Mr. COX. I am handling the rule for the committee, and I think it is my privilege to offer an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What would be the use of having meetings of the Rules Committee if any one Member could come in here and offer a committee amendment without consulting the other members of the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] represents the majority of the committee and has the floor. He can offer such amendments as he desires. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I ask for a ruling by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is in charge of the matter and has a perfect right to offer an amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a Republican filibuster pure and simple.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 244, nays 87, answered "present" 1, not voting 99, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to proceed for one moment to make an announcement.

My colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CRUMP] is unavoidably absent on account of important business. If he were present he would vote "yea."

FEDERAL LOANS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SMITH of Virginia submitted the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

[H. Rept. No. 1759, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

CONSIDERATION OF S. 3404

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report (to accompany House Resolution 368):

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration House Resolution 368, reports same to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

House Resolution 368

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3404, a bill authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BLANTON reserved all points of order.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly apparent that the gentlemen of the minority are very much interested in this Wilcox bill. They were probably provoked into initiating this apparent filibuster by the motion made by me to reduce general debate from 2 hours to 1 hour. I regret that, possibly, I was not fully advised of the interest in the bill at the time I offered the motion.

I certainly desire to be altogether decent and fair with the minority and to accommodate their needs, Mr. Speaker, I wish to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee, 45 minutes of the 1 hour of time which is to be devoted to the rule, to be yielded by him as he may see fit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this Wilcox proposal, as contained in H.R. 2837, is no new matter. It deals with a question that has been before the House many times. It simply provides for the establishment of what is designated as "the Everglades National Park", an area to be comprised of 1,300,000 acres of land located in the extreme southern portion of the State of Florida. The State of Florida owns about 350,000 acres, which it proposes to donate. The remainder of the area is to be acquired by donation. The Government is not expected to expend one dime in the acquisition of this property, and the bill provides that no expenditure whatever shall be made by the Government on the development of the park for 5 years after the adoption of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a moment there?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why is this unusual amendment added to the bill, that the Government shall not spend any money for 5 years after all the area is acquired?

Mr. COX. This concession on the part of the sponsors of the bill is made, I dare say, out of consideration for the needs of the Treasury of the United States, and I dare say for the further purpose of popularizing the whole question with the Membership of the House.

Mr. HASTINGS. Has such an amendment ever been added to any other bill creating a national park?

Mr. COX. I do not know of any instance in which that has been done.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that he should have someone explain the bill before we continue the debate.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is perfectly acquainted with the proposal and is in position to discuss the question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I know about it, and I wanted the other Members of the House to also know about it.

Mr. COX. I must not consume the time I have by answering further questions at this time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the minority has not been conducting a filibuster, but in view of the character of the bill to be made in order by this rule must insist on its rights.

The Committee on Rules reported the resolution making this bill in order as it is printed, without amendment. Under authority of the committee, by designation of its chairman, the gentleman from Georgia was intrusted, on the part of the committee, as its spokesman, to present this resolution to the membership of the House.

Now, it may be that the Speaker was right in his ruling that when the gentleman from Georgia, as spokesman of the committee, was presenting the views and action of the committee to the House he could at that time in his individual capacity, as a Member of the House, alter the action of the Committee on Rules, which he was designated to present. It may be that he was within the strict letter of the rule, but he certainly did not act as spokesman and trustee of the committee when he altered the action of the committee without consulting its members. For that reason, and because his action was not in accordance with the action of the committee, we had a right to show our protest.

The bill to be made in order is a bill almost as important as it is vicious, and for that reason those of us who oppose this steal insist on having adequate general debate in order to present the facts in the case to the House and to the people. For that reason this action in cutting down the time of general debate by two was not playing the game and was an invasion of the rights of the majority of the House.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from New Jersey overlooks the generosity of the majority in yielding almost all of its time on the rule. The gentleman is fair enough to concede that the cutting down of general debate was in the interest of economy of time and to promote the final consideration of the bill now pending before the House.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And to promote the chances of the bill by not affording adequate general discussion.

Mr. COX. I want to disclaim any intention to take advantage of the minority in moving to reduce the time of general debate. I had no idea of cutting off debate, for as far as I am personally concerned, you might debate it all day.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I wish to state that there is no question in my mind that the action of the gentleman from Georgia in offering his amendment was without consideration, and an inadvertence; that he did the best he could when he saw how his action was received by the minority, and the consequences that might follow; he then gave us three quarters of the time that his amendment deprived us of.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman will recall that the Committee on Rules very reluctantly granted 2 hours general debate, and that the request for a longer time than the usual 1 hour to which we confine matters generally, was asked for by the sponsors of the bill. The 2 hours for general debate was not demanded by any opponent. The sponsors asked for 2 hours so that they might more adequately explain the bill, and so the minority has not been interfered with.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not talking about what occurred in the Committee on Rules, but I am talking about the consequence of the change of action and the manner in which it was done.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. If, in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], the sponsors of the bill were the ones who asked for the extension of time, why is it that the sponsors, and those in favor of the bill, did not explain the bill to the House before asking the opposition to go on with their statements?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is a question that should be answered by the gentleman in charge of the rule when opportunity is accorded. I do think that the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts is to the point. I think, before this debate continues after my time expires, that the bill should be explained to the House by its protagonists, before we are called upon to use any further time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is the gentleman seriously contending that there is not any Member of this House who does not know about this particularly famous bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is not an old Member of the House who does not know about it, because what they have known in the past about this bill has precluded its passage, although it has been kicking around here for years.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is one of the youngest looking and yet one of the oldest Members of this House, and he ought to know.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why not also say the handsomest?

Mr. LEHLBACH. This bill is to create a snake swamp park on perfectly worthless land in the State of Florida, so the fact that it would not cost the Government anything for the initial acquisition of this worthless swamp is the height of irony, but if the Government takes this and builds a road at a cost of $1,000,000 to get to it, because it will take $1,000,000 to make it accessible, and then pours countless millions into that swamp, it will do something that adds value to the surrounding real estate in Florida. This is the most perfect example of supersalesmanship of Florida real estate, although we have seen many of them, that has ever yet been made public. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] please explain the bill at this time?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is satisfied with the debate up to this point, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARKS). The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is another old friend. It has a history, but I am not going to tell about the history; I am going to tell about the bill. I have assumed from the attitude which has been taken by the proponents of the bill that they had not any satisfactory explanation for the bill and that they propose to put it through the House under cover of darkness. If they had a satisfactory explanation of it, they would give it. I can tell only a little bit about it, because it has been impossible to find out the real heart of it. It came in here a good many years ago, and at that time it was generally talked around here that before we got through with it it would cost $100,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did anybody in any position of responsibility or respect for their opinion make any such statement as that? Who made such a wild statement?

Mr. TABER. I hope the gentleman will watch what the debate develops here and see what he thinks about that question when we get through.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a fact that Mr. Speaker Longworth, in ruling on some parliamentary phase of this bill, stated that this bill, making a park out of 3,400 square miles of land, would involve future disbursements on the part of the Government of many millions, including $700,000 per mile for roads? Does the gentleman recall the ruling of the late Speaker upon that?

Mr. TABER. I think that is the situation.

Mr. CULKIN. So that it is a matter of record that it will be extremely costly.

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes. There is no question about that.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Not at this time. I have been in hope that the gentleman would go on and attempt to explain the bill, because I think that the House of Representatives, when called on to pass a bill of this character, ought to know what it is about. The operations the proponents of the bill are going through here indicate that they do not want it explained; they want it in the dark. I am going to tell you a few things about it so that the House can get a little bit of a picture of it. This bill provides for establishing the Everglades Park, and that Everglades Park covers, as I understand, one-million-three-hundred-thousand-and-odd acres. It includes three whole counties and maybe more. I know that much of one of those counties is supposed to be owned almost entirely by Barron Collier, a leading Democrat in New York City. Out of the 1,300,000 acres I understand that 300,000 acres have already been acquired by the State of Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I was in hope that the gentleman would explain his bill, and I hope its proponents will do it in their own time. It would have been fair if they had explained it before we started, and I do not believe that I can yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] until he explains this bill. If the gentleman would take his time and explain the bill the way folks generally do when they have something important they want the House to consider, we would have before us then what the proponents think about it, so that we could talk about it, but we have not got that now. That is not the way matters of this importance ought to be brought before the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILCOX. But the gentleman——

Mr. TABER. I decline to yield to the gentleman to explain his bill in my time.

Under ordinary circumstances, if the proponents had come here and attempted to explain this bill before we started, I would yield to him as I go along; but in view of the fact that they did not, I do not feel I ought to yield to them to explain the bill in my time. I think they ought to explain the bill in their own time, if there is any explanation, and if there is not any explanation, the House of Representatives ought to turn the bill down.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman himself is not acquainted with the bill, then how can the gentleman be certain of anything he is now saying?

Mr. TABER. Oh, I am only certain from what investigation I have been able to make, and the things I have found out about it have rather decidedly made me feel that the House of Representatives, if they knew about the bill, would not be for it.

As I said before, Barron Collier, a leading Democrat of New York City, is supposed to own one of the three counties. I do not know that as a certainty, but I have received letters from different parts of the country telling me that fact.

The Secretary of the Interior goes down there and looks over the place, and I read from the report of the committee, on page 3, on this particular subject:

With the help of Dr. Fairchild and Judge Ritter, president of the association—

I do not know whether you have heard of Judge Ritter or not, but, in any event, the Committee on the Judiciary is investigating him—and through the kindness of Mr. Henry L. Doherty—

Did you ever hear of him? Mr. Henry L. Doherty is head of the Cities Service Co., which is now being investigated by the Federal Trade Commission. He was chairman of the President's birthday ball committee. He is the owner, as a side line, of a chain of hotels in southern Florida, which would more or less be benefited by the adoption of this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. This is the same Doherty whose daughter is now secretary to the legation abroad to which Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen is Minister?

Mr. TABER. I have heard so, but I do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And was not the Minister the first one who proposed this legislation?

Mr. TABER. No. I think the legislation goes back of that. Under her guidance the upbuilding of what it was going to cost the Federal Treasury was completed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. She is the one who brought the snakes up here to exhibit?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Speaking of Henry Doherty, who took Secretary Wilbur on that tour up Shark River, does not the gentleman now feel that the men who own this ground in the Everglades want to take Congress up Shark River?

Mr. TABER. Well, perhaps they do. Congress would be a minor part of it, because I do not suppose the Members of Congress pay a big portion of the taxes, but the taxpayers of the United States would be taken up Shark River with a vengeance.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have noticed in the past that when important pieces of legislation are to be considered the appropriate department of the Government sends out a questionnaire. Does the gentleman know whether they have done that in this instance? It was done in the case of the Bankhead cotton bill. The parties interested were consulted. I am wondering whether the alligators and the snakes have been consulted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has ever seen this territory?

Mr. TABER. No. I am sorry I have not. I am busy here all winter and am unable to go down and look it over.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In the language of General Johnson, "The gentleman has never seen nothing yet."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. In view of the testimony that is before us, not new information, because we do not have any and have not been given any, but in view of the testimony previously submitted, the gentleman could not see this neighborhood unless he owned an airplane. I assume from what the gentleman has just said as to his income that he does not own an airplane. He might get Mr. Doherty to lend him his.

Mr. TABER. I presume if any Member of Congress would go down there and look it over Mr. Doherty would be glad to oblige him, because it is very much in Mr. Doherty's interest to have this bill passed.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. No; not just at this moment.

Now, I want to read from an old report on page 14. This is a report that was put into the Senate in the Seventy-first Congress:

The State of Florida owns 20 to 25 percent of the lands and the balance is in the hands of a very few individuals and corporations.

On page 14 also—now, let us see what you are getting in for:

It is proposed to establish a Pan American highway which would include the existing highway down the Florida Peninsula and along the keys. The present road ends at lower Matecumbe Key, but it is proposed to extend it to Key West, thence by ferry to Cuba, thence by road across Cuba, thence by ferry to Yucatan, and thence by road to South America. If this project materializes, travel through southern Florida would be increased, and the proposed park area would be a feature of the Pan American highway. The nearest present or prospective national park is the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee, which is distant about 700 miles.

Well, now, you know that we are getting a little nearer to that Pan American highway. An estimate of $5,000,000 was included in the bill the Appropriations Committee is now considering, this amount to be spent for this Pan American highway. That is the truth.

Mr. KELLER. Not by way of Florida.

Mr. TABER. I do not know. It was for the Pan American highway. I think it was.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. McFADDEN. This development would also improve the value of the Miami Biltmore and other hotels which Doherty has recently purchased.

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; so he could entertain his Democratic friends. They seem to be the ones with enough money to go down there.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman think that Mr. Doherty ought to entertain the subscribers to Cities Service stock?

Mr. TABER. Oh, he does not want to see them! [Laughter.]

Mr. CULKIN. He has already given them a ride, I suppose.

Mr. TABER. It appears from page 8 of the hearing that they are going to build some roads down there. From page 4 of the hearing I want to read you how good the fishing is in that section of the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. When was this hearing held?

Mr. TABER. Oh, some time in 1931.

Mr. TREADWAY. It was not held on the present bill, then?

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; but on one of these bills.

This is the testimony of Mr. Albright:

I might say also that Mr. Kelsey is a fisherman; that he looks a little into the possibility of fishing down there. I am sorry to admit it, but he never caught any fish, but we had a fish jump into our boat.

[Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am interested in this fishing story. Did this happen before the Prohibition Act was repealed or afterward?

Mr. TABER. Well, I do not know; maybe they could do as well today.

It appears from some of the talk I have heard that this is supposed to be a duck preserve. It appears also that somebody has dug a channel from the sea into the fresh water and that the salt water has driven the ducks away. So the value of this area as a duck preserve is more or less destroyed.

These are some of the points of the bill.

I wish to read a little from page 5:

Mr. YON. Mr. Chairman, does this proposed park area take in the Royal Palm State Park down there?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it does.

Mr. YON. Well, there is a road that goes through from Miami down that far and then down to the cape.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Unfortunately, it is out of commission. The big storm of a couple of years ago put that out of commission.

He then goes on to tell how it would have to be rebuilt.

Now, this is the thing about which I wish you to think: We have had all kinds of rumors and talk about what this bill would cost, all kinds of estimates; we have had certain definite facts that point in that direction. The State of Florida proposes under this bill to give the land to the United States. Why would the State of Florida want to give this land, 1,300,000 acres, to the United States unless it expected to get a big appropriation out of the Federal Treasury? This is the thing in which I am especially interested. I want you to be serious about it; I want you to think about it. I expect if we pass this bill today we will be approached in the not far distant future with an effort to obtain countless millions out of the Federal Treasury for this development and the development of matters connected with it.

I do not like to oppose the Members from Florida, for they are my friends; but I feel that my responsibility as a Member of this House calls upon me to oppose this bill in the interest of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I feel as does the gentleman from New York—I do not want to be unfair to the Members from Florida—but does the gentleman recall that about 2 weeks ago one of the Members of Congress from Florida boasted that in the last 10 years Florida had received $500,000,000 of Federal funds?

Mr. TABER. That is about the truth; and if this bill passes, it will make $100,000,000 more, I am afraid.

I know of no way to stop these funds from coming out of the Federal Treasury except to refuse to pass such bills when they come up. This bill has been under consideration a long time in more ways than one, and it has invariably failed of passage. Those things do not happen unless there is a reason for them. Were it a bill in the real interest of the people of the United States, it would have been passed before. I think we should gather some sense from the history of the legislation, from the manner in which it has been brought up without any explanation, without any attempt to tell the House what it was before the members of the opposition were called upon to take the floor and tell what they knew about it, which they have done the best they could. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have an affection for my friend from New York and my friend from Massachusetts. To relieve them of the evident distress they are under, a distress growing out of ignorance of the pending legislation, and to enlighten them I yield 8 minutes of the time remaining to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can enlighten the House on this bill, but I shall endeavor to. I have the highest admiration for my colleague from New York. I admire his ability, I admire his intellectual honesty, I admire his zealous efforts to have our Government function in an economic and efficient way; and, frankly, I do not believe he would have come before the House today in an effort to laugh this bill out of court had he not been laboring under a misapprehension of fact.

This bill has been considered and passed by the Senate on three different occasions. It has never come to a vote on its merits in the House. The bill was considered by the Committee on Public Lands, and voluminous testimony was taken. On two different days the Special House Committee on the Conservation of Wild Life Resources held hearings on this bill, at which hearings some of the leading scientists of the United States appeared. We found that this project was endorsed by all of the major conservation organizations of the United States.

I felt that when this bill came before this House the Members who so frequently had not been able to say as did the late John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi: "I am a Senator of the United States from Mississippi"—Members who sometimes had had to yield to political expediency in cases where the interests of their districts conflicted with the interests of the other sections of the country—that those Members would welcome an opportunity to join hands in the passage of an unselfish nonpartisan conservation bill for the public welfare.

This bill will not cost the United States one penny in the acquisition of land. Mr. Barron Collier does not own any land in the area to be acquired. The county referred to in which he is interested is north of this area. May I say that 300,000 acres of this land to which the gentleman referred was ceded by the Federal Government to Florida, and Florida proposes to give the land back. The other area will be bought either by public expenditure in Florida or through contributions by public-spirited citizens. Mr. Doherty has no particular interest in this bill. He owns two hotels out of many hotels in Florida. The people that we want to preserve this great natural resource for are the poor people that cannot go to the Miami Biltmore or to the wonderful, palatial, marble hotels at Coral Gables—those people who live up there in the same district that the gentleman from Massachusetts comes from.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? I should like to ask the gentleman how the people from Massachusetts are going to get down there.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed and finish his statement without interruption.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the Members want to know something about the bill, I am willing to tell them.

Mr. COX. I trust the gentleman will not yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a brief question.

Mr. RICH. How are the people going to enjoy the privileges of this park if no money is spent so that they can get into the park?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I may say that they can now get into the park in two ways. There is a road already built through the park, and the Director of the National Parks Service informs us that he does not contemplate the construction of any more roads. There may be some brief trails constructed, but no more roads. We write into this bill as a special amendment that this entire area must be preserved in its natural state. We want to exclude the hand of commercialism in this area. You can go through there now in a canoe, as the Seminole Indians do. You can ride into the area; you can walk into this area.

In this proposed national park we have the best species of royal palm to be found in the United States or anywhere in the world. These royal palms tower to the sky 80 and 100 feet, and the slimy hand of commercialism is now going in there and taking those trees out by the roots to put in parks and to plant around the villas of wealthy men. We want to save these trees just as we saved the big redwood trees in the Sequoia National Park.

There are now 22 national parks in the United States and only one marine park, and that on the coast of Maine at Acadia.

This park can be made into the most wonderful marine park in the world where you will have around these corals all the species of tropical fish, and it is the only place in the United States where mahogany is indigenous. In this park we have the most wonderful assembly of tropical birds to be found in the United States.

The question may be asked, How will the poor people get there? Of course, I do not mean the man who has not got daily bread. I refer to the man of moderate means, who owns a flivver, the man who can get away for a few days' trip. He cannot go to South America, India, or Africa to see tropical conditions, but he can get in his flivver and come down the coast—we have fine roads all the way—and see a tropical place where the fauna and flora are not excelled anywhere in the United States. He can see on the coral reefs—and this is of great interest to geologists—the building up of soil, where the ocean waves bring up the driftwood, and the soil and the land is built by natural processes. All of these things he may see there in this wonderful tropical park on which the United States will not spend one red cent for 5 years after the approval of this bill. As contrasted with the statement of the gentleman from New York when he mentioned $100,000,000, the Director of the National Parks Service tells us that there will be involved only the nominal expense of maintenance.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. The statement was made a moment ago that it would cost $700,000 a mile to build roads in this district.

Mr. ROBERTSON. There are not to be any roads. We have it in the bill to leave this area in its natural state. We do not want roads. We want only those who from a love of nature desire to commune with nature's God to come in there and enjoy the natural conditions existing in this park.

Mr. WILCOX. Is it not a fact that roads may be built in this particular area at a less cost per mile than in any other section of the United States?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes. All you have to do is to drain it and throw up the sand and shells and you have all the road you need. The expense will be small.

I recently read in a novel by a Frenchman, Journey to the End of the Night, a statement to the effect that the world is one vast scheme to catch you with your trousers down. For the past 15 or 18 years this seems to have been the experience of this Nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The big bankers have been catching the unsuspecting investor. The stock market and the security exchange have been catching him. The commodity exchange has been catching the farmer. All through the years it has been a game of catching the other fellow and an unreasoning worship of things material. As we walk from this end of the Capitol to the other we pass through a beautiful room where there are murals. On the right hand is depicted the scene of De Soto discovering the Mississippi. Of that event the historian, Bancroft, said:

> He traveled across half a continent in search of gold and found nothing more remarkable than his burial place.

Senator GLASS, one of the leading exponents of a gold basis for our currency, recently said in an interview published in the New York Times, "There is something more precious in life than gold." We have neglected our great natural resources. We have drained 75,000,000 acres of land. The subterranean water table in one of our Western States has fallen 57 feet, and they are threatened with ever-recurring droughts. Each year forest fires have burned an area as wide as 10 miles and as long as from Detroit to New York. All our travel, like De Soto, has been in search of gold.

We are unmindful of what Wordsworth said more than 100 years ago:

> The world is too much with us; late and soon,
> Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers:
> Little we see in Nature that is ours;
> We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!
> The Sea that bares her bosom to the moon,
> The winds will be howling at all hours,
> And are now up-gathered, like sleeping flowers;
> For this, for everything, we are out of tune.
> It moves us not—Great God! I'd rather be
> A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn;
> So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
> Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
> Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea,
> Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.

Before it is too late, let us preserve the only tropical area of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I greatly enjoyed the erudite and the beautiful language of the last speaker. I congratulate him most heartily on his delightful description of his love of nature, in which we all share.

I know of no more delightful area in the United States, or possibly in any other country, than the national parks. I am a great believer in them. I have enjoyed exploring quite a few of them, but there is absolutely no resemblance, Mr. Speaker, between the swamp land under discussion here and the National Park System of the United States.

It is unfortunate, I think, that the gentleman from Florida, who, as was stated in the RECORD this morning, flew here last night from a strenuous campaign in which he is indulging in Florida, in order to be here today, has not seen fit to take the floor first to explain wherein this bill differs from those which this House has condemned in the past. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is absolutely right in saying that the only information we have so far must be the history of this case in the past.

I hold in my hand an account taken from the New York Times of February 13, 1931, describing how a Senate investigating committee made a trip to Miami, was entertained at these luxurious hotels of which you have heard a description, and presented a bill of $3,000 to the United States Senate for the expense of the junket. Here is what was said about it as being a junket into the sunshine of Florida. It lists the names of the Senators who took the trip and says:

> The voyage from Miami into the Everglades took 3 nights and the better part of 4 days. A Negro orchestra made up the crew supplying the music. The heavy expense, Senator NYE said, was due to the fact that the yacht also carried a sea-going power boat used for side trips into bayous which the yacht was too large to enter. Other items were hotels, food, incidentals, and railroad fares. It was explained that the committee did not use Government money for blimp rides over Miami and for fishing trips, these being the courtesies extended by the citizens of Florida.

They are a hospitable crowd down there. I have been in Florida, and I happen to have been there at the time this party was on, and the accounts in the Miami papers of the beautiful times the senatorial group were having throughout Miami and the rides they were enjoying in blimps furnished by the Goodyear Rubber Co. were very illuminating as to the merits of this park proposition.

It is absolutely inaccessible to people today and never can be made accessible unless the Federal Government sees fit to expend enormous sums of money to render it so.

Mr. WILCOX rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, I hope the gentleman will explain this fully in his own time. I shall listen to the gentleman from Florida a little later on, but I decline to yield to him now.

Let me say to the gentleman from Florida, for whom I have the highest admiration, that of course we realize this bill is an extremely important thing in his primary campaign. It was said here 2 years ago that the distinguished lady Member from Florida was defeated because she was not able to put this bill across and that the gentleman from Palm Beach, Mr. WILCOX, who now favors us with his presence here, was nominated and elected over Mrs. Owen on this campaign issue. As the primary is now on in Florida, we realize it is extremely important that this bill be acted upon tonight in order to allow the gentleman to return to his vigorous campaigning in Florida.

Let me say further in behalf of the gentleman that I do not think, knowing his ability and the high regard in which he is held by his home people—and I happen to know some of his friends intimately—that he needs this, for he can go back to Florida and be elected without it. He may have won out against Mrs. Owen, but he does not need it today, and so why put the Federal Government to such a tremendous expenditure as will eventually be necessary by the establishment of this falsely named "park."

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I am sorry I cannot yield. We wanted information from that side, and we could not get it. The gentleman from Virginia said that the people could walk into this area. He is mistaken. I have been there, and you would have to swim to get in there, and if you did swim you would be eaten by crocodiles or be bitten by snakes. [Laughter.] I happen to know enough about that locality to make that statement definitely.

Another little matter about its not entailing any expense to the Federal Government. If it is to be without cost to the Federal Government for 5 years, why not let Florida keep it for 5 years? Why put the Federal Government to that expense?

Let us see what was testified as to its being no expense.

Mr. Albright, formerly in charge of the park system, told me—and I put it in the RECORD 2 years ago—that the very first thing that he would do would be to ask for a million dollars to develop it by building roads, arranging for rangers, and general policing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I cannot yield. Now I want you to see what kind of testimony there was and what is going to be the result if we accept this bill. The gentleman from New York has explained some of it, but we have to go back in history to know anything about it. Nothing has been presented to the House today. Let us see what was said 2 years ago. I am reading from the hearings 2 years ago.

Here is some of the language by Mr. Coe, landscape architect, who was explaining lantern slides. He had some lantern slides and was showing them, and among other things he said—I am quoting from page 69, in which he is describing these slides:

I venture the statement that each of you, when privileged to visit this region will find yourself lifted from the realm of mere realities into a land of enchantment. You cannot tell what this country is like or what it means to you unless you actually see it, and not only see it but literally feel its charm. It is a country distinctly different from anything else in all our great country, if not in the entire world.

Again we have more of these lovely coconut palms, not only beautiful to look upon but yielding abundantly a luscious nut.

It is not the defining of individual forms of life and physical condition that gets you and holds you here altogether; it is rather the spirit of the thing in the final equation that holds you. The appeal is to your heart and arouses in you a deep feeling of wonder and reverence.

In the afternoon, with the waning day, the tropic colors begin to show and the beaches and all about take on another interest. Now, even more than before, you feel that you are surely within the Tropics. From this time of late afternoon until the sun actually sets there is this continually changing panorama of scenic phases until you feel that you are in a heaven of color.

Then he describes the beauty of the place in the evening, when the moon is shining, and that is what gets us young fellows! But let me read here something about the turtles:

You and I will have the privilege of going down on these beaches moonlight nights in the turtle season—in the turtle season and watch these strange and interesting animals come out of the water, dig holes in the beach sands well up from the tides and there lay their eggs; 150 or 200 eggs per turtle, a generous number.

Instead of these eggs being collected by the tens of thousands to be sold, we will have many thousands of little turtles hatching out as the result of protecting them.

My Lord, is not that a wonderful proposition! We will get a great crop of little turtles. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is worth a campaign in the Miami-Palm Beach district. For fine language and unadulterated adjectives the witness Coe is a wonder.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. TREADWAY. But here is the essence of the gentleman's testimony from which I am quoting. Of course, it is 2 years after, but I do not suppose nature has changed a whole lot. These turtles will be down there yet; and oh, how I should like to see them in the moonlight coming out! That would be my choice of time. Here is another bit of that testimony:

Incidentally you see in the background snow-capped mountains. Yes; there are actually snow-capped mountains in Florida.

Later on he says:

Our boat swings around into a more quiet spot as we ascend the Shark River. Here we run upon a boat of fishermen. Much of this country of some 2,000 square miles is truly a fisherman's paradise.

The scene smacks of the Tropics and of the jungle land. There are hundreds of miles of shore land and waterways similar to this. One can very easily get lost here in the labyrinth of waterways. The Indians are about the only people who really know these waterways. They go about in their canoes, knowing where to go in and how to get out again. The average white man will very easily get lost here. There are very few even of the older settlers down in this country who dare to go into this section.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that my friend Mr. WILCOX has no constituents down there in that territory, as, of course, there is no population there except reptiles. We hope this bill will see its death knell before his airplane starts this evening back to his campaign. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry any partisanship has been injected into this discussion. There is no occasion for it. We should all be interested in protecting the Public Treasury, whether we are Democrats or Republicans. Our objections to the reduction of time to be consumed in debate was necessary to protect the integrity of the committees of this House. In this Congress it has been only because of the vigilance and activity of the Republican minority we have been able to head off the gag rules that were so conspicuous in the last session and which are now happily carefully avoided. Today we felt obliged to fight for the integrity of committees. At the meeting of the Rules Committee, the proponents of the measure sought 2 hours of general debate. That was acceptable to the opposition, and would have given the House full opportunity to learn the merits, if there are any, of this particular legislation. It would also give the opposition an opportunity to voice its views. To reduce the time without a meeting of the committee and without consulting the membership of the committee was manifestly unfair. I am glad some recognition of the injustice is shown by the giving of the additional time.

As to the bill itself, I recall California and Florida for many years have been in dispute as to who gives the Nation the best lemons. That has been the topic of endless newspaper articles. After this bill is passed, if it is, there will be no question as to who has contributed to the United States Government the biggest lemon. It will be Florida, as the taxpayers will learn to their sorrow.

Proponents say there will be no expense to the Government. Everybody should know better than that. This argument should not fool anyone. Do you imagine Florida or any other sovereign State would come to the Federal Government and ask it to take over this great vast territory of land unless it was for the purpose of saddling the expense of maintaining the property upon the Treasury of the United States? No State would do this except to dodge the cost of development and maintenance. Western States, with their great land reserves under the control of the Federal Government, are now asking the Government that some of the land revert to the States. The request is because the lands are valuable and could pay for their maintenance. You can rest assured Florida would not give up the land except to saddle an enormous expense on the Federal Government.

My good friend from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], a gentleman I hold in high esteem, speaks with the high and lofty motive of game conservation. He says he wants to keep it in its natural state, as it is today. I know he does, but I warn him, eventually they will not let him do it. The advocates say for 5 years there will be no expense to the Government, but any succeeding Congress can change the law and make an appropriation. It can easily be changed once under control of the Federal Government. The argument is advanced: it will be kept to delight the poor people of Massachusetts and other States. If we are going to keep it as it is, I ask, Will the poor people of Massachusetts or those of any State have a chance to view the wonderful scenery of Florida?

Mr. Speaker, my people do not have airplanes, and they certainly do not have many canoes. These are essential to view the swamp lands. I might add the Federal Government has not been so liberal in the distribution of relief funds in the East to enable the poor people from Massachusetts to travel to Florida.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, this is not a partisan question. The question is whether we are going to protect the Treasury of the United States; whether we are going to stop now, before it is too late, a demand that will cost the Treasury of the United States many millions of dollars before the journey is over. We all know how these enterprises start. They start in an humble way, but they continue to grow and eventually it means an enormous bill. I say we should halt right now the efforts to shift from Florida to the taxpayers of the United States the burden of the care of these lands and the cost of the development which will follow. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2837) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 2837, the Everglades National Park bill, with Mr. DISNEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I desire.

I shall attempt to give a brief history of the bill H.R. 2837. I shall not yield for any questions until I have completed my statement.

The present bill was considered by the Committee on the Public Lands after having held extensive hearings. This bill has the endorsement of the Interior Department, the National Park Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Geological Survey, Department of Agriculture, Biological Survey, Forest Service, Bureau of Plant Industry, the Smithsonian Institution; it also has the endorsement of the Pennsylvania Park Association of Philadelphia, the American Association of Park Executives, American Civic Association, American Forestry Association, American Game Association, American Nature Association, American Society of Landscape Architects, American Society of Museums, American Society for the Advancement of Science, Municipal Art Society of New York, Russell Sage Foundation, Campfire Club of America, Society of American Foresters, Garden Club of America, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Izaak Walton League, National Association of Audubon Societies, National Conference on State Parks, National Council of State Garden Clubs Federation, National Park Association, American Museum of Natural History of New York.

I have heard nothing in all the discussion on the rule that had any substance whatever. Most of the speakers opposing the rule spoke at random and ridiculed the merits of the bill and attempted to convince the House that this was a pet measure, political or otherwise. They even brought into the discussion the name of a certain great Democrat. I do not know anything about all those things, but I do know that great precaution was had to bring out the real merits of this bill.

Furthermore, if I recall distinctly, 2 years ago by joint resolution of the House and Senate a committee was appointed. The Secretary of the Interior was directed to make a survey. Let us see who made this survey, notwithstanding all the ridicule that was so unjustly brought in here today.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I do not yield. I made the statement that I would not yield until I finished my statement.

Mr. BOLTON. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentlemen who made this investigation and made this report are not interested in politics. They are not interested in giving somebody something for nothing; but, on the contrary, they are very high-class students, and they are as follows: Horace M. Albright; Mr. Ebert K. Burlew, assistant to the Secretary of the Interior; Dr. H. C. Bumpus, member of the educational committee of the National Park Service, official collaborator; Arno B. Cammerer, associate director, National Park Service; Harlan P. Kelsey, conservationist and landscape architect, member of the Appalachian National Park Commission, official collaborator; Roger W. Toll, superintendent Yellowstone National Park, National Park Service; Dr. T. Gilbert Pearson, president of the National Association of Audubon Societies, official collaborator.

This inspection was made by automobile and boat, and the area carefully covered. The bill has the recommendation of this commission which went through there and investigated the entire merits of this bill.

Dr. Bumpus, of Brown University, says in his report:

> I want to emphasize three questions: Has this place educational value? Is it worth preserving in its present condition; and in the third place, will it be used?

And he answers every one of them in the affirmative with very substantial reasons. It would take too long for me to explain all of the remarks made by him.

He says further:

> I agree thoroughly with Mr. Albright when he says in regard to the costs, "it is a park that will be comparatively inexpensive, so far as its maintenance is concerned, and also very inexpensive so far as its protection is concerned." It will require but few rangers, probably only two.

Now, let us see what is suggested in this bill. The Park Service proposes to take care of these Seminole Indians who are in there. They will be placed in this area and will be given employment as guides. Certainly, I think you know that today they are a charge on the public; so, by passing this bill we are placing them in a home, and in a position to live there where they should live. We believe they should be in there.

It is our purpose to preserve this area in its primitive state. Much has been said about roads. Let me tell you, the road in question is built. It was built by the C.C.C. We do not need any road. On the contrary, we do not want this place to be built up with roads so that it will destroy the very purpose of this act.

Let us see further. Some gentlemen spoke about snakes, crawfish, crocodiles, and very clearly selected, as a lawyer would, such passages as he wants to make a case, but they did not read the entire report. Those statements are incorrect and not in accord with the facts as developed in the hearings. It was also brought out that the idea of preserving this area in its primitive state was unprecedented. Let us see if this is so. Among other national parks where primitive conditions have been preserved I call attention to the Glacier National Park and to the Yellowstone National Park. The only development of the park to be established by the pending bill will be along the northern boundary of the area; and the bill provides that this development will be made by donations to the United States without any cost to the United States.

In order to dispel any remaining doubt as to cost to the United States Government, I call attention to the fact that the committee added a very unusual amendment to this bill, language which is not found in any other park bill, the proviso—

> That the United States shall not expend any public moneys for the administration, protection, or development of the aforesaid park within the period of 5 years from the date of the approval of this act.

Such language is not found in any previous park legislation.

It was further stated that at some future time appropriations would be asked. There are many old Members present. I ask them if they recall any instance where after the passage of similar legislation its authors have come back and asked for and obtained plenty of money from the United States? I do not believe they know of any such instance.

The park system is a source of revenue. In the last year or so revenue from the Park Service amounted to $1,000,000. This revenue has been reduced to $700,000.

Very little improvement is needed in this park, because, as I said before, the roads have been built and their maintenance will be small. There will not be so much need of roads because the Indians will take visitors around in boats. The maintenance of this park will be inexpensive in every instance.

The gentleman from New York said something about snakes. Dr. Kelsey, in his testimony, as appears on page 45 of the hearings, said:

> There is no other area in this country devoted to a national park like this one. It is totally different in land, water, climate, plant, animal features, as well as recreational features. It is very remarkable as being the only land in America that is in the making.

This gentleman has no selfish interest in the matter.

This proposition has been investigated by authorities on rivers, harbors, and parks, by men who wish to preserve this area for the welfare of the people.

I could cite many statements in rebuttal, taking them at random. I have cited merely a few in order to convince you how easy it is to confuse the issue by criticizing a bill at random. It is easy to criticize; it is easy to ridicule. I assure you, however, that the interests of the Government are protected and that there is no danger that this park will cost the United States any money whatever.

The bill is an important enabling act which will assure protection to the superlative fauna and flora of the Everglades, so outstanding in quality and beauty as to demand their preservation intact. This bill constitutes an important conservation measure and should be passed immediately or else despoliation of the area is sure to continue. I hope the bill is passed today.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the national park system of this country. I think I have supported every bill that has come before Congress in the last 16 years providing for so-called "national parks"; but at the present time our country is confronted with a rather critical situation. We are faced with a quite different condition than we have had in the past.

I am somewhat familiar with this area which it is now proposed to make into a national park. It comprises 1,300,000 acres, very largely of a swampy character. It is the testimony of the experts who have been there that this area is not accessible; that it is of no use for agricultural purposes. The State of Florida already owns 325,000 acres of this land. The very character of this area is such that it is not going to run away; it is going to stay right there; it is not going to be disturbed; it is not going to be impinged upon as an area of great national interest.

In the State of New York we are interested in parks and have established many of them. Within a 2 hours' automobile drive from my home is a State park of some 65,000 acres. Right across the line in Pennsylvania is another State reservation of over a million acres. The State of New York has laid out a program so that throughout the length and breadth of the State we have State parks supported by the State. These parks have been developed for the use of the people. We have parks where the humblest workingman can go with his family and have a cottage. The user of these parks has all the facilities necessary to enjoy life in the open, and the State takes care of it all. In the 65,000-acre park to which I have referred it is not at all uncommon for several hundred persons to be camping at one time. The persons who use these parks are not wealthy. These parks are accessible to the man of ordinary means, the person who likes to get some recreation in the out of doors at a nominal expense. This is true also in various parts of our State.

The State of Michigan, I understand, is developing a system of State parks. A gentleman was here the other day from the State of Ohio. He made the statement that the State of Ohio was developing a similar system of State parks—large areas where the common people can enjoy themselves and find recreation.

The State of Florida already owns 325,000 acres of land similar to that referred to in the pending bill. Florida is a great pleasure resort. Many wealthy people from the North go there every winter, staying months at a time, spending large sums of money. If they want to hire a motor boat and go through these areas, of course, they can do it; but the ordinary man could not afford it. For this area to be opened and made available and accessible, it would be necessary to build plank walks all through the territory, and these are liable to be destroyed by hurricanes and floods, the testimony shows.

I realize, too, that this is a great snake country. A great snake industry is being built in that country. They are canning rattlesnake meat. There rattlesnakes grow to great dimensions, some of them weighing as much as 40 pounds.

You can go over to some stores in the city of Washington and buy rattlesnake meat. They are putting out rattlesnake meat, and some people like it.

Mr. WILLFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I have not eaten any of it and I do not want to, but they are developing that line.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WILLFORD. I just wanted to see one of these 40-pound rattlesnakes.

Mr. REED of New York. I am not interested in snakes. I do not want them around. I would not be very much interested in going through the Everglades, and would not want my family to go down there with a canoe floating around among the alligators. If the State of Florida wants a park, it already owns 325,000 acres. It can buy another million acres for $1 an acre if it wants to, and there is no reason for coming to the Federal Government at this time and starting to draw upon the Treasury. They say this is not going to cost anything for 5 years. According to the evidence here, under the Public Works program there has already been spent $18,000,000 in Florida. We all know that if this bill passes, money will be allocated to begin more projects, using money in the Treasury appropriated for relief work to carry on further public works in this park.

May I say that we are facing a time when nobody knows just what conditions are going to be 3, 4, or 5 years from now. This park is not going to run away, and it is not going to be disturbed. If the country gets back to a state of prosperity where it wants to squander money on a project of this kind, which does not mean a thing to the ordinary person, well and good, perhaps it may go through at that time. But I think the time has come to call a halt to these commitments until we know when we are coming out of this depression. We are not out of it yet. The testimony and the official reports show that there are more people on the relief rolls today than there were a year ago or a year and a half ago, and there are going to be more on the relief rolls 6 months from now. We want to stop these commitments. This is no time to bring in a bill of this character to commit the Federal Government to large future expenditures. A fire is not going to sweep over these swamps and they will remain there intact.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Apropos of what the gentleman says about conditions in the country, the New York Times states today that we have in this country now a curtailment of unemployment from about 13,000,000 to 7,000,000 plus. There is an analysis of these figures in today's Times.

Mr. REED of New York. That is not in accordance with the statements of officials of the administration as to unemployment. I referred to the number of persons on the relief rolls.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that this measure has taken on the aspect of a partisan, political dispute. The establishment of the Everglades National Park is not a political matter nor a local measure to Florida. It is a matter of great national importance.

In this particular section of Florida there is located a section of the country that is unique. It is the only section of continental United States of the character existing in this particular section. Here is located the only natural tropical growth in continental United States. In this section certain species of bird and animal life are staging their last stand. They are rapidly becoming extinct. Among these species are the pink flamingo and other species of bird life.

Some people have a morbid desire to bag the last of its kind. It happens during the winter months a great many times we have visitors who have the curiosity and the desire to go out into this section and bag one of the last pink flamingos or one of these other rare species of bird life. Unless they are protected, not only Florida but the world will lose these rapidly disappearing species of bird and animal life. They are staging their last stand in this particular spot, and it is the only section of the world where they exist.

This particular spot is the only section in continental United States that has a natural tropical growth. The only growth of Royal Palms in the United States and, in fact, the only growth in the world of a certain species of the Royal Palm, exists in this particular spot These growths are being rapidly exploited by commercial interests. Millionaires are going into this area, digging up these Royal Palms and rare specimens, moving them out and planting them on their private estates, so that the public in a very short time will completely lose the only growth of tropical palms existing in continental United States.

We have many national parks in this country, principally located in the mountain sections. We heartily favor those, but after all, Mr. Chairman, mountain scenery is largely similar to other mountain scenery. This park, however, is unique and distinctive. It differs from any other national-park area in the country, and I think it is necessary to preserve and protect it for future generations in order that we may have all kinds of primitive areas preserved for the future generations.

When the bill is brought up for reading under the 5-minute rule we propose to offer the following amendment:

Said area or areas shall be permanent preserved as a wilderness and no development of the project or plan for the entertainment of visitors shall be undertaken which will interfere with the preservation intact of the unique flora and fauna and the essential primitive natural conditions now prevailing in this area.

We propose to offer that as an amendment because we are just as anxious to preserve this area in its primitive state as any of the naturalists or scientists are.

A great many wild statements have been made as to the cost of the development of this area. Of course, I have no way of preventing any gentleman from making such a wild and unreasonable and unfounded statement as was made a few moments ago, that the cost of building roads in this area would be $700,000, or three quarters of a million dollars a mile. I do not know what the gentleman thought he could use for materials to build roads that would cost that much. In all fairness to him and for the information of the House, let me say that road building in this particular area is the cheapest of anywhere in the United States. The natural road material is the foundation of the country. Coral rock, a soft limestone rock, is the basis for that entire section, and in road building all that is necessary to be done is to take a dipper dredge and go along the proposed roadway dipping up the road material from the side, dumping it in front of the dredge, and tamping it down as it goes along, and you have a cement road when you are through. The only cost in the building of roads in this section is the cost of labor. The materials are at hand, there is no hauling, and there is no cost for anything in the world except labor.

There has also been an attempt made to laugh this project out of court. I have no objection to my Republican friends having all the fun they want, but they seem to have enjoyed themselves talking about the alligators and the snakes in this area.

Possibly I should not dignify this argument with a reply, but let me say this: While this bill has been discussed before, it has never been brought to a vote on the floor of the House, but our Republican brethren have insisted always on referring to this project as a snake-infested area. In order to confirm my own opinion, and I live in this section—I represent the district where this park is located, and I have been over this territory and I know about it, but I wanted to confirm my own opinion and my own observation by word from an expert authority. I talked to Dr. Raymond Ditmars, the curator of the New York Zoological Park, recognized as an outstanding authority of the world on reptiles. I asked him about the number of snakes in this proposed area, and he said:

Mr. WILCOX—

We were then in New York City—within 30 miles of the spot where you and I are now standing I will find you from three to five times as many snakes per square mile as you can find in all the Everglades.

Mr. Ditmars wrote me a letter confirming this, and I want to read just one paragraph:

A question has arisen about this area being snake infested. This allegation undoubtedly comes from those not well versed in such matters. From experiences in collecting in Florida—

Collecting snakes, he means—

I can say there is no indication that there are more snakes in southern Florida than in many of the other areas of that State or the mountain areas of the West or parts of New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. That such an allegation should hold back the preservation of one of the few remaining undisturbed and primitive areas, unique in its tropical character, seems unfortunate, unreasonable, and ridiculous.

This statement comes from Dr. Raymond Ditmars, one of the outstanding authorities on reptiles in the world.

As illustrative of the impressions obtained by visitors to this region, I should like to quote the following letter which I received a short time ago from Maj. Robert Fechner, Director of Federal Emergency Conservation Work. Major Fechner had occasion to visit this region in connection with his work, and upon his return to Washington, voluntarily and entirely without solicitation on my part, wrote me this letter:

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D.C., February 9, 1934.

Hon. J. MARK WILCOX,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WILCOX: Recently I made an inspection trip to a number of our C.C.C. camps in the Fourth Corps Area, and among these camps were several in your district.

Through the courtesy of the Coast Guard commander in Miami, I had the opportunity of going in one of the Coast Guard airplanes over much of the territory which it is proposed to include in a national-park area to be known as the Everglades National Park.

I was surprised and delighted at the things that I saw and learned on this trip. Undoubtedly there is no similar area anywhere in the continental United States. It seems to me that the Federal Government should set up the proposed park and develop it for the pleasure and benefit of future generations.

I was told by competent authority that it would be possible to construct roads at reasonable expense that would give access to almost every part of the proposed park, and that existing waterways were ample to accommodate countless motor boats and other small vessels for those who desire to visit the region by that mode of transportation.

The wild life of this region cannot be duplicated anywhere else in this country and it can only be properly cared for and preserved by the creation of a national park.

We are already doing some work with a C.C.C. camp on Royal Palm Park, which is a State enterprise, but I understand would be the main entry to a national park if it was created.

Because of the personal experience that I had just recently in viewing this area, I thought I would be justified in writing you about it.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT FECHNER, Director.

I have already referred to the endorsement, or rather the favorable recommendation, of the Secretary of the Interior for this project. I am sure that the following letter which I received from the Director of the National Parks Service, Mr. Arno B. Cammerer, will be of interest to the Membership of the House:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF NATIONAL PARKS, BUILDINGS, AND RESERVATIONS,
Washington, February 6, 1934.

Hon. J. MARK WILCOX,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WILCOX: During our chat the other day you asked me to write you a letter giving you briefly my opinion as to the importance of the Everglades National Park project to the Nation.

The Secretary of the Interior's report, dated December 3, 1930, which was incorporated in H.R. 268, Seventy-third Congress, first session, was prepared by me, and I stand unqualifiedly behind it. I attach a copy, on page 7 of which you will note that I was a member of the investigating committee.

It is my firm conviction, which has been amply verified by other investigators, that this area is one of the most remarkable primitive areas still available for national-park creation. The tremendous spectacles of bird life, according to those who are best acquainted with the region, cannot be matched anywhere in the United States and offer possibilities of being greatly enlarged by proper protection, which would be given if and when it had national-park status. The other wild life and floral exhibits are unique and coupled with the enormous expanse of marine growth and other biological attributes make this area unmatched anywhere else in the world. The great water expanses offer unexcelled opportunities for boat travel and the enjoyment of the aquatic features, thereby also reducing the possibilities of road construction to a minimum.

The area meets the standards established for national parks, and I sincerely trust that the congressional stamp of approval will be given to its passage in the House at an early date.

Sincerely yours,

ARNO B. CAMMERER, Director.

It seems to me that the expressions of the Secretary of the Interior, the Director of National Parks, and the Director of Emergency Conservation Work, none of whom have any personal interest in the project and all of whom are vitally interested in establishing national parks only of the high standard already set, should leave little doubt as to not only the desirability, but the necessity as well, of the park.

There are many species of animal and bird life in this section that are rapidly becoming extinct and which in a few more years will completely disappear unless protected. This animal and bird life can and will be preserved by the creation of this national park.

Not only does this proposed park have the whole-hearted approval of the Interior Department and of the Public Lands Committee of the House, but it likewise has the approval of the Senate. That body has on two occasions passed the bill, and it remains only for the House to pass it for the park to become an established fact.

Not only has this project received the support and endorsement of those who are directly charged with the duty and responsibility of selecting national-park areas which have a real and lasting national interest, but it has also been approved and urged by others whose interest in the future welfare of the Nation cannot be questioned.

Mr. Henry Fairfield Osborne, of the American Museum of Natural History, said, in writing of the proposed Everglades National Park:

> It would be a place for posterity to visit and witness those forms of life now so rapidly vanishing.

Mr. Gilbert H. Grosvenor, of the National Geographic Society, has said: "The area would be visited by millions", if established as a national park.

And, finally, President Roosevelt, while he was still Governor of the State of New York, said:

> I am glad that the Everglades National Park project is getting on so well. I can tell you that, knowing this country at first-hand, I am very hopeful that it can be preserved for the Nation for all time.

Time and the patience of the House forbid my reading the endorsements of all the scientists, naturalists, and public-spirited men from every walk of life and every section of the country, who have endorsed this project and who are enthusiastically urging its passage. Hon. Horace M. Albright, former Director of United States National Parks; Dr. C. H. Marvin, president of George Washington University; Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, scientist and curator of the New York Zoological Park; and numerous other men of like caliber and standing have given the project their unqualified and enthusiastic support.

Now, as to the cost of the park. I would not be entirely fair with you if I did not admit that one of the things we hope will come from this is the attraction of tourists to our State. I expect it will attract additional tourists, but we do not anticipate, and we do not intend to ask, any expenditure of Government funds beyond the supervision and maintenance of this park and to put it in such a condition that the public may be able to view it.

I have already discussed with you the cost of road building. With the amendment which I propose to offer at the appropriate time, that is the only cost that can possibly come from the acquisition of this territory by the Federal Government.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, let me request you to do this. This is the one and only spot in this country of its character, and let me ask you and let me beg you to consider this matter not as a partisan political question. The gentleman has referred to its effect upon my own political fortunes. Let me say that the passage or the failure of passage of this bill will have absolutely no effect on my own political fortunes. It was not, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the issue in my former campaign. Let me ask the Committee to consider this not as a local measure restricted to Florida but let me ask you rather to regard this as a measure for the preservation for future generations of a unique territory where our children and our children's children may have preserved for them a tropical area, the like of which does not exist anywhere else in continental United States. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, having been appointed a member of the Committee on the Public Lands this session of Congress, I was quite surprised to learn that this bill was coming before the House at this session, because it has not been acted upon during the year 1934, and, as stated by the chairman of the committee, it was reported out in June 1933.

The only reference we have had to it from the Secretary of the Interior, under whose jurisdiction this park would be administered, the only statement made in reference to it comes from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, Oscar L. Chapman, and bears date of June 12, 1933. I quote from his statement:

The purpose of this bill is to provide for the establishment as a national park, without cost to the United States, of an area in the Everglades region of Florida, which Congress directed be investigated and reported on by the Secretary of the Interior by the act of March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1443). Pursuant to that act an inspection and detailed examination of the area was made in February 1930 on behalf of the Secretary of the Interior by officials of the National Park Service, assisted by several eminent park experts acting as collaborators, and the area was found to measure up to the standards set for national parks. Full details of this inspection and the recommendations made pursuant thereto were covered by report of the Secretary of the Interior under date of December 3, 1930, as directed by the act of March 1, 1929.

This proposed legislation has been considered by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and I am advised by him that it would not be in conflict with the financial program of the President if there be added at the end of section 3 of the bill a proviso to the following effect: "And provided further, That the United States shall not expend any public moneys for the administration, protection, or development of the aforesaid park within a period of 5 years from the date of approval of this act."

Now, I want to dwell particularly on the last statement made by the Bureau of the Budget that the President would not have any objection if there is to be no expenditure of public funds.

We have heard the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX], who is very much interested in this bill, tell of the advantages of parks of this kind. It is true, probably, that it would be somewhat different from any park in the United States. He made the statement that it would not cost the Government any additional appropriation. But when he concluded his statement he said that we only want the Federal Government to maintain the park and to make necessary developments in order that the people may have an opportunity to come there and visit this area.

Now, the point I want to make—and I want to emphasize it all that I can—is the fact that we are today legislating on the assumption and belief that the park is not going to cost the Federal Government any additional funds. You know and I know that is not the case. I have heard many statements made in regard to national parks in the United States, that it was not going to cost the taxpayers any money. There is not a national park that we have established, when the statement was made that the development of the property was not going to cost the Federal Government any additional funds, but what has cost the taxpayers of the country thousands and millions of dollars.

Mr. DEROUEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I will yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DEROUEN. I think the gentleman is inadvertently mistaken. There is one park in the United States where the revenue produced is more than the expense, and that is the national park in New Mexico.

Mr. RICH. I hope that if I make any misstatements I will stand corrected. I accept the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana. I would not intentionally make a misstatement.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not it a fact that most of the expenditures in these parks, in a great measure, have been to make them accessible to the people of the country to enjoy those parks, and how could any Federal money be used in this area to make it accessible to the people of the country in the same way that the National Park System has been developed?

Mr. RICH. I will say that this park cannot be made accessible to the people without a large expenditure of Federal funds. And every Representative in Congress knows that, regardless of any statement made to the contrary.

It was utterly impossible to do it. Take the instance of the Smoky Mountain Park in Tennessee. That park was given to the Federal Government by the State of Tennessee and by individual contributions. A gentleman from the Department of the Interior was before our committee a short time ago and he told us that the Federal Government at the present time is getting ready to spend $15,000,000 on that park. When it was given to the Federal Government we were told that the Government would not need to spend any money for its development. Yet this year we are going to spend $15,000,000 in the development of that park.

A great many things have been said here today in regard to this being a political measure. I do not want in any way to detract from any statement that might have been made that this is a political measure if someone wishes to make such a statement, but I am thinking solely of the taxpayers of my district, who are going to be called upon to develop this property.

I am thinking today of the men who are interested in trying to get jobs. I think that we should be devoting our energies today in helping the men who are trying to get jobs, who want to make a livelihood. I think we are doing the wrong thing by bringing up a proposal of this kind at this time and taking up the time of the House when we have important legislation that should be enacted. We should not take the time that is so valuable to the country to talk about a park which people tell us will not cost any money when we know that it will. I have my doubt about the sincerity of any man who will stand up here and say it is not going to cost any money. Eventually it will cost money, and these gentlemen know it. We should not enact a bill of this kind into law when we know it is contrary to the best interest of the country. I doubt very much if anyone can get the President of the United States to say that he is in favor of the development of this park at this time. I think the President would object to the development of the park now.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. Has the gentleman had occasion to read the statement issued by the President of the United States when he was Governor of the State of New York in which he expressed his entire approval of this measure and the hope that it would pass this House?

Mr. RICH. I might say to the gentleman that the President of the United States might have made a statement 4 years ago or longer that would not apply to the situation today, because the situation today is as different from what it was then as day is from night.

You cannot say that because he might have favored a proposal of this kind 5 years ago that he would want it today, when turmoil is raging in this country with strikes and riots. Out in the city of Minneapolis yesterday blood flowed, and men are grasping at a chance to earn a livelihood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. RICH. There are strikes in the city of Toledo where the militia has been called out; and men were kept in plants because of the strikes and distress that exist in that particular city. Men are striving for jobs, to earn a livelihood and we here are going to develop something that is not going to help one iota in that respect. We ought to help men get jobs so that they may earn a livelihood. If by our action we could give confidence to industry so they could employ people, we would do something worth while.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does the gentleman know that one of his colleagues was engaged in this trouble in Minnesota and that he has been fined $50 and sent to jail for 30 days?

Mr. RICH. I want to say that the same colleague the gentleman refers to has been arrested six or seven times since he has been a Member of this Congress. I think any Member of Congress, regardless of who he is, who goes out and tries to foster strife, after he has been elected by his people to come here and attend to his duties, is not doing what his constituents want him to do. In fact, such Members who subject themselves to arrest for alleged offenses in violation of the law should not be elected to Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question on the park?

Mr. RICH. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I take it the gentleman's argument is not against the national-park system generally, nor about this particular area at some other time when we can finance it.

Mr. RICH. I think we ought to postpone the day. I think we should not give our attention to this particular measure at this time. If it is as good as our friend and colleague from Florida says it is, if it has the prospects of being such a fine place, why does the State of Florida want to hand it over to the taxpayers of Pennsylvania and of the other States to finance in the future? I cannot for the life of me see how any man can stand up here and make an argument of that kind. I have always been under the impression that when you are offered something for nothing you should not take it. Whenever you are offered a gift horse you should look him in the mouth, because he is going to require food, and that will cost you money before you get through with it. I hope this House will not enact this bill into law today. I hope you Members of Congress who are representing your taxpayers will give consideration to this, and that you will say today that you are not going to vote for the Everglades Park, because it is something that can await some future time to be considered. You will do your country a real service if you do not enact this bill into law today. You will do your country an injustice if you do enact it into law. If you will say to your constituents it will not cost anything, I doubt the truth of the statement. I would not say it will not cost the taxpayers anything, for I am certain that it will cost this country millions of dollars in years to come.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I want to conclude in just a moment. I want to state that I am in sympathy with wild life, as stated by my colleague from Virginia, who spoke very intelligently for this bill a while ago. I am in sympathy with trying to develop the parks. I am in sympathy with trying to have parks where the people of this country can enjoy something that will be different, but I think we should be careful that we are not doing something that we will rue at some future date. I hope you will postpone action on this bill until some appropriate time when we can give consideration to the people in Florida if they want this developed. I think this is an inopportune time to enact this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would the gentleman be willing to see Cook National Forest in Pennsylvania abolished?

Mr. RICH. It would not make any difference what national forest we were trying to inculcate into a park at this time. I have had many questions similar to the one which the gentleman from Alabama has asked me, as if I were going to stand here and ask for something for Pennsylvania that I would not want to give to the gentleman from Florida. I make this statement to you and to every other Member of this House; I am not here trying to do something for my State that I would not do for the gentleman's State, if I thought it was worth while. I think that is a wrong implication that the gentleman or anybody else should give by asking a question of that kind. I want you to know I will not do some things that professional politicians sometimes would do, and I hope I shall not be placed in that class.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has again expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to get into any further argument in relation to this bill. I think it is pretty well understood how I feel about it, but the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX], at the conclusion of his able address, said it had not been a factor in his campaign. In view of that remark, I want to read two telegrams to the House. This is dated Miami, Fla., June 7, 1932, and it is addressed to me. It reads:

> It would greatly assist me if you would send me a telegram stating whether or not you feel that Everglades Park bill has been loyally and effectively handled by me. The suggestion that the filibustering against the bill in the House had been due to the fact that the Members disliked me personally and did not wish to pass any bill bearing my name has been very damaging to me. Will appreciate your assistance in setting this straight.
> RUTH BRYAN OWEN.

My answer was as follows:

> While I have personally opposed Everglades Park bill, I have done so for what appeared to me at the time to be proper objections to the policy of the establishment of such a park and because of expense eventually involved on Federal Government. In my opinion, you have worked zealously and faithfully for passage of bill, and its failure of passage certainly cannot be regarded as casting any criticism upon your labors in its behalf or upon your personality as Member of House. As member opposite party, I am glad to testify to your high standing with your colleagues.
> ALLEN T. TREADWAY.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will be glad to, if I have the time.

Mr. WILCOX. That was not a telegram signed by me? There was no statement made by me?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; but the gentleman said it had nothing to do with his campaign. The gentleman's opponent seemed to think it did have.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, 8 minutes, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILLFORD].

Mr. WILLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this argument today, and it seems to me it has come to a sorry state of affairs when men elected to Congress to represent their districts will come here and, over such petty things, attack one of our most lovable Members. I never had the privilege of meeting the gentleman from Florida until last year. I think it is a sad state of affairs when partisan politics have to be injected into such a situation. I am going to speak to you men. I have never spoken to you before, but I am going to talk to you in a good old Dutch way. I think it is a crime.

When this bill was brought before our committee we listened to some of the most able men in the world today, interested in the great out-of-doors, and they were honest and conscientious. The question was raised, "Who will oppose this bill?" I said, "Men, I do not believe there will be a man opposed to it. I do not see how they could. It is so humane. It is one time where we can all agree, when one of the great States wants to give to the United States something that can be preserved for all time, for our children and our children's children." I think the greatest monument you can build is to put up something that your children and your children's children can look back upon and say, "My parent or some relative of mine had something to do with this."

I have heard Members rant and rave about snakes and alligators, and one gentleman mentioned a 40-pound rattlesnake. Such asinine remarks as that to an intelligent audience! A 40-pound rattlesnake! I am very familiar with the out-of-doors. I have slept out-of-doors probably more often than any man in this House and I have failed to see a 40-pound rattlesnake.

Mr. HENNEY. But the gentleman does not drink, does he?

Mr. WILLFORD. The gentleman does not drink, except on special occasions. If I could get a drink of something that would make me see 40-pound rattlesnakes, I believe I would take two drinks.

Today we have the opportunity to preserve for all time the only spot of its kind left on the American continent. There is nothing else like it. The people of the State in which this area is located want to give the area to it. All they ask is that we give them the right to give it to us and that we accept it. I heard Dr. Cammerer, of the Park Service, and all the other great and eminent scientists who appeared before the committee. I have read the writings of men who have walked and traveled this area, who know its animals, its birds, its flowers, and its trees. One does not have to swim to get through this proposed park.

We read in the papers today of serious trouble in Minneapolis, Cleveland, and other industrial centers. The one act of ours which will go farthest toward allaying such disturbances is that which gives our children and our children's children and ourselves clean places in which to play. God never created a counterfeit, nor did man create counterfeit until after he had surrounded himself with four walls. We have heard counterfeit argument against this park in this Hall today. Let us be honest with one another; let us be honest with our children, those who are to follow us.

Members rise on the floor and cry that it is going to cost money. Well, my God, it is worth some money. You men over there have spent millions of dollars, but today you have not a dime to show for it. We have seen men in this fair country of ours arrogate unto themselves self-appointed power and through its abuse get their arms into the money coffers clear up to their elbows.

By the simple act of passing this bill we can preserve this area for all posterity. It is said to be not available without roads. It is a place where we do not want roads; it is accessible by water; most of the area can be traveled by boat. If when traveling in the Superior National Forest or even in the Yellowstone National Park, you want to get to a great many of the places of interest you must put your pack on your back and go it alone with your guide. So it will be with the Everglades National Park.

I have never had the privilege of seeing the Everglades; I have never been in the South. My playground has been in the North and the Northwest. But I look forward to the time when I shall visit the subtropical area of our country. I believe in seeing America first. Men spend much money and travel great distances to go to the Continent, to South America, to Africa, to get into the Tropics, yet we have semitropical lands right in our own country. Let us see America first; let us preserve these things and enjoy them.

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLFORD. I yield.

Mr. LEHR. Would the gentleman want his children to spend their time in the Everglades?

Mr. WILLFORD. I look forward to the time when I myself can see the Everglades and when my children can. I would send my children to any place where they can see nature unadulterated.

Mr. LEHR. If the gentleman knew the Everglades, I do not think he would feel so enthusiastic about them.

Mr. WILLFORD. I want to see them, and I am going to see them.

I have spent much of my time in the great outdoors; I have slept under the stars at night and never have seen a counterfeit. I did not know there was any until I visited Washington. [Laughter.] This reminds me of the man who said: "The more I see of men the more I think of my dog" [laughter]; and when I listened to some of the asinine statements made in derogation of this bill I was not impressed with their soundness. I did not like it when the attack was made on one of our colleagues. Frankly, I wonder if a Republican is trying to beat him. If such be the case, let the race be a fair one, and if the Republican wins, we will shake his hand. Let us come out in the open, let us fight in the open, let us see things as they are, let us not present counterfeit arguments. Let us do something which will leave to our children a heritage of which they will be proud. Let us get away from personalities. I do not think, I do not want to think, I will not think, that the Members who have said the derogatory things we have heard on this floor today really meant them. I am in favor of all national parks, even though they do cost money. I have visited only the parks of the West and the North. Of these I am very proud, and I look forward with great anticipation to the time when I shall be able to visit the Everglades National Park, and I shall take with me not only my children but my grandchildren. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] the remainder of my time.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am enticed to make the few remarks I am going to make because of certain phases of this discussion which took place at the opening.

We have enmeshed in this legislation, apparently, two of the greatest speculators in the United States. Henry L. Doherty, who fleeced the American people out of millions of dollars and who kept for himself a minimum of probably $200,000,000, we find very much interested, because of the fact that he has invested a lot of the money he fleeced out of the American investing public now invested in hotels in Florida, such as the Miami-Biltmore, and others. Some of the finest hotels in Florida are owned by Henry L. Doherty. Of course he is interested in the development of Florida. He is for this bill because of the fact that he wants to gain further popularity, not only with the administration but with the public; and for this same reason he is financing our Embassy in Sweden, where his daughter, who has just been presented to the King and Queen of England, is secretary of this Embassy.

We all know the fact that the former Congresswoman from Florida, Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, who is the Ambassador, has been intensely interested in the passage of this resolution. It is generally understood that Mr. Doherty made it possible, through the association of his daughter with the Embassy, for Mrs. Owen's acceptance of this assignment. So not only is Mr. Doherty interested to promote the value of his investments in Florida but to enhance his standing and favor with the administration. And may I say to the House here and now that which I have said in a more mild form in the past, when I have been trying to get this administration and this House to investigate Henry L. Doherty's affairs, so that the people of the country could know whether or not he has paid his proper taxes to the Government of the United States and whether or not the Federal Trade Commission, who are now checking over his reports, have done their full duty, and whether or not the administration is protecting Mr. Doherty—that the administration and this House are protecting H. L. Doherty from all harm.

I have previously called attention to the fact that Mr. Doherty is the major domo of this administration on entertainment. He not only carried on the birthday party for the President but recently presented a check of the proceeds to the President at the White House for over $1,000,000 to the Warm Springs Foundation fund, and his own employees were commanded last week to stage a series of birthday parties for him throughout the country. This was done. We find him as the major domo of entertainment in Washington, where he maintains a club, in which men with political influence who can help him in this manipulation may meet, have a social evening, and make winnings at that point, and thus be made his friend and protector against any Government interference.

Barron Collier, another prominent Democrat, one of the leading speculators in real estate in Florida, now in the hands of his creditors, who bought extensively during the boom days in Florida, is another man who will be benefited if this bill goes through and the Government of the United States will promote these two undertakings for the benefit of these two great speculators.

I would not believe that this administration would protect Henry L. Doherty to the extent that they are protecting him, and when I say that I say it advisedly, because the Rules Committee of this House has been persuaded, in spite of the demands made upon them, to protect this man by not reporting out an investigation of his affairs. He is so clearly enmeshed, as is Barron Collier, in this situation that certainly this Congress is not going to cooperate with the administration and now expend real money for the benefit and profit of these two gentlemen. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and upon submission of evidence of title satisfactory to him, to accept on behalf of the United States title to the lands referred to in the previous section hereof as may be deemed by him necessary or desirable for national-park purposes: Provided, That no land for said park shall be accepted until exclusive jurisdiction over the entire park area, in form satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, shall have been ceded by the State of Florida to the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 13, strike out "national-park" and insert in lieu thereof "national-park."

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the gentleman from Pennsylvania speak of the influences that are seeking to have this bill enacted. I would deplore any unfortunate influence from those who might profit. The people of America will profit most. I must disregard the address of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this bill because of his mania against the gentlemen whom he has mentioned in his speech.

My motive and purpose in voting for this bill comes from a relationship with a neighbor, a man who lived next door to me for 30 years, a splendid gentleman and friend, and one of the greatest scientists in the United States, Dr. John Small. Every year he lives down in the Everglades. He is a noted botanist, a great writer, and a fine thinker. He has frequently been consulted by Edison, Ford, and Firestone as to the possibility of growing rubber in this country. I speak of that just to show the standing of the man.

Over 15 years ago this gentleman came back from Florida, where he had been living in the Everglades with the Indians, and he told me:

This is the spot America ought to own. Do not let the opportunity go to get it. It is precious. Put it under the protection of the Federal Government. It is the most valuable spot from a botanical standpoint, from a fish standpoint, from a bird standpoint, and from a beauty standpoint, that I have ever known.

This gentleman has traveled the world over.

I disregard what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said and turn to my dear neighbor, Dr. Small, for his advice on the subject, and I shall follow his advice. Dr. Small told me that he lived there every year as a representative of the great Botanical Gardens of New York, and that he thinks this is one of the most valuable spots in America and ought to be raised to the dignity of a national park and thus put to the perpetual service of the people by the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment to ask the chairman of the committee if he can give us any information regarding whether or not the Indian wards of the Government have been taken care of?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes. It is proposed by the Park Service to place the Seminole Indians in the park to be used as guides and to be employed in other ways. They are to some degree a charge on the Government now, and it is proposed to leave them in there and use them as guides throughout the park.

Mr. KVALE. In other words, they will be permitted to remain relatively undisturbed in their own country and in their own homes?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes. Of course, their actual reservation is outside the park; but we propose to bring it into the area, and it is the purpose of the Park Service to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended: Provided, That the provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, known as "the Federal Water Power Act", shall not apply to this park: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to lessen any existing rights of the Seminole Indians which are not in conflict with the purposes for which the Everglades National Park is created.

With the following committee amendment:

On Page 2, line 22, in parentheses strike out "Stat. 535", and insert in lieu thereof "39 Stat. 535."

On page 3, after line 4, insert a colon and the following proviso: "And provided further, That the United States shall not expend any public moneys for the administration, protection, or development of the aforesaid park within a period of 5 years from the date of approval of this act."

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEROUEN to the committee amendment: On page 3, at the end of line 8, add the following: "Except for such work as may be done under the Emergency Conservation Work program."

Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I want an explanation of the amendment that has been offered by the Committee.

Mr. DEROUEN. The amendment is offered by me.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman intend to explain the amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes. The amendment simply does this: When the bill was written, we were not using C.C.C. camps; and all we wish to do by this amendment is to permit, if necessary, the use of C.C.C. camps that may be located in this area.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be absolutely certain that the purpose of this amendment will not be destructive of the amendment the gentleman from Florida is going to offer. The gentleman has stated he is going to offer an amendment which will provide that nothing shall be done in this area which will destroy its primitive and natural condition, and I think the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, perhaps, comes as a result of my insistence, as a member of the Committee on Conservation of Wild Life. I can well understand the purpose of the amendment; and as I am somewhat concerned about C.C.C. camps in an area of this kind, I shall yield now to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. It so happens that there is at this time a C.C.C. camp down there doing some work in the way of fire prevention, weeding around some of the sections where the royal palms are, and things of that sort, purely as a conservation measure, and it was decided that the wording of the original committee amendment which prohibits the use of Federal funds would immediately make it necessary to take out this C.C.C. camp and stop this very necessary work. So the object of the amendment is to permit them to go ahead in carrying on such conservation work.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let me ask the gentleman whether this amendment has the approval of the Director of Public Parks and the American Forestry Association?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes; the Director suggested it, in fact.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And there is no objection on their part?

Mr. DEROUEN. None whatever; no.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, so that I may ask the gentleman from Florida a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it the intention of the Department, if this bill is enacted into law, or of any Member of the Congress, to ask for more C.C.C. camps to be located in this territory?

Mr. WILCOX. It is not. This simply permits the present camp located in this area to carry on the conservation work it is now doing.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I doubt if this is a wise amendment, and I think we ought to defeat it. We were assured that this measure would not call for the expenditure of Federal money.

Some Members on the floor from time to time try to make a distinction——

Mr. DEROUEN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. BLANTON. In just a few minutes. I want to be heard first on one very important phase of this question.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to bring about any conflict here, and I shall withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not going to do that yet, because it would take me off my feet, and prevent my discussing one matter of importance, hence I do not yield for that purpose. I have the floor and I am going to hold it until I get through.

Some Members are trying here daily to make a distinction between money to be taken out of the Federal Treasury and money furnished by the P.W.A. by saying "it is not out of the Federal Treasury" if it is "P.W.A. money." What is that but money out of the Treasury? It is tax money that has come out of the pockets of the people. They say, "Oh, it is P.W.A. money or A.A.A. money." It is all public money, and public funds taken out of the pockets of the people.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr BLANTON. No; I am sorry, but I want to get this off my system, because it has been accumulating there a long time. [Laughter.] This Government has not a dollar on earth to its name except tax money that it takes out of the people, or bond money, for which it pledges the credit of the Government; and which eventually must be paid by the people through taxation.

I am tired of seeing a distinction made between money appropriated out of the Treasury and money allocated by one of these P.W.A. or C.W.A. activities. Some seem to be perfectly willing for wasteful things to be done with P.W.A. or C.W.A. money, but I am just as much concerned about P.W.A. money or C.W.A. money being properly spent as I am about any other tax money out of the Federal Treasury.

I am pleased that this amendment is going to be withdrawn.

Mr. WILCOX. No; it is not.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if it is not, we will try to vote it down.

Do you know that under this amendment they could not only send 1 camp there, but they could send 25 C.C.C. camps there if they wanted to? There is no limitation as to the number of C.C.C. camps that could be allocated to this new Government reservation in Florida.

I know that if the pipe dreams of some Florida politicians materialize this wilderness will be made habitable, and if tourists are to camp there it is going to require the work of numerous C.C.C. camps during the next 5 years.

Now, if the distinguished Florida delegation, than whom there is none more influential in Congress—if this influential delegation is strong enough to throw the important Steagall bank deposit bill out of the window temporarily and take up this bill by airplane action over night, I am a little concerned whether or not this distinguished influence would be sufficient to put 12, 15, 25, or even 50 C.C.C. camps down there to destroy the morasses and crocodiles. [Laughter.]

I am against this amendment. If this delegation wants to go along with their pledges and have this cost the Government no money, then they may pass their bill. I am going to vote against this amendment, and then I shall feel constrained to vote against the measure itself, because I believe eventually it is going to cost this Government a lot of money.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Members of the House of Representatives, we have been here on the floor taking up the valuable time of the House by talking about this Everglades Park when you have the most important legislation waiting to be disposed of by the Banking and Currency Committee. You have been told this afternoon by various speakers that we want to have this park as a Federal park. You have been told that it is not going to cost the Federal Treasury one penny, and yet no sooner than we get to the tail end of the bill the chairman comes with this amendment that is going to require the expenditure of thousands of dollars in the development of the park. I tell you the ink will not be dry on the signatures of the Speaker of the House, the Vice President of the Senate, and the President of the United States to this bill when you will be asked to spend the taxpayers' money to develop this park. The gentleman from Florida tells you that it is not going to cost the Federal Government any money. Why does he make the statement?

Why do men come here and tell us one thing, and then turn around and request us to do something else? I say that we Members of Congress may not be fools, but we are doing the things that fools would do if we enact this bill into law at this time.

It is time we put a stop to foolish legislation, it is time we woke up and use our own gray matter, and cease to follow some professor who is telling us to enact certain bills into law because some secretary wants it or some department head may have a fancy for the law.

Gentlemen, it is time we should call a halt on such legislation. It is time Members of Congress think. I implore you to defeat this amendment and to defeat this bill, especially at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. It is regrettable that partisan political discussions should enter into a matter of this kind. I think they have no place in the consideration of this bill.

A few moments ago I called to the attention of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], who opposes this measure, the decrease in unemployment, suggesting in that way that conditions were not as bad in the country as he might think. I do not believe he would deliberately sing the song of despair, nor do I believe he would join the snipers and snoopers who are anxious to discount the efforts being made to restore the country and find fault for political purposes. I believe he is free from political partisanship on such legislation as we are now considering. I have taken this time to read a statement which appeared in the New York Times this morning with reference to unemployment, which should be heartening and encouraging to those who doubt and convincing to those who deny improvement in conditions generally throughout the country.

It comes from the National Industrial Conference Board. That organization is not a board of politicians, but a board representative of labor, capital, and industry, and, we must believe, composed of men who are patriotic and without political motives to serve. If the Committee will be good enough to listen, I shall read the item:

UNEMPLOYED WORKERS IN NATION CUT TO 7,907,000 DURING 1 YEAR

NEW YORK, May 23.—The total number of unemployed workers in April 1934 was 7,907,000, according to an estimate of the National Industrial Conference Board issued today. This is a decline of 114,000, or 1.4 percent, from the March total and a decline of 5,296,000, or 40.1 percent, as compared with March 1933, when unemployment was at its highest point.

Unemployment increased 32,000 in mining, but this was overcome by decreases of unemployment in other industries, as follows: Manufacturing and mechanical, 99,000; transportation, 7,000; trade, 59,000; domestic and personal service, 5,000; and 3,000 in miscellaneous occupations. In addition, it is estimated that 27,000 new workers became available for employment during the month.

Unemployment has decreased since March 1933 in all industrial groups for which figures are available. Decreases were especially marked in manufacturing and mechanical industries. The number unemployed in this group of industries in April 1934 was 2,500,000, a decline of 3,923,000, or 61.1 percent, from the peak of unemployment in this group in March 1933. From March 1933 to April 1934 the number of unemployed workers in other groups decreased as follows: 54.8 percent in trade, 29.7 percent in domestic and personal service, 14.8 percent in the extraction of minerals, and 11.1 percent in transportation.

In this estimate the workers employed through the Public Works Administration are counted as employed. Emergency workers employed under Government auspices, usually part time, in lieu of direct unemployment relief, are counted as unemployed.

UNEMPLOYED WORKERS IN GROUPS

The following table shows the number of unemployed workers in the various industrial groups in March 1933, March 1934, and April 1934:

Industrial group	Number of unemployed
	March 1933	March 1934	April 1934
Extraction of minerals	576,000	459,000	491,000
Manufacturing and mechanical	6,423,000	2,599,000	2,500,000
Transportation	1,591,000	1,422,000	1,415,000
Trade	2,126,000	1,020,000	961,000
Domestic and personal service	607,000	432,000	427,000
Industry not specified	539,000	420,000	417,000
Other industries [1]	296,000	296,000	296,000
All industries	12,158,000	6,647,000	6,506,000
Allowance for new workers since 1930 census	1,045,000	1,374,000	1,401,000
Total unemployed	13,203,000	8,021,000	7,907,000

[1] This group includes agriculture, forestry and fishing, public service and professional service. The number given is that of the unemployed in 1930, no figures being available from which later changes in employment can be computed.

That is a very heartening statement of unemployment conditions and does not indicate that the country is going from bad to worse. A decrease in unemployment of 5,296,000 in 12 months is a remarkable showing.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I am sorry, but I feel that the gentleman should be told of the census Mr. Hopkins of the F.E.R.A. has been taking which shows that on May 1, 1933, there were 4,250,000 families on relief, and that already they have reached that total in the figures for May 1, 1934, and they have not yet completed their census.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] in his remarks a short time ago was talking about people on the relief rolls, and not the unemployed, and I believe his figures were absolutely correct; at least, I have heard that quoted from many different sources. The figures the gentleman is now giving do not dispute the remarks made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Of course, I am talking about the decrease in unemployment in this country, the major part of which is in industry, and which, I repeat, indicates a much healthier and much more hopeful condition than that obtaining a year ago. Regardless of the numbers now on relief rolls, largely of a temporary nature, growing out of shifting relief from local communities to the Federal agencies, and some of which may be due to storms, drought, and other disasters, the outlook for the whole country is brighter and more encouraging.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to speak in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, will he yield to me?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am quite concerned about this amendment with reference to the C.C.C. camps.

Mr. WILCOX. That is what I want to talk about.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am afraid that you are going to destroy the effect of your amendment, and that is something which we ought to guard against very carefully. I am positive that the various groups, some of which were opposed to this bill originally, but who later on came in and decided to go along with you, have not had an opportunity to study its effect. For that reason I hope the gentleman will not support it.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the attitude of the gentleman upon that, and that is the reason that I am rising in support of the amendment. I told the House in general debate that we will offer an amendment requiring that the area shall be preserved in its essential primitive condition, and that no development shall be had which will in anywise interfere with that. We also propose to offer an unusual amendment, that the Federal Government cannot expend any money for maintenance or supervision or development for a period of 5 years. It so happens that the C.C.C. camp is now in this area doing certain conservation work, purely in the matter of preserving and protecting the forests. It occurs to me that the amendment as now drawn will not in any way conflict with the amendment requiring it to be retained in its primitive condition, but that if both were adopted it will permit the C.C.C. camps to go ahead with their conservation work, but with the provision in the bill that nothing that they shall do or that anybody else shall do will in any way interfere with the primitive conditions or destroy its essential condition as a wilderness. I do not want anything to be done in this area which will destroy that, and I do not want to require the Government to spend any money for 5 years, but we have the C.C.C. camps there doing conservation work. They are protecting the forests elsewhere. They are protecting these forests now, and it seems to me it is a reasonable provision to permit them to go ahead.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Would the adoption of this amendment necessarily mean that you would put any more C.C.C. camps in that community?

Mr. WILCOX. Not at all. As a matter of fact, whether this area is set aside as a park or not, we all know the C.C.C. camps have a right to go in and preserve and protect the forests by fire-prevention methods and other things that they are doing.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. What are the C.C.C. forces doing, or what can they do, to protect a growth like the growth of the Everglades? There has never been a fire down there, has there?

Mr. WILCOX. Oh, yes; quite frequently.

Mr. MOTT. What kind of work is it that the camps are doing?

Mr. WILCOX. It is largely in the matter of fire prevention, and in some cases of resetting some of the trees that have been destroyed.

Mr. MOTT. I have been in the Everglades by boat, and I am very much surprised to hear that there ever have been any fires there. That is news to me. I am wondering what the C.C.C. workers could do in that regard. If it is the purpose of the sponsors of this bill to preserve that area in its primitive state, and if the Government is not going to spend a great deal of money in the development of it, then what is the object in having the Federal Government take over that area at all?

Mr. WILCOX. I did not say there would never be an expenditure of any money. There will be no expenditure of money for 5 years. After the 5 years are up, it might be advisable, possibly, under act of Congress to be passed, if Congress so desires, to make appropriations to extend the trails through some sections of this area and to preserve it. It will be largely a matter of supervision and protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that this is being read as a committee amendment, is it?

The CHAIRMAN. No. It is an amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. DEROUEN.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this bill, but I regret that the sponsors of the bill feel that they must submit to this amendment.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. DEROUEN. I have requested to withdraw the amendment to the amendment, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objected to the request. I make the request again to withdraw this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MOTT. Is that the C.C.C. amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN] mean that he withdraws the amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I regret the author of the bill to establish this park finds it necessary to agree to the terms proposed in the committee amendment. I am in favor of the bill. I think this park ought to be created, but I do not believe it is necessary or that we ought to agree to the amendment, to the effect that if the Congress of the United States sees fit to make additional appropriations for parks it shall be prohibited from doing it for this park for the next 5 years.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think the gentleman need be unnecessarily disturbed about that, because we may change this next week or the week after. The gentleman has heard the chairman of the committee offer an amendment today, after all the talk had been made, which absolutely does away with the committee amendment itself. So the gentleman need not worry about it in the future.

Mr. HASTINGS. The minority leader is quite right. I knew this amendment would not have any binding effect upon the Congress. The Congress next year could provide funds for the improvement of this park. However, it will morally bind and embarrass any Member of Congress from asking for funds to improve the park. I think the Congress should do that, and I do not believe it is necessary to have this kind of an amendment added to this bill in order to secure favorable action upon it. I think this bill should stand on its own merits. We can pass the bill without the amendment. I think it is a park that ought to be established. I have always favored it. It has certain unique and distinctive features, as has already been explained, and for that reason I rose to say that I regret the sponsor of the bill has felt it necessary to yield so that this amendment to the bill may be adopted.

There are 22 national parks throughout the country. Congress appropriates for them annually through the Interior Department appropriation bill. I have had the privilege of serving on the subcommittee which prepares this bill, for many years.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the bill carries appropriations aggregating $11,775,137 for the National Park Service. In addition there was allotted from the funds provided in the National Recovery Act, for public works of various kinds, including roads and trails in the national parks, $32,092,450.27. In other words, a grand total of $43,867,587.27 has been authorized to be expended on national parks for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934.

In order to make the national parks of use to the public and acceptable they must be improved. There must be facilities to house people who visit them each year. There must be roads and trails through the parks. It is not necessary to disturb the flora and fauna in the Everglades Park. The Everglades can be preserved in primitive shape, but when people visit this park they must be provided with places to eat and to stay, and they must be given some comforts. Otherwise, the national parks will not be visited. If this area is not to be improved at all, then there is no need to establish a park there. Untold millions of people visit and enjoy the parks throughout the country, and they will only visit this one when and if the park is improved, so that comforts for visitors may be provided for.

This improvement is largely in the interest of the ordinary citizen visiting the park. The wealthy, of course, can go to the hotels in the adjacent cities and towns, but those who visit this park in automobiles and desire to camp there at small expense must have accommodations provided for them where they can have places to eat and stay and to buy food, as are provided in the other parks throughout the country.

This bill ties the hands of the Representatives in Congress from Florida from asking for an appropriation for 5 years. Of course, Florida must first act in securing title to and donating approximately 1,300,000 acres of land, and this will require some time. However, when that is done, unless this area is improved, as the other parks throughout the country, it will not invite the millions of visitors who desire to go there and enjoy it during the winter months.

I had the pleasure of visiting this area many years ago, and I want to attest that there are many distinctive features there that are well worthy of preserving and which will attract a great many visitors, providing roads and trails are built, sanitation is provided for, and the park improved along the lines of the other national parks throughout the country. This will require money, and if the Government is going to accept the responsibility for this park it should be improved along with the other parks of the country.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen pressed favorable consideration for the establishment of this park for several years. I understand the bill has heretofore passed the Senate. It has been favorably reported on by the National Park Service, and I hope the bill will finally pass Congress during the present session.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 22, in the parentheses, strike out "Stat. 535" and insert "39 Stat. 535."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: On page 3, after line 8, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The said area or areas shall be permanently reserved as a wilderness, and no development of the project or plan for the entertainment of visitors shall be undertaken which will interfere with the preservation intact of the unique flora and fauna and essential primitive natural conditions now prevailing in this area."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain statements from the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion about how this bill came up today. In 1928 Senator FLETCHER secured the passage of a bill in the Senate providing for an investigation of the proposed national Everglades Park and on the 1st of March 1929, 3 days before retiring to private life, I secured the passage of said bill in the House. Those making the investigation made a favorable report, and I am glad the good people of Florida returned me to Congress and made it possible for me to participate today in the final consideration of the bill and, I trust and believe, the passage of the bill.

I am indeed sorry my Republican friends have indulged in misstatements of facts and have endeavored to make the bill a partisan question. During the 15 years I have served in the House, this is the first time I have known my friends on the opposite side to treat a matter of national importance in such a manner and so grossly—I trust not knowingly—misstate facts. I refrain from believing it is a partisan matter, and I am satisfied many of my friends on the opposite side of the aisle will join with us on this side in passing this bill and make possible this wonderful national park.

One of my friends on the opposite side stated California had unloaded all of her lemons on the Government, and now Florida was undertaking to outdo California and give to the Government the largest lemon ever presented to the Government. It is indeed unfortunate that they have undertaken to arraign California and Florida against each other, but I am satisfied they will not be successful and that California and Florida will continue to work hand and hand for the betterment and upbuilding of both States. Let me assure my friend on the opposite side Florida has no lemons to offer the Government and California would not give the Government one if she could.

I looked at my distinguished friend from Massachusetts while he was talking about snakes and wondered if he was talking about the snake we kept down there in prohibition days to bite northern people in order that they might secure some whisky under the guise of curing the snake bite.

Perhaps he got there after the snake was tired and worn out from biting others and therefore the snake could not bite him, and so my good friend, the hotel man from Massachusetts, has been seeing snakes ever since. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I would remind my colleagues that more than a million people from their districts last year went down to Florida within 30 or 40 miles of this wonderful park. If they should happen to read the discussion here on the floor of the House today I wonder what they would think of the learned Congressman who represent them in Congress. Talk about your parks in Pennsylvania, they are all right, but this park is not for our people in Florida, it is for your people who spend the winter, our summer months, down there.

Much has been said about our hotels. We realize the fact that our wealthy people can go to the hotels mentioned today and pay their rates of $25 to $50 a day, but I visualize the time when the common people of America can do down to Florida and, like myself and others who for more than 30 years have enjoyed our outdoor life, bask in our glorious sunlight, and enjoy the wonderful natural scenery of this park, and sleep in small cabins, at nominal expense. It is for these and those interested in nature for whom I am appealing today.

Unfortunately, today Messrs. Daugherty and Collier have been mentioned in this debate. I know both of these gentlemen and while I am satisfied like all people interested in the welfare of our citizens they are deeply interested in securing the passage of this bill, let me state neither of these gentlemen have ever approached me about this park, and so far as I know, they have not taken the matter up with any of my colleagues from Florida. Neither of them need any defense at my hands for they are able to defend themselves. I again repeat it is unfortunate that citizens on the floor of the House are abused and criticized when they have no chance to defend themselves.

I sincerely trust prejudice will not enter into the question. Speaking for myself, I hope my colleagues know me well enough to know I would not mislead them when I state to you anyone who makes the statement that we will be asking for millions and millions of dollars as soon as this bill becomes a law does not know what he is talking about. On my responsibility as a Member of Congress at large from my State, and weighing my words, I assure you such is not the case. This park, if properly handled by the Government, will not cost the Government large sums of money but, in fact, will be a revenue-producing park. To make this possible we only have to provide camping grounds for our northern, eastern, and western friends, and the nominal sum charged will turn it into a revenue-producing park.

I sincerely trust you will not vote this bill down due to prejudice, misinformation, and because the park is proposed to be established in the southern section of our country.

Do not hold it against the citizens of our State that they voted for Hoover in 1928, for at that time I tried to convince the people they were making an error, and I assure you since then they have fully repented, and you can hardly get anyone down there to admit he voted the Republican ticket.

Since I became a Member of Congress I have voted for the improvement of every national park and have looked upon the national parks as a national question. I now appeal to my colleagues not to be misled by the argument which has been used on the other side, but to look on the Everglades National Park as a national matter and join with us in passing the bill.

In order that those who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may have some of the facts before them, I am appending hereto brief excerpts from the hearings before the Public Lands Committee, of which my able and distinguished friend and colleague, Hon. RENÉ L. DEROUEN, is chairman.

[NOTE.—Pages referred to in the following excerpts are pages of the hearing:]

ESTABLISHMENT OF EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK—HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS, SEVENTY-FIRST CONGRESS

STATEMENT OF HORACE M. ALBRIGHT, DIRECTOR NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

We found the section absolutely distinctive. There is certainly nothing else like it in the United States. That is one point in its favor as a national park. It has a unique topography. It is true it is quite flat. There are no mountains there. The landscape is of water and plant life. We found the most extraordinary display of bird life there, and yet we could very easily see that it was something that was very precious and subject to exploitation by meat hunters. We actually came in contact with men engaged in poaching on those rare birds (p. 5).

People do not think of Yellowstone Park as a particularly beautiful thing, although those of us who know it best do think of its beauties more than its wonders; but people go to Yellowstone to see Old Faithful Geyser and those other wonderful manifestations of subterranean disturbance. That is what attracts most people. Now, in the same way they would go to the Everglades. It is a strange land full of strange plants. The landscape is strange. The coconut-grove-lined beaches are strange.

There is an atmosphere of mystery and strangeness about the whole thing that attracts the attention of all who see the Everglades and will attract the multitude as much as a park like Yellowstone. We have been reading about the Everglades from the earliest days of geography study. The Everglades, like the big trees and the geysers, are in everybody's mind, and we should be given an opportunity to see them (p. 6). There is no place in the country where you will see such conditions of bird life as you will in the Everglades, particularly in these sections tributary to Great White Water Bay, Alligator Lake, and other areas. Here there are the various species of egret, heron, and ibis, the man-of-war bird, the roseate spoonbill, and there are probably some flamingos left. Probably two thirds of this park should be kept as a wilderness accessible only by boat and on foot (p. 8).

In speaking of how spectacular it is, Mr. Albright says, "For instance, the plant life alone. Have you ever seen a mangrove forest? That is spectacular. The roots start out of the tree 10 or 15 feet up in the air and spread out in all directions. Instead of starting down underground, they start way up in the air. These great rookeries, aside from the fact that there are birds in the rookeries, there is nothing more spectacular and thrilling than to see those tens of thousands of enormous birds in the trees. You can see them for a mile before you get to them, just as far as your eyes can reach, trees laden with great birds. There is a distinction there between just preserving birds and animals, and the thrill that you get and the inspiration and the education you get out of going and seeing them (p. 11).

You can take people through these Everglades, and they will see all the distinctive features, the fine forests, all the various species of palms, the coconut groves, the beaches, one or two of these great bird rookeries, and the other areas containing unique forests, unique plant life, and let them see all of the distinctive unique things, the highlights of the area, and you will give them just as much in that section as you will in practically all of the other parks (p. 18).

STATEMENT OF CASPER W. HODGSON, WHO INSPECTED THE EVERGLADES

I am chairman of the national parks committee of the conservation committee of the Camp Fire Club of America and chairman of the executive committee of the National Parks Association. The Camp Fire Club endorsed the Everglades region as a national-park proposition, but the National Parks Association has taken no formal action upon the matter. I wrote to Robert Sterling Yard, executive secretary of the National Parks Association, and to the National Park Service, dated February 18, 1930, as follows:

"I have just gotten back from the Florida trip, and I will say to you in passing that I saw what comes nearer to a wilderness area than anything I have yet struck in a national park. It was inspirational in a high degree. It was not so geological, but very elemental and primitive and certainly more biological than anything I have yet struck anywhere. No human touch in it at all. Some 20 by 40 miles of that kind of thing is hard to find any more. It will soon be spoiled, however, unless we take it, and I am for taking it. It will be doing something constructive to get behind this. It conforms more to national-park standards than anything I have seen east of the Mississippi. I believe those in the party were pretty much of one mind about it" (p. 25).

STATEMENT OF DR. H. C. BUMPUS, BROWN UNIVERSITY, PROVIDENCE, R.I.

I am not claiming that it is our purpose to educate—a more or less offensive word—the people that go into the national parks. I do claim that when visitors want substantial information concerning the behavior of nature they are entitled to receive it, and, furthermore, when a large, undeveloped area like the Everglades, possessing physical characters unrepresented in other parks and having great educational value, is available for inclusion in a system, one's duty becomes clear, and the more so since the national park system will be forever incomplete if this tropical area is not acquired (p. 27).

Now, I am coming to my second point: Is it worth preserving? One reason why I feel it is worth preserving is because hard-headed business men have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in making imitations, for exhibition purposes, of what there is in this area and the contiguous waters. I ran over the figures roughly before this meeting, and I think that the American Museum of Natural History has expended at least $200,000 in its endeavor to give to the people of New York and the Nation at large some idea of what nature profusely exhibits in the southern part of Florida and the surrounding waters of ocean. Museums have sent their men into this rich area, they have made their collections, it has taken literally years to reproduce in our various cities what Florida exhibits as originals. If this area should cost $5,000,000 the interest on the investment would be $250,000. Institutions for educational and for inspirational purposes are spending, have spent, in reproducing what is already here practically the equivalent of the interest on this amount of money (p. 28).

STATEMENT OF DR. GILBERT PEARSON, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF AUDUBON SOCIETIES, NEW YORK CITY

Perhaps I have said enough about the bird life except to say that in the Royal Palm Hammock Mr. Arthur H. Howell, of the National Museum of Washington, a Government man here, identified 127 species of birds. There are various rare birds breeding in the Everglades. The Everglade kite, the swallow-tailed kite, and the limpkin are examples. The roseate spoonbill, once found in Florida by hundreds of thousands, is very rare today (p. 36). People can travel by boat, and I can see the possibilities for joy and happiness for the use of such craft. You were talking yesterday about roads—my idea of a road would be to rebuild this one to Cape Sable, as Mr. Albright said. Then it should go around White Water Bay and cross the western edge of the prairie country—that is the marsh area—and join the Tamiami Trail toward its western end. One could go through the area in a wonderful 2 days' trip, with a stopping place down here among these palm groves at the Cape Sable beaches.

The interminable waterways and the creeks that wander back through all this vast western part of the glades there—no man knows them all. The people who know them best, acquainted with them, are the Seminole Indians. Last year I was advised that there were 551 Seminoles left in south Florida. They dress picturesquely; they wander through the glades; they shoot the big wood ibis for food; they trap fur-bearing animals and shoot alligators for their hides. In short, they earn a living in about any way they can. A few of them go out and work for the whites. They are mostly living up north of this area, but some of them camp through here. What more delightful outing could a man and his wife have than to take a camping trip with a couple of Seminoles in their long dugout canoe, wearing their picturesque costumes? Trusty guides are these silent, smoking Indians who know the country so well (p. 39).

STATEMENT OF HARLAN P. KELSEY, MEMBER OF THE SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN NATIONAL PARK COMMISSION, SALEM, MASS.

Again, there is no other area in this country devoted to a national park like this one. It is totally different in land, water, climate, plant, and animal features, as well as recreational features. It is very remarkable as being the only land in America that is "in the making." Dr. Charles Torrey Simpson, who has written so much about southern Florida, has described it as the only land in this country which is emerging from the ocean. Everywhere else there is a breaking down, a washing away of our continent; here there was once emergence, then submergence, and now emergence again (p. 45).

STATEMENT OF JOHN K. SMALL, HEAD CURATOR NEW YORK BOTANICAL GARDEN

I carried out enough for botanical specimens only, as much as I could carry in my hand. I may have carried a good deal out in the 30 years I have visited this area, perhaps twice a year for 30 years (p. 49).

I have lived in the Everglades for a month at a time, and I have been in the southern part of the Everglades where there was no rain in sight, and right around our camp the water sometimes would come up a foot. That rain may have fallen 200 miles north and come down underground. So the principal thing that the Everglades and the big cypress swamp are fit for is a national park (p. 51).

STATEMENT OF DR. HOWARD A. KELLY, JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

No; I was never but once bitten by a king, and the lesion of the bite was insignificant. I might here relate a story. I had two king snakes some months ago, one called scientifically Lampropeltis floridana and the other Lampropeltis boylii, from Utah. I kept the two together, being generically first cousins, the smaller Florida one and the considerably larger one from Utah. And they did well and lived amicably for some weeks. One day, however, I came to the cage and found one suspiciously larger snake in the cage which I had X-rayed, and there [pointing to the radiograph on the table] is the explanation of it—a perfect picture of the sinuous and doubled-up longer enveloped in the smaller. Florida had swallowed Utah (p. 56).

STATEMENT OF DR. PAUL BARTSCH, CURATOR OF THE NATIONAL MUSEUM

I must therefore say that Florida, so far as this projected park is concerned, was most fortunate when the boom broke, because if the boom had continued much longer there would have been no need for anybody to make this effort to preserve those things which are worth while for preservation; they would have been destroyed. The breaking of that boom has saved enough to give the Nation the right to the heritage that nature has produced for it there through countless centuries, and the generations to come will have an opportunity likewise to enjoy it. I feel that we have a real national duty for the preservation of this area (p. 61).

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I did not draft this amendment, but I think it was largely through my insistence, as I stated before, that the amendment was agreed to. Of course this bill did not come before the Committee on Wild Life Conservation because the committee had jurisdiction, but extensive hearings on the measure were held by our committee.

One of the very first points of opposition against the bill was called to our attention by several conservation organizations, and as a result of that opposition this amendment was proposed, and it was agreed to by the sponsors of the bill.

If the park has any merit whatsoever that merit lies in its unique characteristics; and these unique characteristics should be preserved if it is to become a national park. They cannot be preserved if the park is to be made available to every person in the United States and is to be commercialized as some of our national-park areas have been.

Some of the opposition directed against this measure goes to the question of whether at this time we can afford to take on any additional governmental obligations. The Government has been protected so that at least until the succeeding Congress no money may be spent by the United States Government, and I hope this provision may be kept intact.

If we are to save for future generations some of the beauty spots of America then we may well give consideration to an area of this kind. If it is worth a thin dime to the people of Florida, or to the people of the United States, it is worth preserving in its natural state, and this is why I am concerned about this amendment.

There are two kinds of conservation; one goes to the question of utilizing our natural resources, the other of preserving them unused. If they are of commercial value, of course, they are valuable because they may be utilized; but there are, thank God, still left in this country some areas that can be of greatest use and be most enjoyed only if kept in their pristine State. Nature will take care of them if given a chance. This amendment is written into the bill so that the devastating hand of man may not destroy the flora and the fauna of this great tropical area. If this amendment is adopted, it will mean that the Government will refuse to spend any money for 5 years and the Treasury will be protected. At the same time a choice spot will be preserved for the succeeding generations of the people of America.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The area known as "the Everglades" has existed, of course, for a great many years. Does the gentleman know whether anybody has ever destroyed any part of it to date?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I may say to the gentleman, not from personal observation but on good authority, I am informed that this area stands a good chance of being destroyed through commercialization. Some of the Royal Palms of this area have already been destroyed, and some of the rookeries and nesting grounds of the choicest birds of America have been destroyed. We should not permit it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHRISTIANSON: Page 3, line 3, after the word "Indians", strike out the following: "which are not in conflict with the purposes for which the Everglades National Park is created."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that we have passed this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Committee rises under the rule.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DISNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2837) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 384, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Speaker will put them in gross.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

(While the House was dividing, the following occurred:)

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When there is a division demanded and the Members stand, they ask for the yeas and nays. I think the division ought to be decided first, then the request for the yeas and nays made.

Mr. SNELL. I have the right to ask for the yeas and nays at any time.

Mr. BYRNS. That is true; but I think this is a practice that has been followed here repeatedly. I think gentlemen should be permitted to take their seats before a request for the yeas and nays is made.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 145, not voting 64, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed by the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I question whether we ought to go to the expense now of creating a lot of conversation in the RECORD in reference to this bill and adding additional expense to the taxpayers of this country. Is there not going to be some recognition of the fact that this has already cost a lot of money, and what good is it going to do?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXPLANATION OF A VOTE

Mr. KVALE. I was detained out of the Chamber during the last roll call. Had I been present I would have voted "yea."

THE REDEMPTION OF WORN AND ABRADED COIN

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Members of the House to the discriminations being made by the Treasury Department in redeeming currency. If paper currency is defaced and mutilated and is presented for redemption, the Treasury allows the full value of the currency of the claim presented for payment. If the currency presented happens to be silver, the claimant is only allowed the bullion value of the metal, even in cases where the denomination and imprint of the mint is discernible, as in the case of the claimant whose letter is included herewith for the information of the Members of the House:

QUARTZBURG, IDAHO, May 8, 1934.

Hon. COMPTON I. WHITE,
Representative in Congress,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. WHITE: I am taking the liberty of writing you in the hope of enlisting your valuable aid in endeavoring to get a square deal under the new deal for one of its most sincere and earnest advocates and a lifelong Democrat—myself.

In the fire which destroyed the town of Quartzburg in 1929 it was my misfortune to lose, in addition to our home, household goods, and business, 15½ pounds of United States silver dollars, halves, quarters, and dimes, representing a value of approximately $250.

This silver money got hot enough during the fire to partially melt and fuse, but when pried apart one can still read denomination, date, and United States of America on most of the coins.

I corresponded with the United States Treasury late in 1929 regarding this silver, and they sent me the enclosed marked circular concerning the redemption of paper currency and coin and further advised that I send it to the nearest United States mint for adjustment. In accordance with these instructions I sent it by registered mail to Denver Mint, January 18, 1930, and was advised from there that all they would give me was bullion value. I couldn't see it that way, so I let it lay there hoping for an advance in the white metal until last summer, when I was advised by the mint that, due to the lack of storage space, I must either sanction its melting and sale at bullion value or ask for its return. So the "white elephant" came home again, stinging me for $4 in real money—paper silver—expenses and express charges. Too deep for me! According to the enclosed circular, fragments of silver certificates, properly certified, are redeemable at face value. The entire lot of coins are easily recognizable, and they want to give me bullion value. Is our silver dollar really money or just a cheap joke? Poor money for a poor people?

Uncle Sam put this silver I have out at a value of $1 per ounce and to be at all fair he should pay a fair price for its surrender. Say, new silver dollars less the actual cost of coinage. However, in the present depleted state of my finances, I would be willing to accept the price he is paying for newly mined silver, that is, 64½ cents per ounce.

I have delayed writing you about this matter, hoping against judgment that yourself and silver colleagues would be able to soon force remonetization; but as the session day by day draws nearer to its close, I am forced to the conclusion that we must still longer await that happy day.

Had we not had a change of administration, I doubt very much whether I should have had the courage to again plead for a fair price for this silver; but I can't believe that our beloved President and his "new dealers" will want to repudiate any of our money or take unfair advantage of any citizen, no matter how obscure or humble his status.

Assuring you, Mr. White, that all efforts in my behalf for simple justice in this matter will be greatly appreciated,

Respectfully yours,

FRANK DALY,
Chairman Boise County Commissioners.

I desire to call your attention to the fact that silver money is being constantly withdrawn from circulation by banks turning in slightly worn or abrased coins for which they are paid full face value.

When the congressional party visited the Philadelphia Mint last year the party was shown a huge pile of silver coins, amounting to $4,889,103.86, piled in the vault, worn and abrased coins, held out of circulation, for which the banks had been paid in full. This money was held in idleness and out of circulation at a time when business was experiencing the greatest money shortage ever known in this country. This was done as an economy measure because the item for recoinage had been stricken from the Budget by the previous administration. From the figures supplied by the Treasury Department, we find that at that time $7,915,704.40 silver coin was withdrawn from circulation on account of being lightweight and abrased, and was lying idle in the mint and the Federal Reserve bank.

Surely, in view of the desperate need for money, the Treasury was following a very short-sighted policy in withholding this money from circulation.

The interest lost to the Government on this idle money has run into huge figures.

MAJ. JOHN WESLEY POWELL

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, at Jackson, Ohio, which is located in the district which I have the honor to represent, there is soon to be erected a monument to the honor of John Wesley Powell, one of America's greatest scientists and explorers. This monument is being erected by the Improved Order of Red Men, many of the ritualistic teachings of which have been taken from the life and writings of this great man.

Mr. Powell was born in New York in 1834, but was brought to Jackson, Ohio, at a very early age, where he spent most of his early life. There he soon showed that he was endowed by nature with very unusual mental acumen. His father was a minister who took a very active interest in the anti-slavery movement. Young Powell had opportunities to see and feel the ebbing and flowing of the currents of sentiment that moved the pioneer people with reference to this intensely human question. He frequently found himself in the presence of many brilliant, determined men who collaborated with his father in the cause to which they were all sincerely devoted. In this group were Salmon P. Chase, Joshua Giddings, and others of great prominence in the anti-slavery movement. He heard them as they fervently laid their plans to free an enslaved race, and his young spirit was fired with an ambition to achieve. His genius was recognized by one of that brilliant group, who took steps to encourage the lad and to remove him into an environment where his natural abilities could develop and unfold. In spite of the isolation and privations of pioneer life and the stunted finances of a preacher's family, young Powell pressed on over a course often beset with discouragements to the heights of learning reached only by geniuses. Although his scholastic attainments took him to heights where the common man could not reach, yet he was not beyond the reach of those sentiments of patriotism which move people in times of war. He interpreted Lincoln's call for volunteers as a command to him to match his learning and his life, if necessary, with the muscle and life of his fellowmen. The paths of glory are trod by the learned and unlearned, and these paths all "lead but to the grave."

His genius was soon recognized by his superior officers. General Grant reposed great confidence in his ability as an organizer and military strategist. As proof of his personal bravery and valor he continued throughout the greater part of the war as a one-armed soldier, for he had left one arm on the battlefield at Shiloh. He ranked as a major at the close of the war, and was always spoken of in after life as Major Powell.

The long, arduous service in the Army was not wasted time to this man of learning, for it made of him a man of action. It fired him with a desire for exploration. Vast unexplored regions attracted him. He surrounded himself with men and women who, like himself, were ready to risk all in the pursuit of knowledge. He led many expeditions which brought back facts concerning the fauna and flora and geological formations of the great vast plains of the West and the primeval forests of the North and Northwest. He had heard from the Indians many wonderful stories concerning the stupendous canyon of the Colorado River. This great river was unknown for much of its course to civilized man. Major Powell, still possessed of that intrepid spirit that carried him through countless difficulties, assayed the task of forcing from this dangerous river her theretofore hidden secrets. In 1869, with 10 picked men in four boats, he started on a perilous journey, which carried him through dangerous rapids and over many precipitous falls. He was the first to traverse the depths of the Grand Canyon. This task had successfully challenged the hardihood of the Indians who sought to dissuade him from his purpose. To Major Powell belongs the honor and distinction of having been the first conquerer of the dangerous Colorado. Congress took cognizance of this great contribution to science by causing a memorial monument to be erected to Major Powell and his men on a promontory of the Grand Canyon.

As a naturalist his contributions were such as to place him among America's leaders in that science. His travels in furthering his studies as a naturalist gave him great opportunities and impetus to further his studies in geology. His book entitled "Lands of the Arid Regions", published many years ago, set forth with marvelous insight the conditions of those regions and suggested methods by which the problems concerning these regions have been met by the Government. For many years he directed the work of the Bureau of Geological Survey for the Government.

The life of this great man was not devoted entirely to scientific research among rocks and trees and inarticulate animals, but his greatest work was his effort to tell the world of the origin, history, customs, and character of that great and noble race—the American Indian. To Major Powell more than any other man can be attributed the benevolent attitude which the United States Government has shown toward the Indian. Many long winter nights spent in study of the various Indian languages and in the piecing together of their myths and traditions brought to light many interesting facts theretofore unknown to the science of entomology. His study of the Indian from personal contact while making his many expeditions gave to the world many interesting facts which when told with the friendliness and sympathy that he had for this race ennobled the Indian in the hearts and minds of Americans generally. The Indian shall forever live in the songs and chronicles of America so long as American history is written. He has been the theme of many, many a song and many a story. The gripping portrayal of the virtues and noble characteristics of these—the first Americans—by Major Powell has been responsible in a large degree for the efforts of this great fraternity, the Improved Order of Red Men, in their attempt to teach true Americanism to Americans and to the world.

Major Powell's exhaustive study of the American Indian took him into the study of man in its broadest and most extensive phases. To anthropology he made many valuable contributions. He founded the Ethnological Bureau of the United States Government and conducted it for 23 years. This Bureau is considered as a model by the ethnologists of every land. The latter years of this great man's life were spent in Washington, D.C., where he was a familiar figure in all scientific activities of the Smithsonian Institution and of the United States Government.

He died in Maine in 1902 in his sixty-ninth year.

This great man was not only great in great things but he was also great when measured by his observance of those homely virtues which play a part alike in the activities of the great and in the annals of the poor. Of him an intimate acquaintance, Prof. S. P. Langley, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution said: "I have been more impressed with the simplicity of his character than with the complexity of his knowledge and achievement." Sincere he was and truthful to the point of being unable to bring himself to hint the thing which is not nor even to allow the shadow of doubt in his way." Major Powell imbibed the spirit of the minister's home in which he was brought up. His knowledge of the Bible and things religious was as great as his knowledge in any other direction. Very early in life, to the great satisfaction of his devout parents, he had committed to memory the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. As many another great American he found solace in contemplating eternity.

He accepted his father's philosophy of eternity upon faith and without calling for exact scientific proof. Science and religion did not conflict in him. Science for the mind and religion for the heart was his philosophy. His favorite hymn runs:

I will sing you a song of that beautiful land,
The far-away home of the soul;
Where no storms ever beat on the glittering strand
While the years of eternity roll.

Many years after his great voyage through the Grand Canyon he with a party of friends was viewing the wonders of this great work of God as the sun touched it with a flood of glory, and being overcome by its grandeur, he asked the group to pause while he sang:

Oh! that home of the soul, in my vision and dreams
Its bright jasper walls I can see,
Till I fancy but thinly the veil intervenes
Between that fair city and me.

This memorial is a fitting tribute to a great man. The early citizens of Jackson contributed no small part toward starting him on his illustrious career. The present citizens of Jackson and others are to be congratulated on their efforts to honor his memory that his life might be a light upon the pathway of future generations.

6-HOUR DAY—EMPLOYEES OF CARRIERS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file minority views on the bill (H.R. 7430) to establish a 6-hour day for employees of carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. A. C. WILLFORD

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a very able address delivered by our colleague Hon. A. C. WILLFORD, of Iowa, over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio introduction by myself and address by A. C. WILLFORD, over leased wire from Washington, D.C., over radio station WMT, Waterloo, Iowa, 7:30 p.m., eastern standard time, on May 23, 1934:

Mr. BYRNS. May I say to the people of Iowa and particularly of the Third Congressional District that it is a great personal pleasure to say a word with reference to the record and standing of your Congressman, Hon. A. C. WILLFORD. No one in the entire Congress has a better record of loyalty and fidelity to the administration in its effort to create a new deal and to relieve the country from the depression of the 4 years which preceded the inauguration of President Roosevelt. No Member has given closer or more intelligent attention to pending legislation, and his ability, influence, and standing in Congress and the administrative departments of the Government entitle him to your active support and endorsement.

It is a high privilege to have been a Member of this Congress—the most important in my opinion that has assembled in our generation, and one worthy to rank with those outstanding legislative bodies which mark the new eras in the struggle for human progress. There has been a rebirth in this Nation of that Jeffersonian principle which places human rights above property rights; and the new deal, as President Roosevelt so apply characterizes it, is no longer a theory. It may be modified; it may be changed; but in my opinion, just as surely as the sun shines in the heavens, this Nation will never go back to a condition, to a system, which permitted 2 percent of our population to hold 80 percent of our wealth.

In this great struggle your Congressman, Mr. WILLFORD, has played a most important part. He has stood like a rock for this great principle. No one has contributed more to uphold the hands of the President. By his reelection next November you will not only be serving your own district, but you will be serving the entire Nation. I am sure that I speak for the administration and for the Democrats in Congress when I express the hope that at the election in November you will give him a big majority and return him to Congress to continue the fight which he is making to relieve you and the people of our Nation, and for the restoration of our Government to the people to whom it belongs.

Before closing, may I express my own personal thanks to him for the able, active, and influential aid he has given me as Majority Leader of the House in the passage of those measures recommended by the President for the carrying out of his recovery program, and express the hope that both Democrats and Republicans of your district will return him to the next Congress to help complete the work of the present Congress with which he is so familiar.

MAY 23, 1934.

Mr. WILLFORD. My Democratic and Republican friends in Iowa, good evening.

Three weeks ago tonight I had the pleasure of addressing you over this station from the National Capital in the interest of my renomination as your Congressman from the Third District of Iowa, in the Democratic primaries on June 4. Since that time legislation has been moving rapidly. Tonight it is a pleasure to continue with this message.

A bill before the House at the present time is the regulation of the stock exchange. It has been amusing to me to note the men who are now opposing this measure. They say they are in favor of some sort of regulation but do not say what it is. A few years back when they were in power they did not warn the American people of the dangers that faced them, they did not protest against the unjust and cruel practices of the stock exchanges. The corruption of the stock exchange wrecked fortunes, ruined homes, and left homeless many innocent women and children. The farmers were being bled, the country was going to rack and ruin, and the small business man was losing everything he had. In the year of 1921 there were in the United States 21 people with incomes of $1,000,000 a year or more. In 1928 it had grown to 511, and in 1929 it reached 513 who had incomes of more than a million dollars a year. These millions came from the American people. The highway robbers of the stock exchanges benefited at the expense of the American people. We are trying to prevent this in the future by the passage of this bill. I promised you 2 years ago I would do everything in my power to drive out the money changers, and I am keeping that promise. The enforcement of this bill will be delegated to the Federal Trade Commission, which is doing some of the greatest work that has ever been done by any agency of the Government. By its investigation of the utilities in the last few years, it has brought relief to the American people through a reduction of utility rates to the consumer of about $118,000,000. A few days ago, in the State of Illinois, the Power Trust, seeing the handwriting on the wall, undertook to placate the people of Illinois and reduced their light and power rates over $1,000,000 a year.

The lower House of Congress has recently passed what is known as the "tariff bill" of this administration, and the matter is now pending in the Senate and will be passed and signed by the President before this Congress adjourns. I regard this piece of legislation as one of the most constructive and most beneficial, if not the very most important, that this Congress or any other Congress has enacted into law. This will give the President of the United States power to negotiate in the interest of farm products and factories, and will be the means of establishing more friendly trade relations with such countries of the world as we need to deal with. The benefits of this legislation will begin to unfold to the American people within a year. It is common sense written into law. It is absolutely necessary for the return of prosperity to the American farmer that he may have a market into which he may go with his products. This will bring great benefits to Iowa farm products and to the manufacturer.

During the Seventy-third Congress I have received from my friends and constituents many petitions covering many bills. I have always given heed especially to those soiled by the hands of toil, for they are my friends and need my utmost support at all times. They have sincerity of purpose and faith in me. I received petitions concerning the Frazier bill. I signed a petition to bring this bill on the floor quite some time ago. However, it does not look as though it will be possible to get this through this session, but I sincerely believe and hope we will be able to get a bill through whereby the farmer will not have to pay any higher rate of interest than that provided for in the Frazier bill of 1½ percent interest and 1½ percent on the principal. I think with any kind of a break the farmer can pay that much. It will be the means of keeping our farmers on their land. The farmer is the basic wealth producer of our country, and he must have a fair chance. If this bill is not passed during this session, it will be one of the first the next session.

I have also received petitions concerning the Capper-Hope-Wearin bill, controlling the direct buying of hogs and livestock. We were led to believe when the practice of direct buying was put into effect that it would benefit the farmer. Propaganda was sent broadcast and the farmer was hoodwinked into allowing it to go through. We have now found that direct buying should be controlled. It has affected the price of hogs in more ways than one, and the Capper-Hope-Wearin bill will regulate this so that the farmer will secure a better price for his livestock in an open competitive market. There is a question whether this will be passed during this session; and if not, it will also be one of the first to come up in the next Congress. Petitions have been received from railroad friends and employees of the railroads. I believe railroad legislation is necessary. Many bills have been presented, and I am greatly interested in the one that takes care of the railroad man in his old age. In other words, the pension. Every man who has served his 30 years or so with the railroad or who has been injured through accident in the service should receive a pension. I personally know many men who have spent the best years of their lives in railroad work only to receive a lay-off when their earning days were past. I am heartily in favor of such legislation as will rectify this condition.

Regarding silver: President Roosevelt has agreed to a silver basis of 75–25 percent. While this is not as great as many would wish, it is a step in the right direction. If silver can be recognized and have a 25-percent basis established, get new money into circulation, which we are sorrowfully in need of, we can then trade with 80 percent of the people of the earth. It will create new markets and extend our influence. It will reach down and help directly and indirectly every producer, manufacturer, and laborer. I believe the recognition of silver as a basic metal would be most essential. I cast my first vote for W. J. Bryan on his 16-to-1 policy, and I have been a Bryan advocate ever since. I have heard silver explained by some of the most able men in the country today, and I am thoroughly convinced that this change must be made before we can return to a normal state.

Senator JOHNSON, of California, recently offered a bill which provides that no credit be allowed a foreign nation that has not paid their interest and the installment on their war debts. These nations have been allowed to get away from paying their war debts and at the same time come to us for money to finance their great institutions. This bill has passed the Senate, and I hope it will be very favorably recognized in the House. Those who do not deal fairly should not be recognized in a monetary way until they come clean and pay their debts.

Regarding subsistence homesteads. This offers an opportunity for those who are crowded in the cities to get out and have a place of their own where they may bring up their children away from the city streets. It is now possible under proper regulation for the Government to purchase tracts of land, to build houses and make improvements, and the homes may be paid for over a long period of years in installments that can easily be met. I am trying to have some of these homesteads established in the third district and hope this can be brought about.

We have been visited this year with a condition no one could have foretold—the drought. The dust storms of the Northwest and the drought of the Middle West have wrecked the prospects of many tillers of the soil. Congress has decided that something must be done, and a meeting was held a couple of days ago of the Members of the stricken States. A committee was appointed consisting of one Member of each State and we of Iowa felt that the Honorable GUY GILLETTE should be on this committee. He is on the west of us and his district is in the area suffering most. Everyone suffering from this disastrous drought will be given assistance. A fund is being established and help will be given in every way possible. Examiners are on the ground now making a survey. I am going to make a personal effort to see that the people of my Third District are properly cared for and compensated for any loss they might suffer from the drought.

I must stay in Washington until Congress adjourns so that I may look after your interests. I have tried to play fair and square. Every man has the right to be a candidate for any office. I have no purpose to enter into a bitter campaign in these primaries for the honorable place I hold, because my record is well known and my constituents and friends, both Democrats and Republicans, do not need to be told. If other candidates believe differently, the people, who are not easily misled, always decide the issue. Those who have known me in Waterloo and the Third District of Iowa as a merchant for 25 years will not believe the barrage of falsehoods and misstatements which are beginning to appear from men who desire to hold the position I now occupy. Without the control of any press or news publication, but through the courtesy of a few loyal small-town newspapers and the radio, I have endeavored to keep my constituents advised of congressional proceedings from the standpoint of a participant, and not from that of critics who may be prejudiced because of their own candidates. I want to say again that I am proud of the Democratic Party under the leadership of President Roosevelt.

Good night.

BANK-DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3025, with Mr. FULLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee has two outstanding provisions and purposes. One is to postpone for the period of 1 year the permanent provision of the Banking Act of 1933 establishing a corporation to insure deposits in all member banks of the Federal Reserve System and in nonmember banks applying for membership and in position to show a condition of solvency to the satisfaction of the Deposit Insurance Corporation Board.

Under the act of 1933 provision was made for the insurance of deposits in both member and nonmember banks not exceeding $2,500 for each depositor for the temporary period between January 1, 1934, and June 30, 1934, inclusive. Under the provisions of the bill now under consideration the plan for temporary insurance of deposits would be extended for the period of 1 year from the 1st of July 1934, until the 30th of June 1935, inclusive, and the amount of the individual deposit insured would be raised from $2,500 to $5,000.

The Banking Act of 1933 provided for raising capital stock of the Deposit Insurance Corporation. This was to be raised through subscription of $150,000,000 by the Treasury of the United States, the further subscription of approximately $140,000,000 by the Federal Reserve banks, this being one half of the total surplus of the Federal Reserve banks. Banks becoming members of the Corporation are required to subscribe for capital in an amount equal to one fourth of 1 percent of all deposits. This would establish a fund of about $500,000,000. Under the temporary plan all banks participating in the benefits of the Deposit Insurance Corporation are assessed for the support of the fund an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of the insurable deposits of the bank, with the right of the Corporation to call for this assessment in two installments, and the further right, if found necessary and desirable, to call for an additional assessment in like amount, making the total assessment liability of banks under the temporary plan an amount equal to 1 percent of the deposits insured. The Board has assessed the banks one quarter of 1 percent of their insured deposits under the temporary plan. By this assessment the fund for the temporary-insurance plan has been raised by the amount of about $40,000,000, making the total amount of the fund on hand at this time $330,000,000. Should the Board call for the full assessment permissible under the temporary plan an additional amount of $120,000,000 would be raised; this makes the available resources of the Corporation under the temporary plan about $450,000,000.

The provisions of the bill under consideration raise the individual-deposit liability of the Insurance Corporation from $2,500 to $5,000. The assessment liability being based upon the amount of the deposits insured would make possible an addition to the fund of about $8,000,000, according to estimates furnished by officials of the Corporation.

The best figures available indicate that the amount of additional deposits that would be insured under the bill now before us raising the amount of each individual depositor insured from $2,500 to $5,000 would be something between $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,000,000. This additional insurance, it is estimated, would cover an additional number of depositors to the extent of something like 2 percent of the total number of depositors insured.

It is estimated by the officials of the Deposit Insurance Corporation and by the officials of the Treasury Department that under the temporary insurance plan 37 or 38 percent or more of the total deposits of banks insured are now covered by the provisions of the temporary plan. So that if we raise the amount from $2,500 to $5,000, we shall have insured 40 percent, or possibly 45 percent, of the total deposits of the banks belonging to the Deposit Insurance Corporation under the temporary plan.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman give us the amount of additional liability involved in this plan?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have just stated that the officials of the Deposit Insurance Corporation estimate that there will be an additional number of depositors to the extent of about 2 percent; and from two to three billion dollars additional deposits would be covered and that the additional assessment made possible would amount to something like $8,000,000. I think I have made the situation clear.

Under the permanent plan, which according to existing law, will become effective on the 1st of July this year, all deposits up to $10,000 would be covered in full; all deposits between $10,000 and $50,000 would be insured at 75 percent and all deposits above $50,000 would be insured to 50 percent of the excess.

Under the permanent plan, the banks will be required to subscribe for stock as the capital of the Corporation in the amount of one half of 1 percent of the total deposits of banks participating in the benefits of the Corporation. There is in the bill provision that in the event the funds of the Corporation be depleted to a point where the amount is less than one fourth of 1 percent of all deposits of banks belonging to the Corporation, the Board shall levy an assessment against all members of the Corporation in an amount equal to one fourth of 1 percent of their total deposits. It will be seen, therefore, that under the permanent plan, the banks belonging to the Deposit Insurance Corporation will be unified for the protection of depositors. It is a mutual-insurance plan.

Under the permanent plan, when a bank becomes insolvent, if it is a national bank the Deposit Insurance Corporation would step in and take charge of the assets of the institution, paying off all insured depositors either in cash or by substitution of a deposit obligation for which the new bank would be responsible. The new bank to be established would step in when the original institution was declared insolvent, and operate for a period of 2 years as a clearing house, having the benefits and the facilities of the Federal Reserve System without requirement of stock subscription to the Federal Reserve, as in the case of ordinary member banks.

The new bank would operate to carry on the business of the old bank or liquidating its assets, paying off depositors, and conducting a clearing house, in the meantime giving opportunity to the former stockholders, if desired by them, and, if not, to other citizens of the community to come in and organize a national bank. But if no such organization be had at the end of 2 years, the Deposit Insurance Corporation would terminate the operation of such bank.

Under the temporary plan now in effect, and which has been in effect since the 1st of January of this year, all member banks of the Federal Reserve System have become members of the corporation, and about 90 percent of the nonmember banks, trust companies, and mutual savings banks of the country. The banks insured at this time under the temporary plan have deposits of approximately $15,000,000,000.

The officials of the Deposit Insurance Corporation advise us that there are administrative difficulties which make it seem prudent and necessary to extend the temporary provisions of the act for another year. Under the law nonmember banks to be insured after the 1st of July must be certified as solvent. National banks must be certified by the Comptroller of the Currency for membership in the Deposit Insurance Corporation. State banks belonging to the Federal Reserve System or member banks other than national banks must be certified by the Federal Reserve Board for insurance after the 1st of July.

We can all appreciate the stupendous task that confronted the banking officials of the country following the collapse that occurred in March 1933. It is fair to say that these officials have performed a gigantic task with great credit to themselves and to the Nation. It was said by many that it was folly to attempt to inaugurate the temporary insurance plan on the 1st of January of this year, but the contention proved to be unfounded.

In that connection may I read part of a resolution that was adopted by the American Bankers' Association in their annual meeting last fall? I quote from an extended resolution adopted in that meeting:

> The American Bankers' Association hereby records its deliberate judgment that the dangers involved in attempting to initiate at the beginning of 1934 the provisions for deposit insurance contained in the Banking Act of 1933 are genuine and serious.

In this resolution request was made that President Roosevelt take steps to prevent the effectiveness of the deposit-insurance provision of the Banking Act on the 1st of January 1934. Of course, such request to the Chief Executive to set aside a solemn enactment of the Congress of the United States was, to say the least, a futile thing.

The task was accomplished, and the record shows that until this hour there has not been a bank failure in the United States among the banks that belong to the Deposit Insurance Corporation. [Applause.] During the months that have passed this year the Deposit Insurance Corporation has been making a profit of a million dollars a month. [Applause.] Throughout the length and breadth of the land the story comes to us that money has been returned from hiding, that deposits have increased, that confidence has been revived, and the officials of the American Bankers' Association now tell us in less than 6 months following the time the law became operative on January 1, in face of their dire predictions, that the plan has worked successfully, that it has restored confidence, that it has helped to revive business, that it is a wholesome policy, and should forever stand as a permanent part of the banking law of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. No one appreciates more than I the brilliant accomplishments of the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and his colleagues in the enactment of the guaranty bank deposit bill. I feel, sir, that long after you have passed out of political existence this bill will remain a monument to your magnificent accomplishments. Is the honorable Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency willing to give assurances to this House that so long as he remains chairman of this committee, next year this bill will become permanent law in the stabilization of the banking system of our Republic?

Mr. STEAGALL. I want to thank my friend for his generous and kindly reference. I appreciate it especially coming from him, because of his splendid abilities, and peculiarly because of his special interest in the legislation before us and in what has been accomplished by the efforts that have been put forth in this connection.

I may say to the gentleman that among the many Members of this House who have faithfully and loyally and valiantly stood with those of us who are making this fight none has rendered better service than the distinguished gentleman from New York. Let me say to my friend that I bring him the good news and the glad tidings that everywhere we are assured that there will be no serious efforts to repeal the deposit-insurance provisions of the Banking Act of 1933 [applause], and I am sure I need not assure my friend that I will stand in the future, as I have during the past 15 years, for protection of depositors in the banks of the United States. So long as I am a Member of this House my services will be devoted to the preservation of this law, which I regard as of vast and vital importance to the citizenship of the Nation and as an indispensable part of any comprehensive program of business recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. It might be appropriate at this time to call attention to the fact that in 1913, when the Federal Reserve Act was under consideration by this Congress, the American Bankers' Association in session at Boston unanimously denounced that bill in as strong terms as they denounced the gentleman's bill, and their predictions regarding the Federal Reserve Act proved as false as their predictions regarding the gentleman's bill, and is it not fair to assume that, perhaps, the American Bankers' Association is not at all times an infallible prophet as to what may come from legislation enacted by this body?

Mr. STEAGALL. Undoubtedly that is true. This may be said of our bankers. I have no desire to criticize them or to abuse them. They are the same kind of people we are. They are engaged in one kind of business and we are engaged in another kind of business. If we were engaged in the business in which they are engaged we would generally do as they do and, perhaps, if they were engaged in the business we are, they would make, perhaps, the same mistakes and have the same faults that we have. It is fair, however, to say that when the great Federal Reserve Act was under consideration in the Congress, the large banks of the country swarmed the corridors of this Capitol and filled the air with dire predictions of chaos and confusion and panic and destruction that would follow the passage of that law.

The fact was that under the Federal Reserve Act we experienced a large expansion of bank credit in support of business in the United States. Under that law we experienced a prosperity unparalleled in the Nation's history, and the leading bankers of the country have told us over and over again that it is the greatest legislative enactment in half a century; that under that law we were able to finance the World War and bring it to a speedy conclusion, preventing the sacrifice of the lives of untold thousands of the boys of America who would have lost their lives by the delay of victory. In less than a year after the passage of the Federal Reserve Act any proposal of repeal would have been met by bitter and uncompromising opposition of our bankers.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a brief contribution to his remarks?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will be pleased to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. A few days ago I received a letter from a prominent State banker in my district who was opposed to the insurance of bank deposits, stating that since the 1st of January the deposits in his bank have been rapidly and continuously increasing.

Mr. STEAGALL. That story comes from every corner of the continent.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has any estimate of the increase of deposits under this system of insurance.

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no way by which we can make an accurate statement as to the increase in deposits. It is recognized by all that there has been a very substantial increase and, primarily, in the return to the banks of money that had been in hoarding prior to the effectiveness of this act on the 1st of January 1934. The same report comes from every direction. I should say that there has been an increase of probably $10,000,000,000 in deposits that can be accounted for only by the restoration of confidence that has been brought about by the passage of the Deposit Insurance Act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. During the framing of this bill, there appeared before the gentleman's committee a distinguished gentleman from my native State, Hon. Thomas B. Love, who had much experience with the State Banking Department of Texas and the guaranty fund there, before he became a State senator. I should like for the gentleman to explain the urgent necessity of carrying on this insurance and also the information that he got from Senator Thomas B. Love about our State guaranty law of Texas which we tried out there that was of value to the committee.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to my friend that I have undertaken to explain some of the reasons for the extension. The gentleman was in a conference at the time. The gentleman is entirely correct in reference to the distinguished citizen of Texas, Hon. Thomas B. Love, who appeared before our committee. He has been helpful to me and to others who have put forth efforts to secure the enactment of this legislation, and his statement before our committee received most earnest consideration. Of course, it is impossible here to review entirely the contentions of the gentleman from Texas, but I assure my friend that everything submitted by Mr. Love was received as it should have been by our committee. I will say in this connection that this bill does not represent entirely the views of any member of the committee. This measure represents the labors and prolonged efforts of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House to reach a composite judgment as to the wise and constructive course under all the circumstances.

There are administrative difficulties that have been pointed out by officials of the Government, including officials of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; some of them are in sympathy with this legislation, and who want to see it succeed. Some of them are officials of the Deposit Insurance Corporation and sincerely desire to see it preserved. These officials have accomplished a colossal task in inaugurating this system, and have made a remarkable success of the undertaking down to this hour.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman this question. No doubt the gentleman remembers that when we met here on the 4th day of March 1933, practically all the banks in the United States were closed and those that were not closed were about to be closed, and, finally, were closed by order of the President. It was necessary to reopen these banks, and I am interested, along with a good many others in the United States, in knowing whether or not it is the purpose of the committee or what is the sense of the committee on the question of this temporary measure ultimately becoming a permanent feature of our statutes guaranteeing bank deposits?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that I am sure he knows my heart is in this legislation for the protection of depositors. I can assure my friend that the members of the Banking and Currency Committee are agreed that the provision for the permanent insurance of bank deposits in the United States shall not be repealed. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama be kind enough to yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I regret I did not hear the gentleman's statement made on yesterday, and I am sure the gentleman already knows something of the estimate that I place upon the banking act of 1933, a part of which is the insurance of deposits provision. The response that the country gave to this legislation was most favorable—I think the most favorable reaction that has pertained to any legislation adopted since we entered upon this recovery movement. My opinion is it is the most important contribution the Congress has made to recovery, and I wish to particularly compliment the gentleman from Alabama, who has lived in this question for 20 years. I am wondering, however, just where the influence comes that has operated upon the gentleman and his committee to the extent of the committee coming in with this bill proposing to defer putting into effect the permanent provisions of the bill for another year.

The gentleman will recall that it was the larger banking institutions of the country that resisted the enactment of the measure, in the first instance, and that immediately upon the passage of the law they initiated a movement of propaganda carried on throughout the country, drawing in the heads of State banking set-ups, and wherever possible, likewise drawing in the smaller bankers.

What I should like to know is just why, in view of the wonderful benefit that resulted from the enactment of the measure, as I am sure has been testified by thousands of small bankers in the country, the committee now comes and asks for legislation deferring putting into effect the permanent provisions of the law.

May I say this, too, and I mean it as a compliment to the gentleman and his committee. Somehow I have the feeling that, except for some influence that comes from some other source—not a bad influence at all, but reasons with which the House is not acquainted—or if it were left to the gentleman himself, he would proceed to see that the law is carried into effect as it was adopted a year ago.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me say to my friend that I am somewhat of a partisan with reference to this legislation, because I have worked on the problem for many years and have introduced bills before the Banking and Currency Committee for 15 years looking to the establishment of a plan for the insurance of bank deposits. The best labors of my life have been devoted to this great reform.

The gentleman can readily see that any step I would sanction in connection with this legislation must be the action of a friend or partisan advocate of the measure.

Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when this legislation was passed in 1933 we were in the midst of an unprecedented economic collapse in the United States. The banking structure of the Nation was prostrate and in ruins. We had to begin at the ground in rebuilding that structure, and it is being rebuilt with a success and a rapidity that must be gratifying to every citizen of the Nation.

I have stated, while my friend was not present, that there are many administrative details that must be worked out in putting this permanent insurance plan into final operation. It is necessary that national banks shall be certified by the Comptroller of the Currency, and that State banks in the Federal system shall be certified to the Insurance Corporation by the Federal Reserve Board.

There are States where legislation is necessary before State institutions eligible to membership in the Corporation can be prepared to join and receive the benefits of the act.

In view of these facts, the recommendations of the Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the administration was that we should go forward with this great constructive program by gradual processes, making sure of our way, assuring ourselves that every forward step was a safe step, that all grounds taken could be held safely and securely.

It is for these reasons that the administration reached the conclusion that we should defer for a year the effectiveness of the permanent plan of insuring deposits.

Now, let me say in that connection that an achievement so collosal as this may well be worked out by gradual processes and by compromises of opinion, as all great legislative achievements are accomplished. Some of us have waited a long time. We can afford to wait a little longer, and especially, in view of the fact that we are increasing insurance in an amount that represents a substantial advance.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COX. If the question I propounded to the gentleman has resulted in the fine statement he has made, giving reasons why the committee comes in with this recommendation, I am glad that I asked the question. Otherwise the country might have felt that it was somewhat yielding to the larger financial institutions who were violently opposed to the law in the first instance, and still are opposed to it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I know the gentleman would not imply that the committee or the administration would yield to the importunities of selfish influences. If any such suggestions were made the answer would be that if there had been such a disposition on the part of the Banking and Currency Committee this original bill would never have been enacted into law. [Applause.]

In spite of the protest of the big bankers and over the most powerful and insidious lobby that ever sought to influence the action of Congress the bill was passed.

I want to say to my friend from Georgia, who so ably represents a section similar to that which I have the honor to represent, that I know the sentiments of his people. They are the same as mine. I wish to say to my friend, I give you the assurance of the committee that brings this bill here now, and I am authorized to add to that the highest assurance of this administration that the program for the insurance and protection of bank deposits in the United States is to be made permanent, and that no plan for repeal will be tolerated in the next Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. No doubt the gentleman's committee heard the testimony of experts of banking in the Government and out of the Government, and the report of the committee shows there has been a vast increase in deposits in banks, particularly in rural sections, since the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933. To what extent does the gentleman feel from the evidence heard and from his knowledge of the situation were those moneys that came out of hiding into the banks caused by the act of 1933?

Mr. STEAGALL. I say, as I said yesterday afternoon, there is no way to ascertain accurately and mathematically what the increase in deposits has been nor what portion of increase is traceable to the enactment of the deposit insurance law, but from one end of the Nation to the other we receive the report of an increase. There was an increase in member reporting banks of a billion and a quarter dollars in 2 months of this year.

If we use these figures for comparison, we would be able to make a statement with reasonable accuracy that there had been an increase seven and a half, or possibly $10,000,000,000 since this law went into effect, and a large portion represents currency that had been hoarded and which was returned to the banks as a result of the restoration of confidence accomplished by this legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. As the gentleman will recall, the original bill was in conference several weeks during the special session, so long, in fact, that there was much private talk around the House that it was dead in conference, and as a result of that delay and talk there were 100 of us, and I was one of them, who signed an agreement in writing that we would vote against adjournment until that conference report was brought in. I wish the gentleman would tell the House what foundation there was for the rumor that the bank insurance deposit bill would be permitted to die in conference.

Mr. STEAGALL. The inquiry invites me into a field that would take considerable time, and it is important. If we were not in the particular situation that makes it desirable to conserve time in order to finish the bill today, I should be happy to discuss it at length. The gentleman can understand that there were differences in the conference committee. My friend knows the personnel of the conference committee. Of course, there had to be compromises of opinion, and it was the adjustment of differences of opinion that delayed a report upon that bill. All agreed to things which would not have been supported as independent legislation. That was true on the part of the Senate as well as on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. McGUGIN. I understood the gentleman to say the deposits increased $10,000,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. I did not say that. I say it is only an estimate. It might reach that amount.

Mr. McGUGIN. How much does the gentleman think the guarantee of funds was really responsible for bringing out of hoarding?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have just said that a large portion was undoubtedly hoarded money returned to the banks as a result of restored confidence.

Mr. McGUGIN. There are only from five to six billion dollars of currency altogether.

Mr. STEAGALL. I thought I made that clear, that only part of the increase in deposits represented cash returned to the banks.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman speaks about this fund that is now about $340,000,000. How long does the gentleman think it would work if we had a bank crisis such as we had a year ago?

Mr. STEAGALL. If we had a bank crisis such as we had a year ago it would not work, because all the banks in the United States would be closed. If we base our calculation upon the history of this country from the foundation of the national-bank system down to the collapse of last year depositors would have been fully protected. There will be no collapse of the banks through loss of confidence and withdrawal of deposits resulting in the ruin of solvent banks as has happened many times in the past. Under the permanent plan of insurance the system could not fail because all banks are unified in a mutual insurance plan.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. In order that I may respond to the remark of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] on the subject of the impossibility of five to ten billion dollars of deposits coming out of hoarding, because there was not that much money in circulation in this country. I remind the gentleman from Kansas that there are $38,000,000,000 to $40,000,000,000 of deposits, not all represented by cash deposits, and the increase in cash in circulation would not have anything to do with it.

Mr. McGUGIN. Surely; but if there was hoarding.

Mr. STEAGALL. There was a billion to a billion and a half dollars in hoarding, according to estimates, and nobody assumes that there is now any substantial amount of money in hiding because of lack of confidence in the banks.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Has the Federal insurance fund lost any money due to the enactment of this law?

Mr. STEAGALL. I stated yesterday in the first portion of my remarks, and I repeat, that under the operation of the temporary plan since the 1st of January, this year—the plan the American Bankers Association denounced as impossible in the meeting last fall—there has not been a single bank failure among the banks belonging to the Deposit Insurance Corporation, and no depositor in a bank that belongs to the Corporation has lost a dollar. [Applause.] So, far from having imposed an undue burden on the banks, the record shows that the Deposit Insurance Corporation is making a million dollars a month profit. [Applause.]

There is one other thing about the permanent plan that is dealt with in this bill to which I desire to direct attention. When the conferees agreed upon the bill last year, we accepted a provision that nonmember institutions could not remain as members of the Deposit Insurance Corporation after July 1, 1936, without joining the Federal Reserve System. We have placed in this bill a provision which strikes that requirement from the Banking Act of 1933. [Applause.] What we are trying to do by this legislation is to preserve to future generations a system of independent community banks in the United States. These small banks, scattered throughout the length and breadth of this land, institutions built up out of community spirit and community pride, for community development and for the promotion of community life, constitute the mudsill of the economic structure of the United States. [Applause.]

There are some of us in this House who do not intend to allow that system to be destroyed if it is in our power to prevent it. [Applause.] I want to see a banking system that respects the character of the citizen who appears at a bank window for an extension of credit. I do not believe in the standardization of banking. I do not believe in a system that discounts human character. You cannot develop character in people unless character is to be respected and accorded its value. Many of you can recall an instance when you have seen a young man coming of age unable to complete his course in school because of the loss of his father. He goes to the local banker, not a branch bank whose main office is 100 or 1,000 miles away, but to a man of his own community. The families live in frequent contact; they intermarry; they bury their dead in the same cemetery. They know one another and how properly to appraise character in the community. The young man says: "My father has passed away and I want to finish my education. I haven't got the money; we have nothing but the old home and the farm, but my mother will sign." The banker says: "Yes; take the money and go. I knew your father. I know your mother. I know you will repay. Sign the note." He signs and he finishes his schooling. He comes back and makes a good citizen, honoring the name that he bears—and the bank is repaid.

This is the history of community banking in this country. God forbid that the time shall ever come when human character does not command value at the window of a bank as it does at every other worthy institution in the United States. [Applause.] This is the system we are fighting for in undertaking to preserve independent community banking in the United States. Some of us of the Committee on Banking and Currency are making this fight. You do not know the battles we have had to fight. If you will stand by us, we will preserve community banking in the United States.

Now, let us consider the temporary plan. Can the banks bear the burden? As I explained yesterday, by increasing the amount insured from $2,500 to $5,000 we only add a small amount. It is estimated less than three billions. The law at present only makes possible the assessment of 1 percent against banks participating in the benefits of the Corporation. We have assessed only one quarter of 1 percent, although it was estimated it would require 1 percent originally, and we have not used a penny of the money raised by this assessment of one quarter of 1 percent because the Corporation has not lost a dollar. It is not contemplated there will be any call for any additional assessment, but if it should be made, the assessment would be trivial, because the actual increase in deposits insured would be small.

Let me call attention to this: Under the Banking Act of 1933 the banks no longer pay interest upon demand deposits. Do you know what that means to the banks of the country? When some banker comes complaining about the little burden of deposit insurance show him the figures showing the saving to the banks through the provision which prohibits the payment of interest on demand deposits. Ask why he is not willing to apply to the banking business the same rules that apply in every other field of business activity. Bankers have insured themselves against their own carelessness; they insure against the crookedness of employees; they insure themselves against acts of Providence. Everywhere throughout the civilized world business men accept the soundness of the principle of insurance, except a few big bankers. I am glad to say there are only a few, because the great bulk of the bankers of the United States now favor insurance of bank deposits.

I want to show you what is saved to the banks by the provision that dispenses with the payment of interest on demand deposits.

Mr. MAY. Correspondent banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; this applies to member banks of the Federal Reserve System as to interest on demand deposits. For the 5-year period ending October last, member banks of the Federal Reserve System paid out $1,230,242,000 as interest on demand deposits, an average annual payment of $246,048,500. These are the figures disclosed by member banks alone. Multiply this by two, to be conservative, and the figures prove unquestionably that by this provision which prevents the payment of interest on demand deposits the banks will save half a billion dollars a year.

In this connection let me say that for the first 65 years of the operation of the national banks in this country the total financial losses to depositors amounted to only $45,000,000. Down to 1930 the final losses to depositors in national banks amounted to only $82,000,000. In 1931, the worst year in the history of our banking, eight tenths of 1 percent of the deposits in national banks would have paid all the losses of that year; and it was the worst year in our history, which anybody would consider as a guide.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Although the banks are saving half a billion dollars this year on interest, they have only actually paid into this fund $39,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I explained that yesterday. In round figures the amount paid to support the temporary insurance plan is about $40,000,000.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the pending bill prohibit a bank which carries deposit insurance from paying to its customers the 3- or 4-percent interest banks used to pay on certificates of deposits payable on demand?

Mr. STEAGALL. They do not any longer pay interest on demand deposits.

Mr. MAY. Are they prohibited from doing so?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; in addition to that, by the act of 1933, we terminated the carrying of checking accounts in the Postal Savings System. Ultimately this will result in the return of $1,000,000,000 to the vaults of the banks of the country in the form of deposit balances. Deposits in Postal Savings reached the enormous sum of one and one half billion dollars.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Surely the gentleman is not going to close the debate without discussing and analyzing the most important section of this bill; namely, section 4, which provides for loans on the assets of banks which failed prior to January 1, 1934.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have more figures that I should like to submit, but I will not go into them. I wish to say that collections upon assets of all closed national banks down to October last year amounted to 77.79 percent. These figures were given by the Comptroller of the Currency.

Now, coming to the subject mentioned by the gentleman from Oklahoma, I had intended to discuss that provision in detail, but I cannot do so because of the lack of time. The Banking Act of 1933 provides that the Deposit Insurance Corporation shall employ a portion of its funds—and this applies to the temporary plan as well as to the permanent plan—for loans upon or purchase of the assets of closed banks; but, the benefits are limited to banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System. Under the pending bill these provisions are extended to apply to all closed banks. As the law stands today the Deposit Insurance Corporation may expand its deposits three times. The bill which the administration first outlined for the extension of the temporary plan provided that this expansion of obligations should be guaranteed by the Treasury. In order to take care of the matter of deposits in closed banks, we provide in this bill for the expansion of the funds of the Corporation five times, to be guaranteed by the Government, and authority is granted the Corporation board to employ half of the expansion for the relief of depositors in closed banks, including all types of banks.

Let me say that the Corporation officials advise us that by a prudent administration of this act in making loans and purchases upon a fair valuation, as the bill provides, in contemplation of an orderly liquidation, that they will be able to unfreeze something like $1,000,000,000 of deposits in the banks of the Nation. There are 1,000 banks that have never applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation either by conservators or liquidating agents. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has unfrozen $780,000,000. The Corporation appraises assets on an average at 66⅔ percent and loans on a basis of 75 percent. The loans made amount to about 27 percent of total assets in banks upon which loans have been made. It is estimated that deposits in the amount of $1,000,000,000 can be unfrozen by the Deposit Insurance Corporation. If administered as we have a right to expect, this bill will result in a substantial measure of relief that will be felt throughout the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, before going on with the general discussion perhaps I can be of service to some of the Members who are receiving inquiries as to the proposal to repeal the provision of the banking act of last year which required directors to own $2,500 of stock. A separate measure touching this subject passed the Senate, is now pending in the House, and possibly might be reached later under suspension of the rule; but that we might have two strings to our bow we have also put it in the pending bill, where it will be found on page 9 as subsection (c). Members may, I feel confident, tell their correspondents that either by one measure or the other the desire to reduce this requirement to $1,000, as it was before, will be met before the end of the session.

Resuming the debate, Mr. Chairman, when in October of 1931 the leaders in both branches of Congress promised President Hoover their support for the quick enactment of four proposals, one of which was for the relief of depositors in closed banks, the introduction and care of the measure to that end in the House was intrusted to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY]. No man in the House is better qualified to tell the story of that matter than the gentleman from Maine. I therefore yield to him such time as he may desire.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, after having consumed the larger portion of the afternoon on national-park legislation in Florida, we have at last arrived at the point of discussing the much-needed, long-prayed-for, the much-sought, and much-fought-for legislation for the relief of depositors in failed banks.

When the depression became marked in its consequences, as it did in the fall of 1931, some of you will recall that we assembled in this Chamber and listened to a message of the then President of the United States, who recommended four recovery measures and appealed for the nonpartisan support of his program by all Members of the Congress, regardless of the sections which they represented or the political belief which they entertained.

He first advocated the subscription for more stock in the Federal land banks by the Treasury of the United States, and the Congress patriotically supported that measure. He then recommended the setting up of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the Congress patriotically supported that recommendation. He then advocated the establishment of the home-loan discount banks, and we adopted that legislation. He then advocated relief for depositors in failed banks, and I read a brief section from his message, as follows:

> A method should be devised to make available quickly to depositors some portion of their deposits in closed banks as the assets of such banks may warrant. Such provision would go far to relieve distress in a multitude of families, would stabilize values in many communities and would liberate working capital to thousands of concerns. I recommend that measures be enacted promptly to accomplish these results and I suggest that the Congress consider the development of such a plan through the Federal Reserve banks.

In pursuance to this recommendation, and bespeaking the fourth point in that recovery program, the Representative from the First District of Maine introduced in the House on the 9th day of January 1932, H.R. 7370, a bill to provide for the advancement of funds to receivers of insolvent banks and for other purposes. I am sorry to have to say to this House that that bill was never given a hearing in our committee. The Democratic majority refused any hearing although it was many times requested.

The gentleman who has just taken his seat, Chairman STEAGALL, of Alabama, says that in his attitude toward Federal deposit-insurance legislation he has never been partisan. I commend him for it, and I wish that he had emulated the standard which he set in reference to his deposit-insurance legislation by pursuing the same course toward the legislation which was proposed for the relief of depositors in failed banks by President Hoover. But I know the pressure that was brought to bear upon him. I suppose the facts of the case are that the edict went out that anything to be done along that line was not to be permitted in that Congress—that the new administration wanted credit for it.

This bill, H.R. 7370, which we introduced in January 1932, called for the setting up of a separate corporation to do nothing else but minister to the needs of failed banks. It asked for a modest capital of $150,000,000, $100,000,000 of which were to come out of the United States Treasury and to cover a subscription for class A stock of the corporation, and $50,000,000, in compliance with the recommendation that some system be devised through the Federal Reserve banks, was to be subscribed by the 12 central Reserve banks in proportion to the surplus which they had on the day that the act became effective. The corporation was authorized to issue notes and debentures to four times the amount of its capital stock. We only dared ask for $600,000,000 at the start. The help of that corporation was to be extended, just as this present bill now pending extends it, to all banks, National and State, member and nonmember. I am talking now about the bill that died in January 1932, when banks all over the country were pleading for relief.

We had recommended the R.F.C. We had recommended this corporation for the relief of banks. Whereupon the cry went out that we were aiming to help the rich man, but that we were forgetting the poor man. We have all learned a lesson in this depression. We have learned that, if you help to sustain the industrial and financial structure—regardless of the individuals or persons in whom title to that structure is vested—that by reaching out and giving aid to those who have something, you aid those who have nothing but their daily labor to depend upon. We know now that those who have only their labor to sell are helped when those who have capital are put in a position to employ that capital in giving employment to labor. So I think in fairness it ought to be said that the recovery program recommended in the fall of 1931, if we had been able to carry it through, would have reached down and helped everybody.

Hindsight is always better than foresight, and I desire not to make any extravagant statements, but today I feel confident that if we had had the courage to ask for $6,000,000,000 to be paid to insolvent banks by that corporation which was to have been set up under the provisions of the bill we introduced in January 1932, and if we could then have had the patriotic support of every man and woman in this Congress we would have saved the country the severest blows of the depression. How? We would have enabled the corporation to say to every bank in this country: "There is money available for every depositor in every bank in the Nation if he wants it", and knowing that he might have his money, no depositor would have taken it out of the bank. The banks would thus have been liquid. Money would have been available for industry, and we would never have had that black 6th of March when the banks of the Nation were closed. Securities would not have been dumped on the market in a frantic effort to realize assets for the banks, therefore prices on the security market would have held up, and by this time we would have come out of the depression. I am saying that one of the most vital steps that should have been taken in the winter of 1932 the Congress failed to take because no hearing could be secured on H.R. 7370.

Let us be perfectly fair to the powers that were at that time. They immediately wrote into the R.F.C. law a provision which reads as follows. After granting certain powers to the R.F.C., including the authorization of loans, the act was amended to read "including loans secured by the assets of any bank that is closed or in process of liquidation to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of such banks, upon the application of the receiver or liquidating agent", and so forth.

Two hundred million dollars was the limit of money that was provided in this amendment to the R.F.C. Act, which was approved on January 22, 1932.

Subsequently this amount thus to be loaned was increased, and there has been lent by the R.F.C. to date about $800,000,000 upon the assets of failed banks, a sum entirely inadequate to meet the needs of the situation; confessedly so, else the present bill would never be before this body.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me briefly?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes; I yield to my chairman.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not quarreling with the gentleman at all.

Mr. BEEDY. I have been in the House 13 years, and I have never had the time until today to make the speech I want to make. I dislike to be interrupted, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not quarreling with the gentleman, but I wish to ask him if it is not a fact—and it is the fact—that the provision in the R.F.C. Act of 1932, in which this measure of relief for depositors in closed banks appears, was written into that bill by the present Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, because I wrote it with my own hands.

Mr. BEEDY. Yes. Exactly so. I had not intended to say it, but you now make it proper for me to say that after we had introduced H.R. 7370 and while we were pleading for a hearing on the bill, the gentleman wrote that section in question and had it slipped into the R.F.C. Act in order that the bill we were sponsoring might die a quiet death. I repeat that I wish the Chairman of our Banking and Currency Committee had been as nonpartisan in his attitude toward this tremendously important legislation as he was toward the legislation providing Federal insurance of deposits.

In June 1932 the Democratic Party met in convention in Chicago. It was said in debate this afternoon that there was a story behind the Everglades Park project. But, in the words of William Shakespeare, if you think there was a story behind that project, "you ain't heard nothing yet."

Let me read this provision in one of the planks of the Democratic Party, written in the summer of 1932, after the bill H.R. 7370 had died in committee in the winter previous. Here it is:

> We advocate quicker methods of realizing on assets for the relief of depositors of suspended banks—

And so forth.

"Quicker" is a very understandable word. Quick, I find, means "fast in action" or "fast in performance." This word only appealed to the chairman of our committee when, upon the introduction of H.R. 7370, he was quick in writing the provision that went into the R.F.C. law and which, though it killed H.R. 7370, nevertheless has proven inadequate to meet the needs of failed banks up to this present moment and through all the long months that the Congress was in session, from January to June 1932, so far as adequate relief to depositors in failed banks was concerned, this word "quick" did not appeal to any Democrat in authority. But as soon as the Congress adjourned and the Democratic Convention met, it was thought necessary to pledge the Democratic Party to quicker methods of realizing on assets for the relief of depositors in failed banks.

Before we go any further, let me tell you they knew what they were doing when they wrote that plank. It was a serious matter with the Democratic leaders, because they took the precaution to write a further plank in their platform in which they said:

> We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power.

So, believing in this quick relief, a Democratic Congress convenes and by June of the summer of 1933 they make a left-handed grant of power to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

I want to read you the provision giving this power to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I do not intend to be bitter about this. Please do not misunderstand the spirit in which I make this presentation. If I could not have kept my sense of humor I could never have lived through the 5 years of this depression. About all there is left us of the minority these days is the opportunity to chide the majority for its acts of omission or commission.

Listen to the phrasing of this grant of power for the relief of closed banks. Following certain other grants of power, the Banking Act of 1933 reads as follows:

> Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from making loans to national banks closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Let me repeat it. "Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent" the Corporation from making loans to closed banks. The point is that this was not the usual phraseology of a clean grant of power.

Then the next section in that act goes on to say, "Receivers or liquidators of member banks"—only member banks were dealt with in the act of 1933. And bear in mind that there had been in force ever since the early summer of the prior year affording relief to all closed banks the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but they felt it necessary to write the following provision into the Banking Act of 1933:

> Receivers or liquidators of member banks which are now or may hereafter become insolvent or suspended shall be entitled to offer the assets of such banks for sale to the Corporation—

Namely, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Here we find no provision that the Corporation can buy the offered assets. The power to buy must be implied. I call this a left-handed grant, and the F.D.I.C. must have considered the provision a mere gesture, because no attempt was made to exercise it.

Both the power granted to the R.F.C. and the F.D.I.C. has been of no avail and the responsibility rests with the present administration which believed in quick relief to depositors in failed banks, from the assembling of Congress in the last part of the year 1932 down to this 24th day of May 1934, when, under the lash of the signers of a petition to bring some kind of legislation to this floor for the relief to depositors in failed banks, and whipped somewhat by a conscience troubled by the failure to live up to the plank in the platform calling for quicker relief, they bring in the legislation now before the House.

Now, it is with parties as with individuals. When a man makes a mistake and starts traveling, not the straight and direct road, but one that diverges and crosses and recrosses and never arrives at any destination, it is strange how much trouble he gets into.

If I were a dramatist I should like to write a play showing how this Committee on Banking and Currency has been playing back and forth, how it has endeavored to get around the fulfillment of its obligations, long neglected.

I want to put in the RECORD what has happened before we could finally get the pending bill out of our committee.

Some Members on my side of the aisle evidently wanted to help the majority of the committee to fulfill their obligations to the people with respect to this legislation, and so they endeavored to vote out that McLeod bill which would defeat the discharge petition which aimed to bring legislation upon the floor of the House for the relief of depositors in failed banks.

On February 12, 1934, Congressman McLEOD introduced the original "pay-off bill", H.R. 7908. Hearings on this bill before the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee began on February 27. Subsequent to these hearings the revised McLeod bill, H.R. 8479, was introduced on March 5. Hearings before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee concluded on March 27.

The first petition for bringing the McLeod bill up for consideration was introduced by Congressman CARL M. WEIDEMAN April 9, 1934. The petition was on H.R. 7908, the original bill, as the revised bill, H.R. 8479, had not been pending the number of legislative days required by the discharge rule.

On April 12, when the petition to discharge the committee from further consideration lacked only several names to complete the necessary 145 signatures which would have made possible a vote on this legislation April 23, the Banking and Currency Committee reported H.R. 8479.

Later the same day, upon discovering that the discharge petition dealt with H.R. 7908 and not with H.R. 8479, the committee met without permission while the House was in session and reported H.R. 7908, thereby proving that the sole purpose of the committee action was to block consideration of such legislation.

The first petition was completed on April 13. Representative McLEOD then introduced House Resolution 332, which was referred to the Rules Committee providing a special order of business to bring the bank depositors pay-off bill, H.R. 8479, before the House for consideration immediately upon the adoption of the resolution.

On April 20, in answer to a parliamentary inquiry made by Chairman STEAGALL of the Banking and Currency Committee, the Speaker stated that the action of the committee in reporting H.R. 7908 was void, as the committee had acted while the House was in session and without permission.

On April 20 the Banking and Currency Committee received permission to sit during the sessions of the House on April 20 and 21, and on April 21 the Banking and Currency Committee met and considered the bank depositors' payoff bill in executive session.

On April 23 the bank depositors' payoff bill, H.R. 7908, was due to be called up for consideration under the discharge rule. However, during the prayer the committee put another report into the receiving basket.

The Congressman from the First District of Maine thereupon introduced a resolution involving a matter of privilege of the House objecting to the reception of the report of the Banking and Currency Committee on the ground that the committee had failed to observe the rules of the House in amending and reporting the bill. On a motion by Mr. BYRNS to lay the resolution on the table, the yeas were 227 and nays 123, not voting 80. The Speaker refused to answer an inquiry by the Congressman from the First District of Maine as to the significance of the vote, and because of the general confusion on the floor the impression prevailed that the vote was on a motion to override the decision of the Speaker instead of on a motion to table the Beedy resolution. However, the Speaker sustained Representative BEEDY's parliamentary point of privilege and thus the record vote was a victory for friends of legislation for relief of depositors in failed banks.

On April 23 Representative WEIDEMAN introduced a second petition to force action on the McLeod bill by discharging the Rules Committee from further consideration of House Resolution 332.

On May 15, apparently for the purpose of shortening the time in which signatures could be obtained for the second petition, Congressman BYRNS obtained unanimous consent for the House to adjourn from that date, Tuesday, to Thursday, May 17, and from Thursday to Monday, May 21. This made Thursday, May 17, the last day in which to complete the petition in time for bringing up the bill for a vote on May 28. In the night session of May 15 Congressman GERALD J. BOILEAU, of Wisconsin, made the parliamentary inquiry: "Is it now in order to move to reconsider the vote by which that unanimous-consent request was secured?" The Speaker held that such a move was not in order.

On May 17, Thursday, as signatures were being obtained rapidly on the petition, the House adjourned at 2:44 p.m., thus delaying possibility of securing action on bank depositors' pay-off legislation through the petition until June 11.

This thing went on. We could not get a record vote in the House until, you recollect, the Representative from the First District of Maine made a point of order, and we actually got a record vote to find out who in the House favored some legislation in behalf of depositors in failed banks. Nobody knew what he was voting for. The question was asked the Speaker as to what the vote was on. He replied, "everybody knows what it is for", and half the men voting thought they were voting to override the Speaker's decision rather than to table the Beedy resolution which was pending. The vote, therefore, did not correctly disclose who were and who were not friends of bank pay-off legislation.

In the meantime, frequent conferences were going on in the Banking and Currency Committee, small conferences, not always full committee conferences, and the days and weeks and months rolled by, but at last I say we have this pending bill before the House, for which I am thankful, and which I commend to this House as a constructive measure, one which may prove of great help to the country even in this late period of the depression. I repeat, however, that this legislation should have been passed early in the winter of 1932.

This bill provides exactly the same in substance as the Beedy bill (H.R. 7370) provided. It provides relief to all banks, whether members of the Federal Reserve System or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, would my distinguished friend from Maine yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman approves of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. I should say I do. I have been fighting for it for nearly 2 years.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman is at least the straw-boss spokesman for his party on the other side of the aisle. Our administration leaders on this side approve of the bill. So it is approved on all sides of the aisle. Let us pass it. It is now 7 minutes of 5 o'clock. Let us pass it by 5 o'clock.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman evidently believes in his platform. He is for quick relief for depositors of failed banks.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. And I say to the gentleman from Texas that in January 1932 I was for quick relief. I am for quick relief now and if this committee wants me to sit down, I will sit down, and we will pass it right now.

Mr. BLANTON. And do not let us talk it to death.

Mr. BEEDY. I am fond of the gentleman from Texas, he has been a good friend of mine, but let me tell him that he should be the last man in this House ever to stand up and say to any other Member that he ought not to talk anything to death. [Laughter.] I have been in this House for 13 years and I have taken comparatively little of the time of the House in making speeches while the gentleman from Texas has, often and profusely.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have helped the gentleman talk bad measures to death here and stop the passage of bills that ought not to be passed. I have helped him to talk many bad bills to death.

Mr. BEEDY. I think the gentleman does most of that kind of work. I am going to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Here is a good bill. It was born in travail. No bill ever followed a more tortuous path. It has had a difficult time a-borning.

It is the result of the sweat and the prayers and the hopes and the hard work of a good many of us. It does not make any difference what party we are in. We should have seen the light sooner, but now that we have seen the light, let us pass the bill and give the banks that have failed and the poor men and women that have saved a few hundred dollars and put them in these banks for safekeeping real relief.

There is one thing to which I wish to call attention which this bill does that no other proposed piece of legislation does. The bill which died in 1932 did not propose it. That bill left the appraisers, namely, the representatives of the Federal Reserve banks and of the Comptroller's Department, and the receivers, to agree on the value of the assets of failed banks.

This bill goes further. Realizing that some injustice has been worked by a lack of power on the part of the R.F.C. to loan on higher appraised values, we wrote a very helpful clause into the pending bill. It is to be found on page 10 of the bill, beginning with line 15, and reads as follows:

In making any purchase of or loan on assets of any closed bank the Corporation shall appraise such assets in anticipation of an orderly liquidation over a period of years rather than on the basis of forced selling values in a period of business depression.

That is a very sensible provision. It is born of the evidence that this country is coming back. The inevitable trend must be upward. This Nation is too young and too virile to die now. We are coming out of this trouble. This provision gives the appraisers the power to anticipate future recovery.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. On page 5 there is this language:

In the event any mutual savings bank shall be closed on account of inability to meet its deposit liabilities the corporation shall pay not more than $2,500 on account of the net approved claim of any owner of deposits in such bank.

Does not the gentleman believe that that figure ought to be raised? If a man has $10,000 in a bank, and another man has $2,500, one man will receive his full $2,500, and the man who has $10,000 will only receive the same amount.

Mr. BEEDY. Now the gentleman is bringing up a point connected with the deposit-insurance section of this bill. The gentleman raises an issue which involves the question of whether the full provisions of the insurance law should have gone into effect this year.

If you want the whole insurance law to go into effect as originally written, yours is a good argument. But the experts from the Treasury Department, including the Comptroller of the Currency, said to our committee: "We are friends of this deposit-insurance feature. We want it to live. We do not want to go too fast with it. Give us another year with the temporary fund so that we may build our underpinning securely and feel our way with assurance, and later we will come back and extend these provisions and ask, perhaps, for the original insurance limits of the permanent fund."

Now, if the gentleman will read this bill fully, he will see we have increased the $2,500 limit to $5,000 in the present bill. There is an interesting thing in connection with that feature of the bill. You may have a deposit of $5,000 in bank A on the north side of the street. Your wife may have $5,000 in bank B on the other side of the street. If these banks should fail while members of the Federal Insurance Corporation, she will get her $5,000 and you will get yours. If at the same time the husband and wife have a joint account of $5,000 in one of these same banks, that sum would also be repaid by the Insurance Corporation. In that situation thrifty families of small means are protected by the present bill to the extent of $15,000.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and then I must conclude.

Mr. LUCE. May I add to the gentleman's answer to the inquiry that in general, mutual savings banks have a limit on the size of permissible deposits. In my State it is $4,000, as I recollect it, to which accretions of interest may be added. That restriction in the bill is made in view of the limits customarily made on deposits in mutual savings banks.

Mr. SABATH. And the $2,500 applies only to mutual savings banks?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman state the total amount that would have been available to pay depositors in closed banks under the bill which the gentleman introduced in 1932?

Mr. BEEDY. I have already stated that.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. What was the total amount?

Mr. BEEDY. We asked for a capital of $150,000,000.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. To be multiplied four times?

Mr. BEEDY. To be multiplied four times. That was only a feeler. We should have increased it as occasion demanded.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Then, at the same time a measure proposed and written by the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has resulted in furnishing more than $800,000,000?

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, that is the result of subsequent limitation. His original provision authorized loaning only $200,000,000.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. But is not that true?

Mr. BEEDY. Now, let us get this straight.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman has the heart of a Democrat and the mouth of a Republican. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. If we could put together the hearts of the Democrats and the hearts of the Republicans and the mouths of both parties today and work out these problems, forgetting our political differences, the country would be better off; and if we could have done just that in 1932 the country would have been much better off then. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Not at this time.

Under the original provision in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as I have said, only $200,000,000 could be loaned to failed banks. Our original bill, H.R. 7370, to which I have referred, authorized loaning $600,000,000 to failed banks.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. And then we took the lid off.

Mr. BEEDY. Just a moment. I want to answer the gentleman. When it was found that $200,000,000 were not adequate to meet existing needs we provided further loaning power for the R.F.C., just exactly as we would have asked for further lending power for the Corporation's funds under the provisions of H.R. 7370. We did not dare to ask for more than $600,000,000 for failed banks in January 1932. You were accusing us of following the short-sighted policy of favoring the rich bankers.

But can you imagine what would have happened if we had come to Congress and asked for $6,000,000,000 for failed banks? You would have told us we were going mad. Now, in the light of what has been done with hit-and-miss expenditures approximating twelve or thirteen billion, can we not see what wonderful results might have followed from the disbursement of $6,000,000,000 to the failed banks of the country 2 years ago?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BEEDY. I will.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman say to the House of his own knowledge whether the then Secretary of the Treasury and the then Chairman of the Board of the Federal Reserve Bank favored the gentleman's bill?

Mr. BEEDY. My distinct recollection is—and I think I can be very accurate about this—that the bill did have the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and whom else?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Governor Meyer of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. BEEDY. Governor Meyer was consulted, and Governor Meyer himself delegated the drafting of this bill to one of his right-hand men. I can assure the House that the bill H.R. 7370 as introduced in January 1932 had the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I am absolutely sure the gentleman's statement is correct, because I was the one who handed the bill to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Yes. That is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BEEDY. Certainly.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Has the gentleman noticed that Governor Meyer's paper, the Washington Post, this morning condemns this very legislation.

Mr. BEEDY. What very legislation? Does the gentleman mean the pending bill as reported by this committee?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The pending bill, which the gentleman has said was such a fine bill, such a constructive measure, drawn along the same lines as the bill the gentleman advocated in 1932.

Mr. BEEDY. I think Eugene Meyer today feels exactly as I know the gentleman from North Carolina feels and as I feel, that inasmuch as original power was given to the R.F.C. to make these loans, and since further, the R.F.C. started to do effective work, we should now continue this lending power in the R.F.C., broaden its powers, and enable that Corporation to go on with the work it began. I have no doubt of Mr. Meyer's disgust that this bill should be brought into the House at this late day as an appendage to the extension of the temporary insurance fund provisions.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Maine read this editorial?

Mr. BEEDY. I shall be glad to read it, but not in the time of others who wish to speak on the pending bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman insert it in his remarks?

Mr. BEEDY. I must reserve judgment on that.

Mr. Chairman, let me thank the Committee for its close attention and let me apologize for having taken so much time. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to give credit, as far as I am able, where credit is due. That part of the bill now before the Committee, to help depositors in banks that failed, is the result of the courageous effort, the untiring effort, and the perseverance of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD]. His was a lone voice crying in the wilderness; and he alone built up an enormous support from every section of the country—North and South, East and West—for this particular bill upon which we are debating.

About a month ago I spoke to some 900 Republican women at a luncheon in Detroit. I was asked what was going to be done with the McLeod bill. I replied that I was a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency and had not signed the petition for the McLeod bill. I predicted that the McLeod bill would not pass in its original form, which was to pay off the entire loss of the depositors. I stated that I believed it would be amended, that there would be a compromise, and the compromise would come in under the name, of course, of some Democrat. It might be to pay the depositors up to the amount of $2,500, or it might be a compromise to have the Government take over the assets of the banks and pay off the depositors on a fair basis and not on a forced or liquidated sale of the assets during the depression.

That is about what this bill does. I told them then, and I believe it now, that no matter what compromise measure goes through this Congress the credit belongs to CLARENCE McLEOD, of Detroit, and nobody can take it away from him even though the measure comes here bearing the name of a Democrat. I think you are good enough sportsmen to realize that he forced your hands and to admit that he actually is responsible for this legislation. No matter whether President Hoover endorsed the principle 4 years ago, and no matter whether someone else advocated it 4 years ago, this particular bill comes here because of the courage and perseverance of one Member of the House—the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD]. It was a well-deserved and well-merited victory. In the words of the poets, it was a grand and glorious victory.

In the few minutes remaining of my time, I wish to pay my respects to a very distinguished member of the administration, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Rexford Guy Tugwell [laughter], who, recently talking in Kansas City, said that labor in America is oppressed and that business is controlled by just a few. He might as well have added that labor is brutalized, because those are the very words of all the Socialists and Communists in America: That everything is wrong, rotten, and corrupt in America, and particularly that labor is oppressed.

Every thinking man knows that compared to the countries of the Old World labor in America is freer and far better off. Labor in America is freer and has higher standards of wages and living than in any other country in the world. For the last 60 years American labor has been the best paid, the best housed, the best fed, the best clothed, and the most contented in the world.

When they tell you that American labor is oppressed, it is an indictment not alone of the Republican Party but of the Democratic Party under Woodrow Wilson as well; and everyone of you know that labor has had more economic and political rights and more freedom in America than in any other country in the world.

There have been abuses and evils in our economic system. Everybody knows that during the last 50 years the Congress of the United States and the legislatures of the various States, at the request of labor and of the American people, have been remedying these abuses and evils. It is common knowledge that 50 years ago labor worked 12, 14, and 15 hours a day with a pitiful standard of living and a pitiful standard of wages. Step by step through the assistance of Congress and the State legislatures we have brought about shorter hours and better working conditions in the factory, protection in the factory, compensation laws, child-labor laws, old-age pensions, until today labor is better off and freer in America than anywhere else in the world.

Mr. Tugwell and other socialistic members of the "brain trust" represent a certain type of visionaries without experience in either business or government, visionaries who want to throw overboard everything that has built up this country, that has built up labor, that has made this the richest, the greatest, and the freest Nation in the world. They now propose to socialize industry and labor, giving in return for the constitutional liberty, freedom, and the rights of labor and capital under the Constitution, some form of socialization of industry, or Government ownership. All that these Socialists and visionaries offer in return for our constitutional liberties is compulsion, coercion, and force. That is all they offer to labor in return for the freedom it now enjoys in America.

Abraham Lincoln once said that labor is prior to capital, and that human rights are superior to property rights. That has been the American point of view of all liberal-minded Americans, both Democrats and Republicans, for the past 75 years. It is sheer folly to try to incite and inflame labor in these days of depression by appeals to class hatred, and depicting labor as oppressed and discriminated against. It is well to remember that there are hundreds of thousands of small industries and millions of stockholders in larger industries in this country who believe in social and industrial justice, and a square deal for labor.

I am glad to support this particular bill today, because in its very essence it aims to protect the savings of labor, in its very essence it seeks to uphold our own industrial system—call it capitalism or what you will—based upon private property and individual effort and enterprise.

It is under this system that labor has grown in America to be the richest and freest in the world. American wage earners today, or up until very recently, have been capitalists, and just as much capitalistic as the rich capitalists. They have owned their own houses and their own automobiles, and have had the comforts and luxuries of our civilization. There is very little revolutionary spirit among American wage earners, because they expect, judging from the past, that we will emerge to better and more prosperous times and back to those high standards of wages and living that American labor has been accustomed and is entitled to as part of its American heritage. In voting for this bill we uphold the capitalistic system, because the very essence of capitalism is private banking and money which belongs to the people. Lenin, the greatest foe of capitalism, often stated the way to ruin capitalism was to debase and destroy the value of money. We are in this bill safeguarding the money of all the people of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to make a few remarks following the gentleman from New York because of the references that were made to the McLeod bill. As one who is unalterably opposed to the principle of the McLeod bill or similar bills, I believe it proper to point out very distinctly to the Members of the House the fact that the provisions as contained in this bill differ very materially from the provisions of the McLeod bill.

In the McLeod bill and similar bills provision was inserted for pay-off to depositors in closed banks without any attention being paid to the value of the assets of the particular bank. A depositor in a bank which had been well administered but which had unfortunate consequences received no more than a depositor in a bank which had been looted or which had been improperly administered.

In this bill, which the committee has worked on very hard and in which the committee has attempted to include a fair provision so that we may unloose a great deal of the deposits in closed banks, the provision is that loans shall be made or assets shall be purchased on the basis of the value of those assets, and not without paying any consideration to the value of the distress of the different banks. Let me read the provision I refer to so that all may understand:

> In making any purchase of or loan on assets of any closed bank, the Corporation shall appraise such assets in anticipation of an orderly liquidation over a period of years, rather than on the basis of forced selling values in a period of business depression. The Corporation is authorized and empowered to sell any assets acquired under this subsection and shall with respect to such selling and to the liquidation of assets of closed banks pursue and encourage a policy of extending the period of liquidation so as best to conserve the value of such assets and to prevent unreasonable sacrifice thereof.

Mr. Chairman, this is a provision by which we may give the greatest amount of help in the fairest way to depositors in closed banks and at the same time save as much as we can in the long run for the Government, which after all is putting this money into the fund for the backing of the closed banks.

All the members of the committee were anxious to do what they could for the depositors in closed banks, and at the same time be not in a position where it could be said that the Government was giving away money irrespective of the justice of the situation. I think it is only fair to point out that the committee considered carefully the difference in principle between these two theories and adopted the principle of dealing fairly with the depositors on the basis of the value of the assets in the respective banks.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD].

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, the action of the House today will be well received by millions throughout the country. While in my opinion the so-called "Steagall bill" does not go far enough, I fully and sincerely believe that it goes a long way toward the goal which we seek. Therefore, in my opinion, it should receive the support of every Member who is interested in pay-off legislation being enacted at this session of the Congress. At the same time I do not feel that we should relax in any way our fight to insist on the 100-percent pay-off bill which I have sponsored, due to the fact that this bill, if passed today, has a long and rocky road before it takes the status of law. The petition which is now on the Speaker's table gives us a certain assurance that in the event Congress is still in session on the 11th of June we may have the opportunity to insist on our measure, which is not only relief, but is also primarily in the interest of recovery. We know that a measure which results in recovery certainly also provides relief.

There is one particular point I wish to make to the Committee. As the chairman pointed out a few minutes ago, this bill provides sufficient money to take care of the depositors in distress. If this is a fact, and I am merely trying to lay the foundation for an amendment which I intend to offer, could there be any objection to changing the permissive word in the purchasing or loaning of assets to directing the purchasing or loaning on assets? There is no excuse for the use of discretion in this instance. The Congress is too familiar with what occurred recently in connection with legislation which was passed during the last session which did not direct the administrative officials to do such things; it merely permitted, and therefore little was accomplished. There is no harm, as I see it, in changing the four words in that one paragraph to "direct" if we are sincere, and I take it for granted this House is sincere at this time.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman indicate where the amendment is?

Mr. McLEOD. Page 9, line 23.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. One word would be enough.

Mr. McLEOD. It appears in four different places.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer the McLeod bill as an amendment to the section where the relief for bank depositors appears in this bill, but I agreed not to do that for the reason that I am assured the conferees of the House will insist, when this bill passes today—and I assume it will pass today—that the bank depositors' relief remain in this bill when it comes back from conference with the Senate.

I have had this assurance today from the chairman of the Banking Committee, and I am sure he will bear me out in this statement.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I understand the gentleman proposes to offer his first amendment in line 23, page 9, so that the bill would read—> authorized and directed to loan upon or purchase assets of any bank.

Mr. McLEOD. That is right.

Mr. GOSS. If this amendment is agreed to, I want to point out that this does not mean they would have to purchase all the assets but they would have to purchase at least some of them, and in this way we would be sure of getting at least some results.

Mr. McLEOD. There is no difference in the intent of the bill with the amendment I suggest relative to the relief proposal.

This section of the bill states—

> The insurance corporation is authorized and empowered to loan or purchase.

This is to be done after the liberal appraisal referred to. This liberal appraisal may be $500 on a certain asset, and then we say by this amendment that if the appraisal is $500 on this asset, then the corporation is directed to make the purchase or loan.

If time permit, I should like to point out to the committee the definite obligation there is on the part of the Federal Government to do something for these depositors. Much has been said about it here. I have contended from the beginning that there is a definite obligation on the part of the Government.

During the Senate hearings, letters dated January 3, October 6, December 18, 1931, and July 1, 1932, were submitted to the Senate committee by the Comptroller's office. These were letters of instruction to the bank examiners that they must be lenient, and I quote from the first one of them, the letter of January 3, 1931:

It is the desire of the Comptroller in this period of serious and unusual depression to be as lenient in this matter as the circumstances in each individual case will permit. While it is necessary for your examiners to exercise their judgment in each case, consideration should be given to the present and what is believed to be a temporary condition of the bond market.

Some of the bank examiners did not follow this, so on October 6, 1931, they wrote a second letter:

Please instruct all examiners to exercise extraordinary discretion in their work and use every effort to encourage and sustain the morale in banks examined. Leniency consistent with proper regard for public interest should be extended. Present conditions demand sympathetic treatment on the part of this office and examiners and can in an important measure tend to the alleviation of the difficult problems with which we are temporarily faced.

Then, on December 18, 1931:

In the emergency that results examiners are instructed until further notice to disregard market depreciation upon bonds not in default. Bonds should be rated and appraised as heretofore, but no part of the depreciation, except that upon defaulted issues, should be shown on page 11 of the report.

July 1, 1932:

Reports of examination received by this office recently clearly indicate that some examiners have not fully grasped the meaning of previous instructions issued by this office during the past year with respect to examinations, more particularly instructions issued under date of October 6, 1931, and it would also seem that some of the examiners may not fully appreciate the extremely abnormal business conditions and the weakened condition of the securities market at this time.

In conclusion, I urge that this bill receive the support of the membership of the House. It will give renewed hope to millions of our citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, including therein certain correspondence with the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the arguments on this bill, which I consider largely shadow-boxing. Nevertheless, I am for this bill. I am for it not because it gives any fundamental relief to the crying needs of the country but because it will give some temporary relief. It will help a little. It may keep the ship of state sailing until we get back here and do something more fundamental.

It has been stated here from the floor that the people were praying and crying that this Congress adjourn. I am sorry that I cannot agree with that statement, because I know that the farmers are praying and crying that Congress remain in session until it has passed the Frazier-Lemke bill. I know and you know that the veterans of the World War are begging and praying that we stay here until the soldiers are paid in cash. I know and you know that the laboring people are praying and begging that we remain in session until the 30-hour week bill is passed. I know and you know that the unemployed and those on a disguised dole system are begging and praying that we remain in session until something fundamental is done to meet the deplorable conditions that still exist. Consequently, I am forced to believe that the crying for adjournment comes rather from the international bankers and politicians and not from the people.

It has been said that those in power never learn anything from the fate of their predecessors. Those in charge of the legislation in the special session and in charge of the legislation during this session, certainly have not learned anything from the fate of the preceding administration. Not only are they as indifferent about the Frazier-Lemke bill as the previous administration, but they are equally indifferent on the cost of production for that part of the farm products consumed within the United States. Surely no honest or intelligent person wants to continue to consume the farmers' products below the cost of production.

We have here at the Speaker's desk a petition discharging the Committee on Agriculture and bringing the Frazier-Lemke bill out on the floor for discussion and passage. Yet, every time that we come within striking distance, some invisible force, working through subterranean channels, seems to be able to get some Members to withdraw their names from that petition. I am not entirely unfamiliar with that invisible subterranean force. I know something about the threat of loss of patronage, but I can assure the Members of this House that the people of this Nation are no longer seriously concerned as to who is appointed their postmasters. They demand something more fundamental. They demand the Frazier-Lemke bill.

I have taken occasion before to correct erroneous statements made by Members of this body concerning the Frazier-Lemke bill. Yet, in spite of this fact, these erroneous and incorrect statements persist. Needless to say, these statements are based upon misinformation by Members who talk too readily on subjects on which they are not informed, and who accept rumors as facts when the facts could have been readily and easily ascertained. These statements concern the discharge rule and the consideration, or lack of consideration, that the Frazier-Lemke bill has received in the hands of the committees in whose possession it has been since February 2, 1931.

It has been stated by Members who withdrew their names from the petition that they did so because when they signed they believed that the committee had refused to grant a hearing, but that by some grapevine route they had been informed that the committee had not refused and that upon this information they withdrew their names. The cold and indisputable fact remains that they withdrew their names when we were within a few signatures of going over the top; that they withdrew their names when those who oppose this bill made their drive to get names removed. I am compelled to conclude that this was the cause of the withdrawal of the names rather than the erroneous assumption of facts which do not exist, except in the minds of those who withdrew their names and who have not reinstated them.

Let us now briefly review the history of this bill. It was first introduced in the Senate by Senator FRAZIER in the Seventy-first Congress, third session, December 8, 1930, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, S. 5109. It was reintroduced in the Seventy-second Congress, first session, by Senator FRAZIER on December 9, 1931, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, S. 1197. A subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held extensive hearings on this bill on February 2, 3, and 5, 1932. These hearings were printed, and consist of 128 pages devoted exclusively to this bill. The full Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held hearings on this and other agricultural bills on April 26, 27, 28, and 29, 1932. These hearings were also printed, and consist of 219 pages. On May 14, 1932, it was reported with amendments by the full committee, Senate Report 692. It was brought up on the floor of the Senate, debated, and referred to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on July 11, 1932. During the second session of the Seventy-second Congress hearings were held before the full Committee on Banking and Currency on this bill on December 22, 1932, and on January 7, 9, and 30, 1933. These hearings were also printed, and consist of 90 pages. The bill was reintroduced in the first session of the Seventy-third Congress by Senator FRAZIER on March 13, 1933, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, S. 457. It was offered as an amendment to the Wagner Agricultural Credit Act on April 22, 1933. On that amendment the yeas were 25 and the nays were 44. A number of Senators who were favorable to the amendment were necessarily absent.

This, in brief, is the history of the Frazier-Lemke bill in the Senate. It has been before that body for practically 3½ years. It has had Nation-wide support and publicity. There is hardly a man or a woman, with ordinary intelligence, in this Nation that has not heard of the Frazier-Lemke bill, and the majority of them know what the bill is.

Let us now take up the history of this bill in the House. It was first introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR] on February 2, 1931, Seventy-first Congress, third session, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, H.R. 16800. It was again introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota on December 8, 1931, H.R. 476, and reintroduced by him on January 12, 1932, Seventy-second Congress, first session, and again referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, H.R. 7524. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR] informs me that he made numerous requests, oral and written, for hearings on this bill before the Banking and Currency Committee, but that the chairman [Mr. STEAGALL] always informed him that the committee was busy with other bills and could not give a hearing at that time. Finally, the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, in reply to a letter from the gentlemen from North Dakota requesting a hearing, replied as follows:

I regret that I am unable to say at this time when this bill will be taken up by the committee for consideration.

H. B. STEAGALL,
Chairman Banking and Currency Committee.

I was here in Washington at the time that the hearings were being held in the Senate and at the time that this bill was pending in the House before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and was informed by the late John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers' Union, and other farm leaders, that they had attempted in vain to get a hearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House. This bill remained in that committee until the close of the Seventy-second Congress without a hearing or offer of a hearing, notwithstanding the requests made by the gentleman from North Dakota and the requests made by farm leaders.

On the second day of the special session, March 10, 1933, I introduced the Frazier-Lemke bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, H.R. 2855. I spoke to the chairman of that committee and was informed that the committee was busy with the administration's program. The committee was then holding hearings on the Myers bill—the present Farm Mortgage Refinancing Act. Sometime thereafter the late John A. Simpson came to my office and asked me to call the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and tell him that he and other farm leaders and myself desired to be heard on the Frazier-Lemke bill as a substitution for the Myers bill. I called the chairman by telephone, and he informed me that they were busy putting over the administration's program and that the meetings were executive and only members of the committees and those whom the committee called were permitted to appear and testify.

When the Myers bill came up on the floor of the House for passage, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] moved that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions that the committee substitute the Frazier-Lemke bill. The Chairman of the Agricultural Committee raised a point of order against the substitution and was sustained by the Chair. I find no fault with the chairman of that committee. He was carrying out the administration's program, as he had a right to do, but I do wish to impress upon the Members that no opportunity for hearings on the Frazier-Lemke bill was given during the special session or during the two sessions of Congress prior thereto.

Coming now to the present session, I find that on January 30, 1934, I wrote the following letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture:

John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers' Union; C. C. Talbott, president of the North Dakota Farmers' Union; Cal Ward, president of the Kansas Farmers' Union; and other farm leaders who are now in the city and who know that the provisions heretofore made to refinance farm mortgages and indebtedness are not sufficient, have suggested to me that I request your Committee on Agriculture to take up for immediate consideration H.R. 2855, known as "the Frazier-Lemke bill."

May I therefore respectfully request your committee to hold hearings on this bill and to give us 2 days' notice before the hearings begin, so that we may present the facts as they are out in the country and as they are known to be by the men who are in touch with the actual situation? May I hear from you?

Very respectfully yours,

WILLIAM LEMKE.

On February 2 I received the following reply:

I am in receipt of your letter making a request for hearings on an additional farm mortgage bill.

As you know, the administration measure for this refinancing has been passed and approved and is now in operation. It is claimed that mortgages are being refinanced at a rate of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 per day, which is at the rate of more than $1,000,000,000 per year. The program has just recently gotten well under way.

The administration is endeavoring to handle the financial program through other channels. I believe you will agree that it is apparently making some headway. Inasmuch as both these programs are in the process of being applied, I rather doubt the wisdom at this time of pressing for consideration of a measure that would undertake to apply different methods, regardless of the merit of the proposal.

I do not want, and I am sure you do not want, to complicate or make more difficult the handling of these matters by the President. If for any reason the programs being applied should not work out in a successful way, it seems to me it would then be a better time to give consideration to other methods.

Thanking you for your interest, I am,

With best wishes, cordially,

MARVIN JONES.

On February 12, 1934, I again wrote to the Chairman of the Agricultural Committee as follows:

My good friends, John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union, C. C. Talbott, president of the North Dakota Farmers' Union, and Cal Ward, president of the Kansas Farmers' Union, are in the office and they tell me that it will be the Frazier-Lemke bill eventually; why not now? They say the Frazier-Lemke bill is a cure; why continue to remain sick?

May we not have the hearings asked for?

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM LEMKE.

To this last letter I received no reply, but I met the chairman and he gave the same reason, in substance, as given in reply to my letter of January 30.

As late as April 11, 1934, the chairman of that committee replied to an earnest request from an interested citizen with reference to the Frazier-Lemke bill, as follows:

We are in the middle of the President's refinancing program, and I do not wish to complicate that program until it shall have had a fair trial. If it should not prove satisfactory, then I think a plan should be developed which would be much more general and permanent, and therefore more effective, than the measure to which you refer.

A short time ago when we were within a few of sufficient signatures on the petition to discharge the committee, and just before the drive was made by those who were opposed to this bill to get the names taken off the petition, I was informed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] that a suggestion had been made by the chairman that the Frazier-Lemke bill could be referred to a subcommittee. Both of these gentlemen, however, suggested to me that to refer the bill at that late date to a subcommittee would defeat the legislation for this session. Later I was informed by these gentlemen that the chairman made the above suggestion to the committee, but objection was made that to refer the bill to a subcommittee was equivalent to killing it for this session, whereupon the chairman, in fairness to the bill, dropped the subject.

I am informed that more recently the question was again brought up before the Committee on Agriculture, and it was again suggested that to report the bill out at this time would simply mean that it would go to the Rules Committee and that would end any hope for the bill in this session—that it would annul the 136 signatures which we had on the petition to discharge the committee at that time and would compel those in favor of the bill to start in anew discharging the Rules Committee. In fact, it was stated that to do this would be to betray this legislation with a kiss. It would have put us in the same position that the sponsors of the McLeod bill were placed in when the Committee on Banking and Currency reported the bill out and they had to start their petition anew to discharge the Rules Committee.

I find no fault with the Chairman or with the Committee on Agriculture. I am proud of that committee because a majority, 7 Democrats and 6 Republicans—13 out of 25—on that committee signed the petition to discharge itself. I know of other members on that committee who are favorable to the bill and will vote for it if it comes up on the floor. The bill has not been—and I am confident will not be—betrayed by the Committee on Agriculture. The members of that committee know that to report it out now—even if favorably reported—could not possibly bring it up for a vote on the floor because in order to have any chance, it would have to go to the Rules Committee, and that committee would not grant a rule to bring it out.

Therefore, the Members who make the statement that this bill could have had hearings before the Committee on Agriculture before it was too late in the session, are grossly in error and are not justified in using that excuse for either withdrawing or withholding their signatures. These Members may have other good reasons for not signing the petition, but that excuse will not work—it has already been worn threadbare.

Some of those who have withdrawn their names—and others who withheld their names—from the petition to discharge the committee, use as an excuse that under the Frazier-Lemke bill loans can be made up to 100 percent of the value of the land and 50 percent of the insured permanent improvements as against 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the insured permanent improvements under the present mortgage refinancing law. These Members overlook the fact that under the Frazier-Lemke bill a farmer, as far as his ability to pay goes, can carry a mortgage of 100 percent of the value of the land plus 50 percent of the insured permanent improvements easier than he can, under the present law, carry a mortgage of 50 percent of the value of the land plus 20 percent of the insured permanent improvements.

Under the present farm-mortgage act the farmer is asked to pay 4½-percent interest if he lives in a Federal Farm Loan Association district and 5 percent if he does not, and, in addition, pay 1 percent for administration and buy stock in an amount equal to 5 percent of the loan, making 10½ or 11 percent for the first year and thereafter 4½- or 5-percent interest, together with 1 percent for amortization, making 5½ or 6 percent annually until paid. While under the Frazier-Lemke bill he will pay 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal, or $30 for each thousand dollars borrowed for approximately 47 years. Under the Frazier-Lemke bill a farmer could carry a $17,000 mortgage loan, as far as his ability to pay goes, as easily as a $5,000 loan under the present law. The Frazier-Lemke bill takes into consideration the farmer's ability to pay.

Under the present law, if all the farm indebtedness were refinanced, the farmers of this Nation would pay $12,492,500,000 in 39 years to the coupon clippers. Under the Frazier-Lemke bill the farmers would have to pay just $6,149,500,000, less interest, in 47 years, and at the same time the Government would make a net profit of $6,345,000,000, and to that extent lessen our Federal tax burden. Therefore this excuse is not a good one, and these Members must look further for an excuse for withdrawing their names or withholding their names from the petition.

Another erroneous statement that is made by those who apparently have not read the bill and know nothing of its contents, although it has been before this Congress for 3½ years and has been discussed throughout the Nation during all that time, is that farmers could sell their land to the Government. Section 3 of the bill reads in part:

> To liquidate, refinance, and take up farm mortgages and other farm indebtedness existing at the date of the enactment of this act.

Surely under this act the farmers cannot get any money at all. He is simply refinanced, and if he has no indebtedness he cannot be refinanced. The act applies only to farmers that are indebted at the time that the act is passed, and the amount of money is limited to the indebtedness, or, in case that is greater than the value of the farm, to the value of the farm plus 50 percent of the insured permanent improvements.

It is true that if the value of the land plus 50 percent of the insurable improvements thereon is insufficient to take care of the farmer's indebtedness, then he may borrow an additional sum secured by first mortgage on livestock used for breeding or agricultural purposes to an amount equal to 65 percent of the fair market value thereof. Such loans run for a period of 1 year, with right of renewal from year to year, with a limitation of 10 years, provided that any depreciation in the value of such livestock is replaced by additional livestock used for breeding or agricultural purposes, and the amount of the loan is reduced 10 percent each year. Surely that is better security than is now being put up for Federal Reserve notes by the Federal Reserve banks. All they put up is Government debts—a Government bond.

Another excuse is that the Frazier-Lemke bill is limited to $3,000,000,000 of new Federal Reserve notes and therefore is not sufficient to take care of all the farm indebtedness. The truth is that this $3,000,000,000 will become a revolving fund, will find its way back into the Federal Reserve Banking System, and under the provisions of the bill it is made the duty of the Federal Reserve banks to invest their available surplus and net profits, after the dividends are paid to their stockholders, in such farm-loan bonds, which profits include the franchise tax. It is equally clear that all the farm indebtedness cannot be refinanced at once. It will take at least 2 or 3 years in which to refinance all the farm indebtedness. Of course, it is equally clear that all the farm indebtedness will not be refinanced, because on the smaller farms the loans are small and are made at a reasonable rate of interest, and when there is enough money in circulation again the mortgagees will not crowd the mortgagors.

Anyway, this argument could be made with equal force against the present mortgage refinancing law that was passed during the special session and against the home owners' loan law. Why should these Members be so particular when they are asked to do something for the farmers and not for the coupon clippers? The present farm-mortgage refinancing act and the home owners' loan act permit the coupon clippers to clip their 4-percent interest. No objection was made that those provisions were not sufficient to take care of all the farm mortgages or of all the home mortgages at one time. In addition, these laws provide no new money, and therefore there is no revolving fund established with which to continue to make the loans.

The issues are fundamental. The international bankers and money changers stand on one side—the farmers and the common people stand on the other side. The conflict between the two cannot be reconciled. You are either with the money changers or with the people. Either the money changers will continue to sit in the temple and exact their pound of flesh or they will be driven from the temple with a cat-o'-nine-tails. The Frazier-Lemke bill is that cat-o'-nine-tails. These are the issues that are involved. The technical arguments advanced against this bill are smoke screens. The Members of Congress must chose between the people of their respective districts and the money changers. "Choose this day whom thou wilt serve." If you have the courage to choose to stand by the farmers—and their neighbors—by 130,000,000 men, women, and children, sign the petition to discharge the committee and bring the Frazier-Lemke bill out on the floor for fair consideration and a vote. If not, then do not sign, and in that case you will not be embarrassed by taking your name off.

In conclusion, permit me to suggest that this bill has had extensive hearings in the Senate, that hearings in the House were refused until it was too late to get it out with any show for a vote, that it has been before this Congress for 3½ years, that the entire Nation knows of the bill and its contents.

Last but not least, remember that this bill has the official endorsement of the National Farmers' Union; it has the official endorsement of some State farm bureaus and other farm organizations, and of many farm bureau and grange locals throughout the Nation. It has the approval of 95 percent of the farmers of this Nation; it has the approval of every intelligent banker, business, and professional man and woman. Twenty-two State legislatures have asked Congress to pass this bill. They are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Wisconsin. It has the approval of the lower house of the State Legislature of New York, the President's own State, as well as that of Delaware. Surely no Member of Congress from these States is justified in ignoring this mandate from his State.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, against the possible inference through my taking no part in the general debate, let me say that I approve this bill as a whole. There are one or two particulars where the conference committee may make changes that I should approve, but I think it ought to receive the unanimous support of the committee.

Gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency on the other side of the aisle would be precluded from taking part in the general debate if I consumed any time, and as a proof of good will and good faith toward my friends across the aisle, I yield the rest of my time to the chairman of the committee to dispose of as he chooses by yielding to other members of the committee.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his kindness and generosity, but in view of the lateness of the hour, we shall ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire when we will reach the end of a paragraph or a section that will permit of the offering of an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being read by sections, and the first section ends with line 16, on page 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "July 1, 1934" wherever it appears in subsections (e), (1), and (y), and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1935";

(2) by striking out "June 15, 1934" where it appears in the last sentence of the third paragraph of subsection (y), and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1934";

(3) by striking out "June 30, 1934" where it appears in the first sentence of the fifth paragraph of subsection (y), and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1935";

(4) by adding after the first clause of the second sentence of the fifth paragraph of subsection (y) the following: "and the provisions of such subsection (1) relating to the appointment of the Corporation as receiver shall be applicable to the members of the temporary Federal deposit insurance fund,"; and by striking out the initial words "and the" in the second clause of the second sentence of the fifth paragraph of subsection (y) and inserting in lieu thereof the word "The";

(5) by adding to the sixth paragraph of subsection (y) the following: "The Corporation shall prescribe by regulations the manner of exercise of the right of nonmember banks to withdraw from membership in the fund on July 1, 1934, except that no bank shall be permitted to withdraw unless 20 days prior thereto it has given written notice to each of its depositors and to the Corporation of its election so to do. Banks which withdraw from the fund on July 1, 1934, shall be entitled to a refund of their proportionate share of any estimated balance in the fund on the same basis as if the fund had terminated on July 1, 1934.";

(6) by adding to the end of the fourth paragraph of subsection (y) the following two additional paragraphs:

"On and after July 1, 1934, the amount eligible for insurance under this subsection for the purposes of the October 1, 1934, certified statement, any entrance assessment, and, if levied, the additional assessment shall be the amounts not in excess of $5,000 of the deposits of each depositor.

"Each mutual savings bank, unless it becomes subject to the provisions of the preceding paragraph in the manner hereinafter provided, shall be excepted from the operation of the preceding paragraph and for each such bank which is so excepted the amount eligible for insurance under this subsection for the purposes of the October 1, 1934, certified statement, any entrance assessment, and, if levied, the additional assessment shall be the amounts not in excess of $2,500 for the deposits of each depositor. In the event any mutual savings bank shall be closed on account of inability to meet its deposit liabilities the Corporation shall pay not more than $2,500 on account of the net approved claim of any owner of deposits in such bank: Provided, however, That should any mutual savings bank make manifest to the Corporation its election to be subject to the provisions of the preceding paragraph the Corporation may, in the discretion of the board of directors, permit such bank to become so subject and the insurance of its deposits to continue on the same basis and to the same extent as that of fund members other than mutual savings banks";

(7) by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence of the fifth paragraph of subsection (y) and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "if the member closed on or before June 30, 1934, and not more than $5,000 if closed on or after July 1, 1934.";

(8) by (a) striking out "and until July 1, 1936," in the first sentence of subsection (1), (b) striking out the words "until July 1, 1936," in the seventh paragraph of subsection (y) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "notwithstanding any provision of this section to the contrary.", and (c) adding after the seventh paragraph of subsection (y) the following new paragraph:

"Any State bank may obtain the benefits of this section on and after the date the fund is terminated upon the conditions with regard to examination, certification, and approval governing the admission of State banks to the fund and upon purchasing such class A stock or making such a deposit as is prescribed in the preceding paragraph for former fund members."

(9) by (a) striking out the word "three" in subsection (o) and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five", and (b) by inserting the word "subscribed" before the word "capital" in said subsection.

(10) by adding at the end of subsection (o) the following new paragraph:

"Such of the obligations authorized to be issued under this subsection as the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine, shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by it, and guaranteed by the United States under this paragraph, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amounts so paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any obligations of the Corporation to be issued under this subsection which are guaranteed by the United States under this paragraph, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Loan Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Loan Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's obligations under this paragraph. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the obligations of the Corporation acquired by him under this paragraph. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the obligations of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, is authorized to market for the Corporation such of its notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations as are guaranteed by the United States under this paragraph, using therefor all the facilities of the Treasury Department now authorized by law for the marketing of obligations of the United States. The proceeds of the obligations of the Corporation so marketed shall be deposited in the same manner as proceeds derived from the sale of obligations of the United States, and the amount thereof shall be credited to the Corporation on the books of the Treasury."; and

(11) by inserting after the first sentence of subsection (p) the following new sentence: "Any such obligations which are guaranteed by the United States under the second paragraph of subsection (o) shall be exempt from all such taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes)."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 14, after the figures "1935", insert a new paragraph by adding at the end of subsection (e) the following:

"(1½) No salary in excess of $17,500 annually shall be paid to any person connected with any Federal Reserve bank."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order because I want to be heard on the amendment. I think the amendment is germane because we are amending section (e) of the Federal Reserve Act, making several requirements of the banking institutions to become members of the Federal Deposit Corporation. Under existing law they cannot become members after July 1, 1935, unless they are members of the Federal Reserve banks; and if they become members of the Federal Reserve banks they ought to have something to say about salaries paid officials of these institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LUCE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane. In this bill they are seeking to amend several parts of section 12 of the Federal Reserve Act, and this is one of the principles involved. The Chair overrules the point of order.

SALARIES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will adopt this amendment; $17,500 is sufficient salary for an official of the Federal Reserve bank. The insurance companies receive loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and are restricted in their salaries to $17,500. A Cabinet officer receives no more than $17,500. Certainly, $17,500 is sufficient salary for any official of a Federal Reserve bank. These institutions are operating on the credit of this Nation, and some of them are paying very high salaries. You do not know how much they pay, because they will not tell you, and you cannot find out. It will require a Congressional investigation to find out anything about the activities of the Federal Reserve banks, and when this investigation is made I predict that plenty shocking, astounding, and almost unbelievable information will be disclosed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague, of course, is not in favor of paying all officials $17,500?

Mr. PATMAN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever you fix a maximum salary as high as $17,500, that maximum is going to become the minimum. I am not in favor of paying any of them that amount. I think it is too high.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman thinks there should be a limit, he should be in favor of $17,500. The fact that they pay the Governor $17,500 is no reason why they should bring the bookkeeper's salary up to $17,500.

I realize the amendment is being offered under very unfavorable circumstances. Many members of the Committee on Banking and Currency would vote for it under ordinary circumstances, but I realize they are opposed to it being attached to this bill. If it is lost the fight will not be abandoned. I expect to continue to expose the use and abuse of the Government's credit by these banks, to contend that the Government should take them over immediately and operate them in the interest of all people, banks, industry, commerce, and agriculture. Until they are taken over by the Government, they should make full and complete reports to Congress and should not spend a dime that Congress does not authorize them to spend.

Under existing laws these banks get all the money they wanted printed for them at the Government's Bureau of Engraving and Printing for about 27 cents a thousand dollars' worth. They use the credit of the Nation free, pay no taxes except upon their real estate, keep all the profits they make, spend all the money they want to for salaries or other expenses, and make no reports to Congress. They are owned by private corporations. The Government does not, neither does a single individual, own one penny of stock in these institutions. They have had farmed out to them the great privilege of issuing money on the credit of the Nation. Every bill issued represents a mortgage on all the property and incomes of all the people.

Mr. BLANTON. I think $10,000 ought to be the maximum amount. You can get a United States Senator for that. You can get the pick of the United States to serve in the United States Senate for $10,000 a year, and you can get the pick of this Nation to serve in this House for $10,000 a year, and sometimes they spend large amounts to get here. We must stop these unreasonably high salaries.

Mr. PATMAN. I agree with the gentleman, but I am making the amount liberal in order that the amendment might have a better chance of being adopted, since it is already handicapped. This will be a good start in the right direction, and it will not be long until we shall have an opportunity to do more.

BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION

In regard to this bill, just one moment. I am in favor of the bill. I think it is a good bill. It repeals the law requiring State banks to join the Federal Reserve System in order to get their deposits insured. It increases the insurance on deposits from $2,500 to $5,000 and provides for full insurance of all deposits in another year.

I have always been in favor of liberal appraisals of the assets of closed banks. April 20, 1934, I made the following statement here on the floor of the House in regard to appraisals when speaking against the McLeod bill:

> Let the Government appraise the assets of every closed bank and be liberal and generous in the appraisals. Then let the Government take over those assets dollar for dollar and put up that money for preferred stock or new capital in order to reopen the banking institutions (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 7091).

There is nothing in this bill that is in any way like the McLeod bill. The McLeod bill, to my way of thinking, did not have a single good principle. I say this with all due respect to the able and sincere Members who are supporting it. I am quite sure they have not given it sufficient consideration.

This bill has many good principles. The McLeod bill made an unlimited appropriation to unknown persons for unknown reasons. We did not know what would be appropriated. This bill makes a definite appropriation for a definite purpose, upon adequate security. Under the McLeod bill the R.F.C. would have been required to purchase notes of bankrupts, people who have gone into bankruptcy. Under the McLeod bill the R.F.C. would have been required to purchase and pay 100 cents on the dollar for the face amount of the notes of bankrupts that were worthless.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. No.

Mr. McLEOD. Is the gentleman as accurate in that statement as in saying the McLeod bill would cost $200,000,000,000?

Mr. PATMAN. I never said that.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman should read the RECORD.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman is no more accurate about his bill than he is about that, he is not very accurate. The gentleman has asked Congress to pass a bill paying all depositors of all closed banks 100 cents on the dollar of their deposits because Mr. Hoover and Mr. Mills made antihoarding speeches in February and March 1932. He wants them paid back to January 1, 1930, more than 2 years before the speeches were made, and, besides, the people did not put money in the banks after the speeches were made; they took money out of the banks, about $4,000,000,000 in a short time, according to official records.

This provides that liquidation shall be continued. The sponsors of the McLeod bill ask that liquidation of closed banks should stop now to save expenses. This bill carries forward the policy of holding up liquidations in order that these assets of the banks may come back in value. It will probably be several years before we get back to 1929 values; the assets of closed banks, most of them, are based upon 1929 values. Practically every proposal in regard to a price level calls for a return of 1926 values, which will be considerably less than 1929 values.

SPONSORS OF M'LEOD BILL KNOW THEY CANNOT WIN

The McLeod bill was in order as an amendment to this bill. It was not introduced. The reason is obvious—the sponsors knew that it would not have a chance, and many of them did not want to be placed in the attitude of asking for its passage. After all the clamor and propaganda that the bill was being smothered in the committee, that the House leadership was destroying representative government by refusing to permit the bill to be brought up for passage, the sponsors had an opportunity of getting a direct vote on the measure, and they refused it—did not take advantage of it.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] did offer an amendment which I am sure he considered a step in the direction of his proposal, but it only received about 60 votes. It was defeated by a big majority.

Anyone entertaining the opinion that the McLeod bill does contain a good principle that could even be used as a basis for legislation that could be justified, I hope you will read my discussions of the measure, which will be found in the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 20, 1934, commencing at page 7090; April 26, 1934, commencing at page 7481; May 2, 1934, commencing at page 7963; and May 15, 1934, commencing at page 8887; also an address made by the Honorable J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, to the Oklahoma Bankers Association, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 15, 1934, page 8887.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 52, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The first paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 321), is amended by adding after the second sentence thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "For the purposes of membership of any such bank the terms 'capital' and 'capital stock' shall include the amount of outstanding capital notes and debentures legally issued by the applying bank and purchased by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to refute the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] that there was not a single sound principle in the McLeod bill. I think that every Member here, except perhaps the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], is aware of the fact that if the McLeod bill had been brought out for consideration by a discharge of the committee rule, it would have been amended to provide for a maximum pay-off of $2,500, that it would have included all closed banking and financial institutions, and that that would mean a full pay-off for 93 percent of the depositors in closed banks of this country. If the gentleman from Texas calls that unsound legislation, then I question the ability of the gentleman to qualify as an expert on banking and monetary legislation.

I expect to support this bill, as the rest of you do, but I do not propose at this moment when we are about to enact such a measure into law, that a similar measure for which not only the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] stood, but for which several gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House have been laboring unceasingly, shall be branded as unsound all the way through by any Member of this House, without challenging the statement. If the remarks of the gentleman from Texas on the Frazier bill, as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, are an indication of his qualifications and authority on that subject, then I also challenge those statements.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. How would the gentleman interpret the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] on May 15, found on page 9091 of the RECORD:

Cost of the McLeod bill: Insurance claims. Will take $200,000,000,000 to pay all its losses.

Mr. TRUAX. I would not undertake to interpret that.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is misleading. If he will notice the reference on page 9091 he will see that I refer to a speech that was made by me on April 20, 1934, in which I stated, in answer to a question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD], that all the people for all causes growing out of the depression lost approximately $200,000,000,000. I used this language, which appears on page 7092 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 20, 1934:

That includes all the farmers' losses, the losses on the stock exchange, and the national banks, State banks, private banks, building-and-loan companies, Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, and all other losses of the people.

I did not say the McLeod bill would cost $200,000,000,000, but did say what the RECORD quotes me as saying. I said further that the McLeod bill authorized an unlimited appropriation for unknown reasons to unknown persons, except we did know that one person would get $32,000,000 if the original bill became law, and that the taxpayers would have to pay the bill; that it would require the Government to pay depositors who had their money stolen by bank officials, and for which the Government was not even remotely responsible in any way.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further. I deny that any of the things mentioned by the gentleman from Texas would have happened if the McLeod bill passed as we propose to amend it, namely, to include all closed banks in the plan, and to limit full pay-offs to $2,500. Any pay-off bill will necessarily have to include some deposits which were stolen by crooked bank officials as is stated by the gentleman from Texas.

I call attention at this time to a resolution that I have introduced today—and my statement now is out of order, but I know you will bear with me for only 30 seconds—to investigate the Darrow Board that is investigating the N.R.A. I say to my friends on the Democratic side that the N.R.A. is our baby, and we have to protect it and nurture it, and carry it on until maturity. It has been the most successful recovery act for industry, in my judgment, of all of the measures that have passed here.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. The resolution I referred to appears herewith:

Resolution by Mr. TRUAX introduced in the House of Representatives May 24

Resolved, Whereas the National Recovery Review Board, created by the President under Executive Order No. 6632, dated March 7, 1934, was formed to conduct an impartial survey as set forth in said Executive order; and

Whereas said Board has made a report clearly disclosing the intent of the chairman and the dominating member of the Board to work a change in our form of government and the adoption of communism or state socialism, thereby abandoning any pretense of impartiality or any other purpose except one of soviet propaganda; and

Whereas members of said Board on assuming their duties under said Executive order took an oath to defend and uphold the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas according to the record of proceedings of said Board it undertook only the gathering of material tending to discredit the United States Government and the operation and results of the National Recovery Administration and codes of fair competition approved and administered thereunder; and

Whereas members of the Review Board advocating communistic doctrines are reported in the public press to have been suggested by certain Members of the Congress, and upon the publication of said report, there was an immediate move on the floor of both the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to justify and uphold it; and

Whereas in view of the unrest and soviet and communistic propaganda in many parts of the world, it is of the utmost importance to determine how far this menacing doctrine has succeeded in penetrating into the executive and legislative departments of the United States Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved—

SECTION 1. That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment is made.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to investigate the personnel, conduct, and activities of said National Recovery Review Board and the relationship between such board and certain Members of the Congress of the United States with a view to ascertaining whether said board has in good faith carried out the duties and functions imposed upon it by said Executive order, whether said board has violated the trust reposed in it by using its offices as a means of propagating political theories contrary to the Constitution of the United States, whether such board is attempting to corrupt any Members of the Congress with soviet and communistic doctrines, and whether facts exist tending to show bias, prejudice, or unfairness and conspiracy against the Constitution, laws, and public institutions of the United States on the part of said board in its activities and in reaching its determinations. The committee shall report to the House as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the House in the Seventy-third Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistance, to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony as it deems advisable. The committee is hereby authorized to call upon all Government agencies for such assistance as it may deem necessary to the proper discharge of its duties. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $20,000, shall be paid from the contingent funds of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Clarence Darrow, one of America's foremost citizens and widely known as a criminal lawyer, should have been made the dupe and victim of individuals on the committee and otherwise of pronounced socialistic and communistic tendencies.

In support of this resolution your attention is called to the following statement contained in the special and supplemental report to the President by Mr. Darrow, Chairman of the National Recovery Review Board, quoted from page 4 of the report:

To go back to unregulated competition in which the small man can gain his share of the market by some special advantage of skill or other factor, is not possible in a situation where technological advance has produced a surplus so that unregulated competition demoralizes both wages and prices and brings on recurrent and increasingly severe industrial depression. Only by the fullest use of productive capacity for the raising of standards of living of individuals and the community can a steady balance be achieved in an age of abundance. This, however, is possible only when industry produces for use and not for profit, since it is essential that enough wealth should be distributed through the return to the workers to set them as consumers free to use industry's plentiful output.

The choice is between monopoly sustained by government, which is clearly the trend in the National Recovery Administration, and a planned economy, which demands socialized ownership and control, since only by collective ownership can the inevitable conflict of separately owned units for the market be eliminated in favor of planned production. There is no hope for the small business man or for complete recovery in America in enforced restriction upon production for the purpose of maintaining higher prices. The hope for the American people, including the small business man, not to be overwhelmed by their own abundance, lies in the planned use of America's resources following socialization. To give the sanction of government to sustain profits is not a planned economy, but a regimented organization for exploitation. The N.R.A. is at present in the stage of conflict of interests; but in proportion as the authority of government sanctions regulation by industrial combinations, the inevitable tendency is toward monopoly, with elimination of the small business.

At this critical hour, when strikes and riots are occurring in many sections, when in my own State of Ohio, in the city of Toledo, where 7,000 strikers are engaged in a hand-to-hand battle with a detachment of National Guardsmen, where many of the rioters were clubbed with rifles in the hands of the steel-helmeted troops, many seriously wounded, while none of the soldiers were hurt, and where the National Guardsmen were driving before them men, women, and children before the sharp points of gleaming bayonets, it is high time that N.R.A., which has just received an unanimous vote of confidence from the American Federation of Labor, and which was designed to help both industry and labor—it is high time that this institution received the honest support and not the carping criticism of Members of Congress vainly looking for political issues this fall.

These workingmen are fighting for the same right—to live not in bleak poverty but in an American standard and fashion of living. They do not expect, nor will they be compelled, to cower at the crack of the slave driver's whip. They demand their fair share of the wealth which they create. Wage workers are supposed to get a fair share of the wealth they create under N.R.A. codes.

The codes were devised to protect the wageworkers equally with the captains of industry and finance. Thousands of hours have been spent by N.R.A. officials upon codes which have been condemned and denounced by the Darrow Board after a few hours of hasty and biased consideration. N.R.A. has been the salvation of many industries, of countless thousands of wageworkers.

No one else could have filled the most difficult, the least appreciated, the most maligned position of all in the Government service—that of National Recovery Administrator—as has that militant, dynamic, forceful national figure, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson. This job is not a job for kid-gloved professorial doctors, theorists, and quacks. It requires an individual of unquestioned honesty, integrity, and ability.

All of these qualifications were demanded when the President of the United States named his Recovery Administrator. The President is not disappointed in his selection. Honest and fair industrialists are not disappointed. The American Federation of Labor is not disappointed. Instead of business chaos and universal bankruptcy, or threatened receiverships, we now have begun an orderly march to a durable and permanent national industrial recovery, through the creation of N.R.A. by the Seventy-third Congress and President Franklin D. Roosevelt, administered by the fearless Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, and his corps of capable assistants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) The first sentence of the eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the comma after the words "section 13 (a) of this act" a comma and the following: "or by the deposit or pledge of obligations of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation which are guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States."

(b) Paragraph (b) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the comma after the words "bonds and notes of the United States" a comma and the following: "obligations of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation which are guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States."

(c) Section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 is amended as follows: "so much of section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 as relates to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System is hereby repealed."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word only for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. The Banking Act of 1933, as I recall, provides that in banks capitalized for more than $50,000, the stock ownership of a director must be at least $2,500?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And in banks of $50,000 capital it must be at least $1,500. In banks of $25,000 the directors must own stock in the amount of $1,000?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. By repealing section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 would it be true that one could serve as a bank director in a member bank of the Federal Reserve System without owning any stock, and thereby evade responsibility?

Mr. STEAGALL. Under the original law which will be restored by the adoption of this amendment, directors in national banks where the capital is not above $25,000, would have to have over $500. In banks with capital of $50,000 or more directors would be required to own stock in the amount of $1,000. In State banks it is left for State control under the old law. That law will be restored by the adoption of this amendment. Unless this amendment is adopted, I will say to the gentleman, both large and small banks and especially the small banks throughout the country, many of them State banks, insist they will encounter many difficulties in meeting the requirements of this law at this particular time when it is so difficult to readjust the holdings of stock. In many instances stock could only be purchased at a premium.

That provision of the pending bill passed the Senate as a separate bill, but in order to save the time of the House on Monday and to avoid calling up the Senate bill under suspension, the Committee on Banking and Currency thought it wise to incorporate the provision in this bill. I hope the gentleman will not object to it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. That continues up to $50,000, does it not?

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely. It restores the old banking law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act is amended (a) by adding after subsection (y) a new subsection to read as follows:

"(z) The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to loan upon or purchase assets of any bank, savings bank, or trust company, which has been closed on or after December 31, 1929, and prior to January 1, 1934, and the affairs of which have not been fully liquidated or wound up, the assets of any such bank or any part of such assets upon such terms and conditions as the Corporation may by regulations prescribe. This authority shall extend to any such institution that has reopened without payment of deposits in full. The Corporation is further authorized and empowered, in case the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made a loan to any such closed bank, to negotiate with the liquidating agent or receiver of such bank for an appraisal of its assets and the purchase thereof or the making of a loan thereon to take up the loan or any part thereof made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation deems it desirable in the public interest and the loan will be reasonably secured. In making any purchase of or loan on assets of any closed bank, the Corporation shall appraise such assets in anticipation of an orderly liquidation over a period of years, rather than on the basis of forced selling values in a period of business depression. The Corporation is authorized and empowered to sell any assets acquired under this subsection and shall with respect to such selling and to the liquidation of assets of closed banks pursue and encourage a policy of extending the period of liquidation so as best to conserve the value of such assets and to prevent unreasonable sacrifice thereof.

"Not more than one half of the obligations authorized to be issued by the Corporation shall be used for the purposes set forth in this subsection. No portion of the capital stock or other funds of the Corporation raised for the purpose of insuring deposits in banks shall be used for the purchase of or loans on assets in banks closed prior to January 1, 1934, nor for the repayment of obligations the proceeds of which were used under the provisions of this section. Such obligations as are so used shall be paid only out of the funds received from the repayment of loans made and disposition of assets acquired pursuant to this subsection.

"(b) By striking out the sixth sentence of the first paragraph of subsection (1) and substituting in lieu thereof the following: 'The Corporation shall determine as expeditiously as possible the net amount due to depositors of the closed bank and shall make available to the new bank an amount equal to the insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank, whereupon such new bank shall assume the insured deposit liability of such closed bank to each of its depositors, and the Corporation shall be subrogated as hereinafter stated to the rights against the closed bank of the owners of such deposits. Where the net approved claim of a depositor on account of his deposits does not exceed the insured deposit liability the Corporation shall be entitled to receive all the dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank which would have been payable to such depositor on account of such deposits, and where the net approved deposit claim exceeds the insured deposit liability the Corporation and the depositor shall share ratably in the dividends insofar as the same are based upon deposit liability to such depositor according to the ratio that the insured liability to such depositor bears to the total amount of the net approved claim of such depositor'; and

"(c) By adding at the end of the first paragraph of subsection (v) the following additional paragraph: 'Every insured bank shall display at each place of business maintained by it a sign or signs to the effect that its deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Corporation shall prescribe by regulation the form of such sign and the manner of its display. Such regulation may impose a maximum penalty of $100 for each day an insured bank continues to violate any lawful provisions of said regulation.'"

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Michigan: Section 4, page 10, line 4, after the word "prescribe", insert "if in connection with the reorganization, stabilization, or liquidation of any such bank assets have been trusteed or are otherwise held for the benefit of depositors or depositors and others, the authority, subject to regulations, as provided in the preceding sentence, shall be extended for the purpose of authorizing the corporation to purchase or make loans on such assets held for the benefit of such depositors or depositors and others."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order. Let us have the point of order decided.

Mr. GOSS. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FULLER). The Chair holds that the amendment is germane. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume the entire 5 minutes. The purpose of this amendment is to cover a situation arising in many States in the Union, particularly the States of Ohio and Michigan, where liquidation corporations have been formed for the purpose of taking over the frozen assets in banks. Unless this provision is included in the bill, these depositors who have waived their deposits and where frozen assets have been taken over by trustees or by corporations organized for that purpose will receive no relief. The matter has been presented to both the majority and minority members of the committee and is acceptable to the committee.

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no objection to the amendment. I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THURSTON: On page 9, line 25, after the word and figures "December 31", strike out "1929" and insert in lieu thereof "1925."

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to set back the date at which closed banks may make loans upon their assets. It is a well-known fact that the deflation did not reach the East until 1928 and 1929, and this bill will take care of the assets which they have in those banks; but in the farming sections of the country the deflation started 6 years earlier, and there are many banks now in the course of liquidation in the farming areas that will not have these loan funds available. I take it that it is a question of the value of the assets, and if this is true, the bank that was closed in 1926 or in 1928 should have the same right to make loans upon its frozen assets as a bank which was closed in 1930 or 1932.

No extended remarks are necessary in this connection. I believe the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 10, line 1, after the word and figures "January 1, 1934," insert "and such bank, savings bank, or trust company shall be construed to include any State bank, private bank, mutual savings bank, or trust company which was or was not a member of the Federal Reserve System during such period."

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether my understanding is correct that under this bill $1,125,000,000 is available.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is no such amount as that.

Mr. DONDERO. If the phrase "any bank" is going to be construed as including State banks, certainly there will be no objection on the part of the committee to my amendment. If this phrase does not include State banks, we ought to know it now; and I ask the chairman of the committee whether the phrase "any bank" in this bill is intended to include State banks and whether relief will be provided for such institutions.

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely and unquestionably.

Mr. DONDERO. Then what objection is there to the amendment I propose?

Mr. STEAGALL. The amendment offered by the gentleman is not necessary in the least.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has included private banks in his amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. This bill applies to all types of banks.

Mr. DONDERO. But might not the courts construe the phrase "any bank" as applying merely to the national banks, and that thereby the State banks would be left out?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is not the slightest danger of that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: Strike out the word "empowered" wherever it appears in section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed."

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment in no way changes the meaning of the bill. It is a clarifying amendment and uses the word "directs" instead of "empowers." In other words, as I explained a few moments ago, if a receiver desires to have an asset of a closed bank appraised the insurance corporation is directed to appraise it, not empowered. It makes no difference as to the value that may be placed upon the asset, for the appraisal will be based strictly in accordance with the machinery and the mechanics of the bill using as the basis a future normal value.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is in favor of the bill and wants it passed, does he not?

Mr. McLEOD. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does the gentleman want to include in the bill something that will likely cause the President to veto the bill? With the word "empowered" in the bill the President will probably approve it, whereas if the word "directed" is substituted for the word "empowered", it may cause this bill to die.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman recognizes, does he not, that the word "empower" is strictly a grant of discretion and not a mandate?

Mr. BLANTON. The bill as written contains the proper language, and we have every reason to believe that the President will sign it; but if language is incorporated in the bill which the committee has not considered, it may cause the bill to die.

Mr. McLEOD. How does the gentleman know that the committee did not just slip up on this matter?

Mr. BLANTON. This committee does not slip up on things.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman's amendment would merely change the word "empowered" to "directed" so that the insurance corporation would be directed to appraise the assets. It does not direct them to make loans but directs them to take action on the application for a loan upon the appraisal of assets.

Mr. McLEOD. Exactly.

Mr. BOILEAU. There should be no objection to that.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Have we not heard that old threadbare threat many times: If you do this or if you do that, the President will veto the bill? I should like to know upon whose authority the gentleman makes the statement that the President will veto this bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLEOD) there were—ayes 60, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: On page 12, line 19, add a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. —. Section 12 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by inserting within the parenthesis and immediately after the words 'District of Columbia', where they appear in the first sentence of the second paragraph of subsection (y), the following: 'and the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska.'"

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I shall yield back most of the time assigned to me.

In this amendment I seek merely to extend the benefits of the Federal deposit insurance provisions of the Banking Act of 1933 to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii. There is no reason I can think of why the people of these Territories when they pay the price, as they must if they come under the provisions of this act, should be denied the benefit of the insurance provisions of the act.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. I, for one, voted for that act, and am surprised that the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii were not included. I am wondering if it was not an oversight and if the chairman of the committee will not accept the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. DIMOND. I think it was an oversight at the time of the passage of the original act, and I hope the committee will accept the amendment, because I cannot think of a single reason which would impel any Member to vote against it. We are not asking for any privilege, we are asking only for the same rights granted to the banks in the States; and we all know that any bank that does not avail itself of the deposit insurance is going to be pretty badly off. Why should not our banks be given the same treatment you claim for yours? We merely ask for equality in this matter for the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the committee does not object to the amendment of the Delegate from Alaska. [Applause.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 10, line 25, after the word "thereof" strike out the period, add a semicolon and insert the following: "Provided, however, That such period shall not extend beyond 10 years from the date this act shall become effective."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the question is on the substitute amendment of the committee for the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN), there were—ayes 202, noes 0.

So the substitute amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill, S. 3025, to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 393, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 175, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—S. 3025

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, there was no act of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress which the Members of this House may look back upon with greater pride of achievement than the passage of the Banking Act of 1933. That act, while containing other useful and constructive provisions, brought to complete fulfillment the efforts of a number of men who have given long, useful service to the country and to the Membership in this body in achieving the Federal insurance of bank deposits and the sense of security of our people through the protection of their earnings and savings in the banks of this country.

The Chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], a man under whose leadership it has been my privilege and joy to serve, may justly regard his part in bringing his efforts of many years to this successful conclusion as one of the most useful acts of statesmanship during this generation.

The bill before the House contains two important features: The extension of the temporary plan or fund for the insurance of bank deposits, and the provisions for the relief of those who have deposits in closed banks.

I wish first to speak very briefly regarding the extension of the temporary plan for bank-deposit insurance. I am one of those who have not entirely agreed with the recommendation purporting to have come from the administration that it is necessary that the operation of the permanent plan or fund should be deferred for another year.

I would not be so conceited as to back my judgment against the judgment of those men more experienced in the principles and practice of banking than myself; but frankly, my colleagues, I am suspicious of the motives not of anyone actually representing this administration, not of the Comptroller of the Currency or the Chairman of the Board of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, but of some of the gentlemen who have come before our committee or who have otherwise sought to influence the Banking and Currency Committee or to influence the Congress for the complete postponement of the permanent plan or fund. The American Bankers Association last summer, in convention assembled, in a resolution passed by that body, solemnly called upon the President of the United States not to put this act into operation. I do not believe that a majority of the bankers of the country, or a majority any longer of the big bankers, are opposed to what we regard as the heart of this act, the provisions for the assessment of each and every member of the fund, which provide in effect for an unlimited guaranty of the deposits of every depositor in the fund, small or large; but I know that there are those, who perhaps claim to represent more than they do actually represent in the financial structure and life of the country, who would like to strike a dagger through the heart of the plan—the liability of each and every member bank in the fund through the assessment provisions of the act for the security of the deposits in every bank that has come into the fund.

When we passed the act last year it was made necessary in the closing days of that session to make certain compromises and in effect to eventually put provisions into this act which would require a State bank in order to participate in this fund to become a member of the Federal Reserve System. Some of our leaders who did not believe in that kind of coercion were compelled to swallow it in order to get the act passed at all. We have now in this bill remedied that.

The House Banking and Currency Committee has dared to use its own judgment as against the judgment exemplified in the bill passed by the body at the other end of the Capitol, and I trust that the judgment of our committee may be sustained by the Membership of the House. We have ventured also to increase the amount of the insured deposit from $2,500 to $5,000, effective July 1, 1934. This, I believe, is an improvement upon the Senate bill. I say it is an improvement because I suspect that the Senate bill was passed somewhat in deference to advice given in some instances by those who were really opposed to the insurance of bank deposits.

As I indicated a moment ago, I do not claim to be an expert in banking, but as a lawyer I have learned to seek for my guidance in the preparation for trial of a lawsuit the advice of those who are experienced and learned in their particular lines and also in weighing and evaluating the testimony of so-called "expert witnesses" to look not only to their qualifications but to their probable bias, prejudice, or interest.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, for example, sent out a communication containing certain resolutions recently passed by that body, and I wish to read into the RECORD the communication which that body sent me as a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, and I call the attention of the Membership of this House to the fact that while asking for the extension for another year of the temporary plan which would insure deposits only up to $2,500, that august body was so—shall I call it brazen or stupid?—as to give the following advice:

> The present law providing for a so-called "permanent plan" should be repealed.

Why, if we believe in the insurance of bank deposits, take the advice regarding the operation of the law for the insurance of bank deposits that is given by a self-confessed enemy of the bank-deposit insurance, one who openly says that the entire law should be repealed?

It was for this, among other reasons, why I, as a member of this committee, knowing that we have taken one step safely toward the ultimate goal of the security of the depositor and the prevention of bank failures in this country, small as well as large, believe that we now should take another step forward by increasing the amount of the deposit to be insured. In deference to the advice of the directors of the Board of the Corporation, we have postponed for another year, as requested, the operation of the permanent part of the act. But to show the people of this country that the Congress of the United States means to go ahead with this plan, American Bankers Association and Chamber of Commerce of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, we have made what I believe you will agree are two important improvements upon the Senate bill.

There is one other argument urged upon us, I believe, by the enemies of insurance of bank deposits, that under the permanent plan bank deposits ought only be insured to the extent of $2,500, or at the most, $5,000. That is this: That insurance to the extent of $2,500 will take care of about 97 percent in number of all the depositors in all of the banks in the country, and that the large depositor, the man who has $10,000 or $50,000 or more than $50,000 on deposit in the banks, can look out for himself. He does not need insurance.

This is a specious plea. It is an unsound plea. In the judgment of the men who want to maintain the small independent banks, the middle-sized independent banks, who want to protect business and industry against the paying of a toll to the great financial centers, it would not act as a sure preventive of bank failures in the future. You Members who have in your districts banks serving communities ranging from the hamlets of 500 to 1,000 people up to cities of one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand population in size, know that the banks in those communities are dependent, and that industry and business in those communities are dependent, upon the retaining of certain fairly good-sized deposits in the banks in those communities.

Now, if anything happens to cause alarm in any section of the country, and there is a rumor that one of your banks is shaky, and the depositors are insured only from $2,500 to $5,000, what will happen to your larger deposits in those banks? Why, they will all be withdrawn down to the limit of the maximum insured deposit. We shall have a repetition some years to come from now of what happened in the years from 1929 to 1933. It is for this reason, among others, that we should maintain this act as it now is against assaults upon it from those who would concentrate banking and banking facilities in the larger financial centers.

The other part of this bill, which is almost if not quite as important as our resistance to the assaults made upon the insurance of bank deposits, is that relating to the relief of depositors in closed banks. I appreciate that this part of the bill will be regarded by a great part of the Membership who are actuated by their sympathy for the sufferings caused by the loss of the life savings of those who had their deposits in failed banks, as falling short of giving the relief which we should all like to give to those who were stricken through the loss of that which they had believed to be safe.

I cannot have any criticism of the Members of this House who wanted to pass the original McLeod pay-off bill. I was opposed and am opposed, however, to the principle embodied in that bill or the principle embodied in any bill which seeks to pay 100 cents on the dollar to depositors, large or small, at the expense of the taxpayers, direct or indirect, large and small, and at the expense of either still further extending and perhaps dangerously straining the credit of the Federal Government, or creating the dangerous precedent of starting a pay-off of those who have lost money in financial transactions wherein the Federal Government might be thought to have some duty of supervision. I believe in preventative measures, rather than in panaceas or cure-alls. The insurance of bank deposits will, I believe, prevent the recurrence of the terrible losses which thousands of our depositors suffered. The original McLeod pay-off bill made no provision for depositors in nonmember State banks.

The justification urged for it was perhaps twofold: First, the supervision exercised by an agency of the Federal Government over the affairs of the national banks and the banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System; second—and this was the principal justification which I heard urged for it, and most eloquently, by a former most able and distinguished member of a former Democratic administration, Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer—that President Hoover had urged people to leave their money in the banks. I submit that President Hoover at the time that he urged this upon the people of the country—and I say this regardless of partisan politics—was giving the best advice that any man of finite, human knowledge could have given under the circumstances without full knowledge of the facts, and that he was honestly attempting to save the country from the terrible blow which did finally fall upon it.

But if this be urged as a justification for paying off 100 cents on the dollar to depositors in the national and member banks, it applies with equal force to the depositors in the failed nonmember banks.

It has been conservatively estimated that to carry out the provisions of the original McLeod bill it would have required a billion eight hundred millions of dollars, and that if the bill took care of the depositors in nonmember banks as well, it would have required, of course, a far greater sum. The bill was unsound in principle and unjust in application. I do not urge this to influence or inflame you, but it is said that had this bill been enacted into law, Henry Ford would have received from thirty-two to thirty-six million dollars, largely, if not entirely, at the expense of the people who have to pay the taxes, direct or indirect. Furthermore, as a practical matter, and in legislating, we must at times be practical, for all legislation is a result of compromise; it was sure that this bill would have met with Presidential veto, and the passage of this bill would therefore have been the merest political gesture—"as idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

This bill now before the House is a good bill in this respect that it is sound in principle, it attempts to give immediate relief to the depositors in all failed banks and to supplement or improve upon the method that has heretofore been employed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by empowering the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to purchase or loan upon the remaining assets of all closed banks and in appraising such assets to take into consideration liquidation over a reasonably long period of time, and this in order to give every depositor the benefit of every possible doubt in his favor without taking the money out of the Treasury and handing it over to him at the expense of those who have to pay the taxes direct and indirect.

I appreciate that it does not meet the expectations of those who plead that the small, if not the large, depositors ought to be paid in full, but it is the best bill and the best method that we can pass at this session of the Congress, and if you gentlemen who believe in a greater measure of liberality at the expense of the Federal Treasury and the taxpayers still wish to do what you can as a practical matter for these depositors in failed banks—and do it now—you will vote for this bill.

I could not properly close my remarks without paying, as one of the members younger in point of service on the House Banking and Currency Committee, my small tribute of respect, admiration, and affection to the chairman of our committee, the older members of our committee, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY], and to all, I may say, of the members of the committee, many of whom have borne patiently with me; and, while comparisons may be futile, I wish particularly also to pay my meed of respect and more, because of his great ability, his great industry, his great fairness and freedom from partisanship, at least while engaged in the labors of the committee, the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

I should also call it to the attention of the House that the part this bill, which affords, in my belief, as I have indicated, the best possible relief that can be granted under the circumstances to the depositors in failed banks, is very considerably the result of the work of the very able gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty sympathy with the guaranty of deposits of banks. I have been advocating this since I came to Congress. Year after year I have introduced a bill to that effect and made a speech in favor of it. I am glad to see public sentiment change and was glad to support the bill last year when it was originally enacted.

The bill which I introduced provided that each bank which was a member of the Federal Reserve System should be required to take out blanket insurance with a reputable insurance company approved by the Secretary of the Interior to cover 25 percent of the deposits and for the benefit of all depositors. In my State each bank must insure State funds, county funds, school funds, Indian funds, and in fact all public moneys. I have never seen any reason why this same principle should not be applied to individual funds. I have, year after year, ever since I have been in Congress, introduced a bill requiring a blanket insurance to be taken out by each bank which was a member of the Federal Reserve System for the benefit of its general depositors.

The reason why the bill which I introduced only required insurance to the amount of 25 percent was that the report of the Comptroller showed that throughout the past several years insurance up to this amount would be adequate to cover losses of banks. I appreciate that, under these distressed times, such a bill as I introduced perhaps would not meet the situation because banks now would be unable to furnish the required bonds, but I want to take this occasion to invite the attention of the House to my advocacy of bank-deposit insurance and to repeat here that, in my judgment, the only safe method of insuring bank deposits is to require every bank to take out blanket insurance in such an amount as may be thought adequate to protect all depositors.

I have insisted that this was the best for the banks, because it would have the effect of bringing out of hiding millions of dollars of money which is being hoarded. This has proven true since the enactment of the original measure. The deposits of banks have greatly increased, and out of the increased deposits the banks have been able to earn more money from the deposits.

For this reason I am glad to give support to any measure which looks to the guaranty of bank deposits as being in the interest of the public and in the interest of the shareholders of banks as well.

I have frequently stated that I never saw any difference in principle in banks being required to guarantee deposits of public funds including Federal funds and those intrusted to their care by the general public.

In my State of Oklahoma every bank, I do not care how strong it is, is required to secure deposits of Federal funds, Indian funds, county funds and city funds, and, in fact, all public funds. These banks have the confidence of the public, but in order to protect these funds the law requires that a special guaranty be given. Now, the same principle should apply to deposits of the farmer, the laboring man, the small-business man, the washerwoman, and, in fact, every class of depositors, regardless of their station in life. The law should protect all alike.

This bill only extends the provisions of existing law which creates a fund thought to be adequate to protect all deposits up to $5,000. The original act restored confidence. I knew it would. Is it not wonderful that since the original act was enacted and went into effect on January 1, 1934, not a single member bank whose deposits are guaranteed under the provisions of the act has failed? This shows, as I have previously argued, that it protects not only the public, including depositors of all classes, but the shareholders of the banks as well.

I have tried to emphasize this point to those who own bank stock. Many thousands of dollars would have been saved to the owners of bank stock if this requirement had been enacted into law years ago. Of course, it requires the banks to pay a small premium assessed against them, to be added to the guaranty fund, and this is limited to 1 percent of the insurable deposits, but this insurance inspires confidence in the banks in the minds of the people, prevents runs on banks, and therefore makes banks less likely to fail, and is, therefore, of great benefit to the shareholders of the banks as well as the depositors and the country generally. The shareholders are more than compensated for the small assessment which must be paid by the additional amount of deposits made through restoration of confidence in the banks.

This bill also restores the old law with reference to the amount of stock a director may have, and instead of requiring stock to the amount of $2,500, one may continue as a director if he owns as much as $1,000 of the stock unencumbered.

I am not so sure of my ground with reference to section 4 of the bill. I have tried to have this section explained, but the discussion has turned to other parts of the bill. Unfortunately, section 4 of this bill has not been sufficiently analyzed, either in the statement made by the chairman of the committee or in the report, nor am I satisfied with the attempt to analyze it while it was under discussion in the House. It was rushed through at the close of a long day.

My judgment is that the assets upon which loans may be extended under section 4 of the bill are of but little value, and my judgment warns me that losses will be sustained upon them by reason of the enactment of this provision. Separate and apart from the bill, I would not vote for this section. No good reason has been assigned, either in the debate in the House, or in the report, or in the press, why the Government is under any obligation, legal or moral, to come to the relief of the failed banks and extend credit on assets of doubtful value as far back at December 31, 1929, and prior to January 1, 1934.

This bill authorizes the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to spend its funds in purchasing the assets of failed banks between these dates. No business man would do it. No solvent bank will, and no solvent bank or mortgage company has done so. Just why this section is incorporated in this bill and rushed through the House without debate or explanation is not clear to me. I think everyone must realize that these assets are of but little value. The hope unquestionably is entertained that something near par value will be given for these assets, or rather loaned upon them. I regard this as dangerous legislation and cannot justify a vote for this section standing alone. The Government is not under any obligation, legal or moral, either to purchase or make a loan upon these assets. By this bill we are instructing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation either to make loans upon or purchase these assets, which no solvent bank or mortgage company will purchase or make loans upon.

I want to say to the House and to the country that this section is against my judgment. I am not deceived about it. There has been too much propaganda in an effort to have these frozen assets of doubtful value purchased by the Government. Why does not someone on the floor of the House, or through the press, or otherwise, give some reason why the Government is under any legal or moral obligation to make loans upon or purchase these assets prior to the time when the original Deposit Guaranty Act went into effect on January 1, 1934?

I have listened intently to the many statements made and have read much propaganda in the newspapers, but no sufficient reason, in my judgment, has been given why these assets should be loaned upon or purchased by the Government.

Now, anyone who has ever had any experience in banking knows that notes extending back as far as December 31, 1929, and past due almost 5 years ago, and upon which collection cannot be made, are of but little value. Every Member of Congress and every Member who supports this bill knows that he would not invest his own private money in these notes. This may be strong language. I agree that I do not have all the facts; but I do know that uncollected notes that are outstanding, made as far back as December 31, 1929, and when efforts have been made to collect them and this cannot be done—I would not invest a dollar in them myself.

If the notes were good, and if all that was necessary was the extension of credit in order that they might be realized upon, I readily agree that the Government should do that, but I feel certain that the purpose of the enactment of this bill is either to secure loans of greater value than the assets are worth, or to have them purchased at a value far beyond their worth.

I take this occasion to warn those charged with the administration of this act that when grief does come, as I believe it will, and when this Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation suffers loss because of investments in these assets, it cannot be said that all those charged with the responsibility of examining the provisions of this bill at the time of its enactment, were asleep at the switch. This is the most indefensible provision, in my judgment, ever enacted by Congress. I hope the conferees will reject it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of expediting and making possible the passage of this bill today, I have refrained from speaking on the measure, and in order to insure final consideration today I have asked others to do likewise. But I feel it my duty to make clear my position on the bill in view of having been criticized by certain Chicago newspapers for not signing the McLeod petition. About 10 days ago I issued a statement setting forth why I could not sign that petition or any other of the 30 petitions now on the Speaker's desk.

As nearly all Members are aware, there was a strong demand for the repealing of the discharge rule, but feeling that the discharge rule may become helpful in obtaining action on future legislation, I was instrumental in counteracting the demand for its repeal. At that time, all those who felt as I did agreed that if the rule would not be repealed they would not sign the petitions, filed, as I suspected, on the part of many Republicans for the purpose of creating publicity for campaign purposes and of disarranging the legislative program of the House. Unfortunately, many of those Members forgot and did lend themselves to be used in signing many of the petitions on the Speaker's desk. In the statement which I issued I set forth clearly that the McLeod bill only applied to the Federal Reserve member banks; that I was interested in relieving all depositors in all banks, and that the Committee on Banking and Currency had been deliberating on a bill to bring about that relief when Mr. McLEOD introduced his bill on February 12. He was accorded a hearing on the 27th of February, and on March 5 he introduced another bill, and on this second bill he was accorded a hearing on March 27. On April 12 he filed his petition to discharge the committee, notwithstanding that he had had two hearings and that the committee had been considering legislation to relieve the unfortunate depositors long before he introduced his bill.

In my statement I also pointed out that within a few days a more comprehensive and a better bill would be reported by the committee with good chances for passage. Notwithstanding this, the attack upon me on the part of the two Chicago papers continued. Following these attacks I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams, but nearly all of them came from outside of my district, and this is attributable to the fact that the people of my district are fully aware that I have at all times been helpful to those in need of relief. Consequently I was, indeed, gratified that I gave no misinformation in the statement I issued, as today the House passed the committee bill, known as the "Steagall bill", which will make available $1,250,000,000 for the purpose of repaying depositors not only in the Federal Reserve member banks but also depositors in all banks, both National and State. I stated that I was opposed to the paying to depositors in private banks, and I am glad that that provision was eliminated from the bill. As the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is already in existence, with the Honorable Leo T. Crowley as its head, which Corporation has already rendered great service to the banks and to the Nation, I am satisfied that the provisions of this bill will be judiciously carried out and the unfortunate depositors will shortly receive their deposits which were lost to them through the closing of their banks due to the destruction that was brought about by the big financiers and manipulators in 1929, aided and condoned as they were in their nefarious practices by the Republican administration. Under this bill the assets of these banks will be taken over by the Corporation and as soon as the assets can be checked the Corporation will advance money to the banks for payments to the depositors. The provisions of the bill are such that the usual long delay in payments will be unnecessary, and I hope the Senate will approve of these provisions, as the Government is safeguarded and protected, and that the President will sign the bill. This would not have been possible with the McLeod bill.

So once more my judgment and my act have been completely vindicated and my position sustained. At the end of my remarks I will embody the statement which I issued, and even my enemies will be obliged to admit that I knew whereof I was speaking then, and they will once more be disappointed in not being able to mislead the people.

At the beginning of the debate on this measure my Republican colleague from Maine tried to show that this legislation was recommended by President Hoover and should have been passed before, and further pointed out that if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from its inception had had sufficient capital that the benefits of this bill could have been attained and that the money of the banks and the funds of the depositors could have been saved, and by other innuendo the gentleman attempted to criticize or find fault with the present administration. But this demonstration on the part of the gentleman, as has been stated, was only for the RECORD and not from his heart, as he knows that this administration has already saved one half of our banks and adopted a tremendous amount of relief legislation. I requested the gentleman to yield to me while he was making his political speech, but he declined. It was my purpose to call his attention to the fact that in 1931 I introduced a bill which provided for the appropriation of $1,000,000,000 for capitalization and $5,000,000,000 for a bond issue, making a total of $6,000,000,000 available to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid not only the banks, insurance companies, railroad companies, but also the industries of our country, the home owners, and municipalities. Had my measure been adopted instead of the bill of Representative STRONG, there would have been no need for this legislation, and we could have saved the great losses and suffering that occurred since that time.

The gentleman from Maine should remember, as he was present when I advocated before his committee the passage of my bill, that it was Assistant Secretary Mills, under Mellon, of the Hoover administration, who was opposed to the appropriation of such a large amount and who testified that five hundred million, with triple that amount in a bond issue, would more than suffice. May I also call his attention to the fact that if the Republican members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had been as fair to the small banks as they were to the Dawes and other large banks, at least half of the banks of the country, as well as the 42 banks in Chicago that were obliged to close in 1932, could have been saved? The trouble with him, as well as his colleague from New York [Mr. FISH], is that they are trying to make the country believe that all the wisdom is possessed by the capitalistic group or by those who possess great wealth. If that be true, it has always been used for their own advantage and against the interests of the people. I know that we have thousands upon thousands of highly intellectual, honest, and sincere men who possess just as much knowledge and ability as do these financiers that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the Republican leaders continually demand should be followed, notwithstanding that they are the men who brought about the crash and panic of 1929 and the destruction which followed throughout our whole Nation. But I shall not dwell any longer upon these Republican misdeeds, as I feel that the country is fully aware and that these attacks on the Roosevelt administration on the part of these Republican special-interest representatives will not again warp the minds of the American people. The people of America are satisfied, and will appreciate and continue to trust President Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose undenied and courageous determination in behalf of the Nation and especially the masses will be crowned with success and happiness, and content will shortly prevail in the length and breadth of our Nation.

The statement previously referred to follows:

CONGRESSMAN SABATH'S REPLY TO HIS CRITICS AND THE REPUBLICAN SIGNERS OF THE M'LEOD PETITION

When President Roosevelt was inaugurated on March 4, 1933, every national as well as State bank in the United States was closed—95 percent of them were insolvent. Most of them have been reopened with the aid of the Government and the law guaranteeing deposits up to $2,500 enacted. President Roosevelt, some time ago recommended special legislation to help depositors of closed banks, which bill is now pending and will be enacted. And whilst legislation to that end was being worked out, Congressman MCLEOD, of Michigan, introduced a bill to pay the depositors of the Federal Reserve System banks. This mainly to take care of the Detroit banks and especially Mr. Henry Ford to the extent of about $32,000,000, but not a cent to the depositors in the State banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System.

On April 12, however, the Committee on Banking and Currency reported a bill which would include all the banks; but, unfortunately, also provided for paying of depositors of all private banks, which is very dangerous, because nobody is in a position to tell how many hundred millions of dollars this would take.

Mr. MCLEOD, who is one of the Hoover Republicans, in a hopeless and discredited minority, and not in harmony with the progressive and beneficial policies of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress, has never made an attempt to obtain a special rule for the amended bill; but another Detroit gentleman filed a discharge petition, and, due to the Republican ballyhoo, 137 Members—Republicans and a few misguided Democrats, who deliberately are trying to confuse President Roosevelt's plans and secure for themselves some publicity—signed it.

In addition to this petition, there are 30 other petitions on the Speaker's desk asking the discharge of many of the committees from considering bills before them. If all would secure the number of signatures necessary, it would be impossible to pass these bills even if Congress remained in session the whole summer and sidetracked all legislation recommended and urged by the President. We, who are wholeheartedly with President Roosevelt, fully understand that these petitions have nearly all been filed with deliberate intent and most of them solely for the purpose of interfering, preventing, or delaying the President's carefully worked-out program.

Furthermore, it would be wasting the time of the House with bills that have no chance of passing the Senate or of obtaining the approval of the President, and this fact is known to Mr. McLEOD and those who are demanding the signing of this petition.

During this session we have already appropriated $3,700,000,000 for the Army, Navy, pensions, and to run the Government. The Government is loaning to home owners, to the banks, to States and municipalities, to the farmers millions each and every day. We must appropriate $1,332,000,000 more for public works to create employment, and, in addition to this, within a few days we shall pass the bill appropriating approximately $500,000,000 to loan to the industries of America and another $500,000,000 to aid in repairing and rebuilding the homes of American citizens. This will require approximately $8,000,000,000, and though we will shortly pass the silver remonetization bill, which will give us approximately $2,000,000,000 more in currency, we are face to face with the problem of how to obtain the additional billions required. How to get this fabulous sum is not an easy task. Yes; it is impossible without impairing the credit of the Nation.

Day in and day out the unfriendly press and the Republican Members are charging that we are appropriating and expending greater sums than we can possibly repay. And notwithstanding that they are advocating the signing of these petitions which would force legislation through calling for about $4,000,000,000 more. In addition to all this, the farmers' bloc demands that we should take up mortgages on their farms and loan them the money on a 1½-percent basis, and the million and a half real-estate gold-bond holders are urging that something be done for them. The House already has passed the bonus bill which may cost over $2,000,000,000.

Personally, I should be extremely happy if we could—and I believe we will—repay nearly all depositors and bondholders, loan about $3,000,000,000 to the farmers at 1½ percent, pay the bonuses, provide old-age pensions and unemployment insurance, return to the people the homes, buildings, and farms they have lost, increase pension and compensations to World War veterans, repay all losses the widows and orphans lost on stocks and bonds, and even bring back to life the thousands who committed suicide, which the Hoover Republican Party, under the criminal leadership of Wall Street, is responsible for. But it is impossible to do all of this during this session.

Yes; President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress are doing everything humanly possible to relieve conditions and reestablish confidence. Though we have provided employment for at least 6,000,000 people up to now, who for 3 years have been out of work, we still have approximately nine to ten million wage earners for whom employment must be provided and who up to that time must be fed. Please contrast this with the do-nothing policy of President Hoover and his administration and refusal to provide even food for the starving hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children.

It has taken the Republicans and financial leaders 12 years to bring about the greatest catastrophe and destruction any nation has ever suffered. They have been responsible for the closing and bankrupting these banks and the robbing of millions of depositors. And notwithstanding that President Roosevelt and Congress are doing everything possible to help to reconstruct and rebuild the Nation, improve conditions and reestablish confidence, President Roosevelt and Congress are being thwarted in every conceivable manner in these efforts by the disloyal Republicans, misguided Democrats, and the vested interests.

I regret that it has been impossible to accomplish all we would like in the short space of 14 months, especially when the very special interests who brought about this destruction are in every way trying to prevent it. The blackest Republicans cannot charge that President Roosevelt is not honest and has not the interests of the people at heart and that he is not trying his very utmost to do all in his power to help the country and the masses. Therefore I have supported his program and his policies and I am standing by him. As between the Wall Street manipulators and the selfish Republicans, I shall continue to support President Roosevelt to the limit, regardless of what dishonest and insincere enemies will say or do, and it is for the above reasons that I have not signed the 31 petitions. Most of them have not been filed in good faith. They were filed to becloud the real, honest achievements of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress.

In conclusion let me state that the President and the Democratic leaders have agreed on a bill to help the depositors of all banks, but it will be done in the regular way and at the same time protect the interests of the Government.

CONGRESSMAN A. J. SABATH,
Fifth District, Illinois.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am actively supporting and voting in favor of this meritorious measure to extend for 1 year and to increase from $2,500 to $5,000 the deposit-insurance provision of the Banking Act of 1933 and authorizing loans upon or purchase of assets of closed banks, which is the fortieth major progressive act for which I have voted during the special and regular sessions of the Seventy-third Congress, to wit:

40 AFFIRMATIVE VOTES

Emergency Banking Act; Farm Relief Act; Loans to State Banks Act; Guarantee Bank Deposits Act of 1933; Unemployment Relief Act; Emergency Farm Mortgage Act; Crop Loans Act; Muscle Shoals Act; Transfer Tax on Electric Energy from Consumer to Utility Company Act; St. Lawrence River Project Resolution; Wagner-Lewis Relief Act; Agricultural Relief Act, with expansion of currency amendment; Securities Act; National Industrial Recovery Act; Public Works Act; Farm Credit Act; National Employment Service Act; Farm Mortgage Corporation Act; Gold Devaluation Act; Agricultural Adjustment Act; amendment for Cattle Relief Act; Crop Loan Act amendment; revenue act, stopping leaks and income-tax evasions; soldiers' bonus bill; Reciprocal Tariff Act; Foreign Debt Act, prohibiting defaulting nations from selling securities; Home Owners' Loan Corporation Principal Guarantee Act; immigration act amendment to exclude alien seamen—Chinese, Asiatics, and Mexicans; Restoration Substitute Mail Carriers' Pay Act; Adjustment of Rural Carriers' Pay Act; Removal of Postal Furlough Act; Vocational Education Act; Women's Equal Rights Nationality Act, permitting citizenship rights to children through the mothers as well as the fathers and removing all sex discrimination; Dies Silver Act; Couzen's 10-percent increase on income-tax levy on big incomes; Stock Exchange Act; Civil Works Act; Public Roads Appropriations Act, with amendment for 25 percent for feeder, rural-mail, school-bus roads, and providing funds for Indian reservations, national forests, and funds for repair and recondition of Federal highways and bridges damaged by floods; Loans to Small Industries Act, including oyster industry and loans to school districts to pay teachers' salary warrants; and Bank Deposit Guaranty Act of 1934 and loans and aid to closed banks to pay off depositors; Silver Purchasing Act of 1934; National Housing Act; Retirement (Pension) System of Railroad Employees Act; Act to Amend the Railway Labor Act.

NEGATIVE VOTES

I voted against the Economy Act, and also voted to override the veto of the independent offices bill, in conformity with my preelection pledges made to the veterans of our wars during the campaigns of 1932.

MOTIONS TO DISCHARGE COMMITTEES

I have also signed the following motions or petitions on the Speaker's desk to discharge committees and bring the bills before the House for consideration, to wit: Frazier-Lemke farm bill, soldiers' bonus bill, Crosser 6-hour-day railroad bill, bank deposit pay-off bill, Wagner-Connery 30-hour week bill, and a Connery-Black 30-hour week bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. Speaker, this is a voting record of which I feel justly proud, for I have the personal satisfaction of knowing that I have voted in favor of a greater number of truly progressive and liberal measures than have ever come before Congress during any previous session in the 150 years of American history, "that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I greatly regret that the necessity for haste in getting this legislation to a vote prevents many on the Banking and Currency Committee from expressing our views in the debate on the floor of the House and forces us to extend our remarks in the RECORD under the permission granted.

The features of the bill which I will discuss are: First, briefly, the extension and increase of the temporary guaranty; second, the assistance to closed banks.

Many of us on the Banking and Currency Committee were opposed to any postponement of the full operation of the guaranty law, but the very convincing arguments of Chairman Crowley, Judge Birdsell, and Director Bennett, of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and Comptroller O'Connor of the Treasury, persuaded us that another year should be given for the purpose of putting the banks of the country in better condition. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other Government agencies are busily engaged in solidifying our banking structure, and I shall content myself, without detailing the reasons, by saying that a large majority of the committee reached the conclusion that additional time should be given for this work, and that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation should not undertake a great increase in its obligations until better conditions prevailed.

It must not be taken from the above that I have any doubt as to the stability of the banks of the country at the present time. They are in vastly better condition than they were before the temporary guaranty went into effect, but it is certainly logical to take advantage of the present opportunity to perfect as far as possible the structure.

On the question of the amount of the temporary guaranty, the committee refused to be content with the present $2,500 figure. It was felt that notwithstanding the fact that over 90 percent of the depositors were cared for in full, that a figure of $5,000 would not greatly increase the obligations of the Corporation, and would at the same time indicate to the country that the House committee was determined that there would be no indication of any change in its position that bank-deposit insurance in the United States was permanent. The committee has been assured on high authority that it is the policy of this administration not only to continue but to extend bank-deposit insurance, and I am very happy to be able to give this assurance to the House of Representatives.

Section 4 of the bill deals with assistance to banks which were closed prior to January 1, 1934 (the effective date of the temporary insurance act) and after December 31, 1930. It provides briefly that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation may loan to the receivers, liquidating agents, or other proper officers having charge of closed banks or of frozen assets of reopened banks on an appraisal "in anticipation of an orderly liquidation over a period of years", rather than on the basis of forced selling values in a period of business depression. This is the heart of the section. If liberally administered, this should release something over a billion dollars to depositors holding claims against closed or reopened banks. I have an estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I now set forth:

Schedule indicating net deposits, deposits paid off and unpaid deposits, together with Reconstruction Finance Corporation advances, recoveries and losses in connection with deposit pay-off bill involving all banks closed since Jan. 1, 1930, and still in liquidation. Outline herewith gives effect to plan for payment in full of all accounts of $2,500 and less and payment up to $2,500, for all accounts above $2,500, including in each case credit for dividends already paid

On the basis of the bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee as a substitute for the McLeod bill, which bill as reported provided for payment in full of depositors' accounts up to $2,500, the Treasury estimates that the required advance would total $1,807,000,000. It estimates—and I think I should point out that the Treasury is conservative—that recoveries would amount to $724,000,000, or almost exactly 40 percent. It will be seen that the unpaid deposits in closed banks total $3,198,000,000. Forty percent of this figure is approximately $1,279,000,000. Therefore it would seem that, according to the conservative estimate of the Treasury Department, sound values with a total expected recovery of considerably over a billion dollars is in the hands of the liquidating agents of these banks. We insist this sum should be released.

Under the provisions of the bill we are discussing, there should be approximately $700,000,000 available now and a total of approximately twice that much when the permanent insurance law goes into effect. This is figured as follows: The present capital of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation consists of $150,000,000 subscribed by the Treasury and approximately $140,000,000 obtained from the Federal Reserve banks. Approximately $39,000,000 has been paid in by the insured banks. Two and a half times this sum is available for the aid of depositors in closed banks. When the permanent insurance law goes into effect, the capital of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will probably approximate $500,000,000 and two and a half times this sum, or $1,250,000,000, would be the approximate limit to which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation could go to aid depositors in closed banks. It will be noted that the estimated recoveries from assets now held in closed banks and the maximum allowed the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under this bill for assistance to closed banks are approximately the same in amount.

Before proceeding to the question of the responsibilities of the Government in this connection, I desire to point out that your Committee on Banking and Currency has most carefully safeguarded the insurance reserves of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and has explicitly prohibited the use of any of the funds raised for insurance purposes in bailing out assets in closed banks. The members of the committee expressed this in no uncertain language in lines 1 to 11 on page 11 of the bill as reported to the House. We felt that both the country and the bankers should know that there was no intention to weaken the Corporation nor impair the integrity of its insurance obligations by using it as a vehicle for assisting depositors in closed banks. This matter was not stressed in the debate on the floor of the House, but I think there is no provision in the bill which should be of greater interest to depositors and bankers.

The bill provides for an addition to the borrowing power of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Substantially, the increase in borrowing power is made for the purpose of aiding in the liquidation of closed banks. The former borrowing power was three times the capital. The pending bill expands the borrowing power to five times the capital, but provides that no more than one half of the obligations authorized by law shall be used for assisting closed banks. It is further specifically provided that no portion of the capital of the corporation, either as now organized, or as will be organized when the permanent set-up is established, shall be used for the purchase of or loans on assets in banks to be assisted by these provisions. As a further safeguard, the obligations issued are to be paid solely from funds received from the repayment of loans made or disposition of assets acquired from closed banks. As far as the financial operations of the Insurance Corporation, relative to assisting banks closed prior to January 1 of this year, are affected, they are as separate and distinct from the insurance provisions protecting present depositors as if we had created a separate and distinct liquidation corporation. It was thought unnecessary to create a new agency because the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is ideally fitted for the work. However, the bill prevents any commingling of the funds raised for insurance purposes and the funds raised for liquidation purposes.

On the question of the obligation or duty of the Government to grant assistance to depositors in closed banks of all character, there is much difference of opinion, both in the House and in the committee. There are, in round numbers, 10,000,000 depositors affected. To ask 120,000,000 people to tax themselves for the benefit of 10,000,000 seems somewhat unfair, but I am ready to grant that there are many strong arguments that may be made in favor of such a proposition. However, let me hasten to say that this bill does not contemplate any loss to the taxpayers of the United States. The foundation of the bill is solid. There is no gift to anyone. There is merely liberal assistance, possibly somewhat beyond, as I think it should be, the usual conservatism of bankers in loaning money, but nevertheless the bill is based on the principle that the Government shall receive value for its advances.

I desire briefly to mention the two principal arguments that have been made for government responsibility. First, it is contended that the supervision of banks by either the Federal Reserve Board or the Comptroller's Office in itself was a representation to depositors that the Government was in charge of the banks and stood back of them. I do not believe that any successful legal argument can be made to support this proposition, but I do think there is some moral obligation involved, as I will later point out. It is next contended that the expressions of President Hoover and his Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, commonly known as the "antihoarding speeches", raised a further obligation Again there can be no legal basis for such an obligation, but I think the man is blind indeed who can see no semblance of moral responsibility, to a degree, at least, in this contention. It has been held by the supreme court of my State that a director, knowing a bank statement to be inaccurate, or carelessly permitting his name to be attached to a statement without investigation by him as to its accuracy, may be held liable for the damage suffered by persons who lose as a result of his fraud or negligence. In the case I have in mind, it was held that persons who bought the stock of the bank in reliance upon the published statement could hold the negligent director financially responsible for the losses. I think this decision is sound and in conformity with generally accepted legal doctrines. How does this principle apply to the question as to the Government's moral responsibility?

The Government of the United States had a most difficult task in the years preceding March 6, 1933. The steady decline in the value of securities was not only a problem to bankers but it was a distressing problem to the Comptroller's Office. Great pressure was brought to bear on the Comptroller's Office to induce it to establish a rule of valuation which would disregard what then seemed to be very low market appraisals of bonds and other securities. It was contended, and the contention was not without merit, that many corporate obligations had a real or intrinsic value greatly in excess of the market's appraisal of such obligations, and it was contended that the ruthless writing down of such values to market upon the books of the banks of the country would result in numerous insolvencies, widespread withdrawals of funds, and consequent collapse of many thousands of banks throughout the country. It is a well-known fact that this contention met with some response in the Treasury Department, and out of it grew what is commonly known as the "intrinsic value rule." That such a rule exists will not be admitted as a general thing in the Comptroller's Office, but that such rule exists and has existed for some years is an absolute fact. I am happy to say that it is a passing rule, in my judgment.

For fear I may be accused of being unduly critical of the conduct of the Comptroller's Office when this rule went into effect, let me be frank and say that if I had been in that office, I would have approved the rule. This does not, however, overcome the fact that the intrinsic-value rule caused the depositors of the United States great injury. Substantially, the rule worked in this way. Bonds of the higher grade, known in one agency with which I am familiar, as "Baa" or better, were permitted to be valued at what was considered to be the intrinsic value of the bonds without strict regard to their selling value on the markets. Such a rule was based upon the theory that prosperity was "just around the corner", and I think that the great man who coined the phrase and presided over the destinies of our country during that time expressed the thought of the great majority of his fellow countrymen when he made the statement; but prosperity was a long way from the corner, and the rule worked incalculable harm. Instead of the expected and hoped-for return of such bonds to normal, their ratings steadily declined and many thousands of issues went below the Baa rating. Many of such bonds were later disposed of far below their so-called "intrinsic value" as carried on the books of the banks. The effect of the rule was to keep banks open long after they were actually insolvent.

The result was twofold. First, by enabling banks to remain open after they were insolvent, the rule prevented the sale of securities at higher values, with consequent loss to the depositors. Second, by enabling banks to remain open after they were insolvent, it brought literally millions of dollars into the banks, subsequently lost, which would not otherwise have been deposited.

Let me again emphasize that in the light of the conditions as they then existed, the rule seemed sound and seemed necessary, but as a matter of cold fact, it permitted hundreds of institutions to remain open with the stamp of approval of the United States Government, when, as a matter of fact known to the Comptroller of the Treasury, they carried securities at values far above their actual selling price.

Referring back to the legal principle I have mentioned as having been established by the Supreme Court of my State, it follows that this Government permitted many institutions to be held out as having security values above the actual strict market value of those securities and is responsible. If an individual had so done he could be held legally responsible. Time has demonstrated that the policy was a mistake; that depositors suffered by it. Those depositors had in the main no knowledge of the rule, and assumed that bank assets were being valued at the market.

I think it cannot be denied that the effect of this policy imposes a moral obligation on the Government. How far the Government should go in the aid of such depositors is another question. To say that the facts set forth above are sufficient to constitute full moral responsibility for all deposits in closed banks is perhaps going too far. As between State and national banks, there may be some distinction, although the obligations undertaken by the Government to assist depositors is the burden of all citizens and all depositors, and not merely depositors in national banks. This bill will assist all depositors in all kinds of banks. There are no distinctions. It is unnecessary to determine for the purposes of this bill the question of whether or not a full moral responsibility rests on the Federal Government, but certainly it cannot be denied that there is some, in fact, considerable, moral responsibility on the Government of the United States to depositors in all closed banks. The bill before us recognizes that responsibility and requires an agency of the United States to exercise its endeavors by the use of a measure of value which is somewhat beyond the conservative-banker method of valuation, and go to the aid and assistance of that fine group of citizens who have trusted their funds to the banks of the Nation. We may not be doing enough, but we are certainly not doing too much.

I will close with the statement that from my intimate personal connection as a member of the subcommittee, consisting of our very able chairman, Mr. STEAGALL, and myself, who worked on this bill, I am satisfied that Chairman Crowley, of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and General Counsel Birdsell, of the same Corporation, who greatly aided us in the drafting of this bill, will, if given the authority provided in this bill, liberally administer it in accordance with the intention of the Congress.

Mr. MULDOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the McLeod bill, known as the "bank depositors' 100-percent pay-off bill", H.R. 8479, has been conceived in a most praiseworthy cause; it strikes at the root of the trouble; it is the proper remedy, the "elixir of life" that will restore confidence throughout the land. The trouble started at the banks, and it is at this source—the fountainhead—that we must apply the remedy if we are to hope for a speedy recovery.

I cannot too strongly urge the imperative need for speedy action on legislation to release the vast amount of potential purchasing and employing power now tied up in the assets of closed banks. The present session of Congress is rapidly drawing to a close. Millions of patriotic and industrious citizens are depending for urgently needed relief upon the use we make of the brief time remaining before adjournment. In this crucial period of the session, neglect to provide this essential and reconstructive form of relief can immeasurably prolong distress and retard recovery.

Congress has within its grasp today an opportunity, by passing the McLeod pay-off bill, to distribute over a billion dollars among more than 10,000,000 prospective purchasers and employers whose use of this money would provide a great recovery stimulus.

This is a form of direct relief which the United States Government is morally obligated to undertake. As a patriotic duty the Government urged citizens to cease hoarding and place their savings in the very institutions many of which are closed today.

I am thoroughly convinced that the most logical step toward recovery we could take at this time would be to restore purchasing and employing power throughout the entire Nation by releasing the savings of depositors which are now tied up in closed banks.

There is well over a billion dollars tied up in banking institutions scattered over the country. The immediate release and distribution of this money to workers who saved for old age or emergency and to factories which would employ more men at once would remove much of the existing pressure on the C.W.A. and other relief agencies. Relief would be extended to widows, orphans, and disabled, who could not benefit through ordinary employment relief measures.

Instead of keeping men on temporary Government pay rolls, it would facilitate and make possible the employment of vast numbers of jobless by private industry on a permanent basis. The depressed real-estate market would be assisted immeasurably toward a realization of proper values. Home owners, now desperately calling on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for relief, would be enabled to pay off the mortgages on their homes. The effect of a 100-percent pay-off to bank depositors would be both cumulative and progressive in character.

The country is rapidly realizing that one of the principal underlying causes of the business and industrial ailments afflicting our country at the present time lies in its money or the lack of its circulation. By striking at the fundamental causes, by re-creating the consuming power of the great army of unemployed through productive permanent employment, far more can be accomplished than by the costly and temporary expedient of some form of Government dole or grant.

While the necessity for making depositors' money available has been recognized by the Government, it has not gone far enough. Depositors' funds were quickly made available in banks allowed by the Government to reopen, but sufficient relief has not yet been provided for the equally meritorious depositors in banks not permitted to resume operations.

Fully 0.9 of the entire population of the United States depend upon wages and salaries for their means of livelihood. With this in mind, it is quite apparent that the rehabilitation of manufacturing plants and the employment of more men is dependent to a great degree upon the liberation of the potential consuming power represented by frozen deposits in closed banks.

Payment of these depositors at this time would constitute one of the most forward strides yet taken toward recovery. This form of vitally essential and reconstructive relief could be undertaken without cost to the Government or taxpayer in the final analysis. Within 10 years, as provided in the McLeod bill, or possibly even sooner, the Government, by purchasing the frozen assets of closed banks and liquidating them in rising markets, which are bound to come with recovery, could fully realize the sum advanced to depositors, thereby providing this great and incalculable stimulus to recovery without ultimate cost.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, the passage today of the deposit insurance bill, carrying the compromise provisions for bank depositors' relief, marks a signal achievement in our fight to release the frozen assets of closed banks.

This legislation has had a unique and most peculiar life since its birth last February 12, when I introduced my original bill to release frozen assets in closed banks and pay depositors the full balance due them on their deposits.

After failure of the Banking and Currency Committee to take action on the bank depositors' pay-off bill a petition was filed on April 9 to discharge the committee from further consideration and make possible a vote on April 23. This petition lacked only a few names of the necessary 145 when the committee, anxious to block consideration of the measure by the House, reported out a bill so as to nullify the petition and pigeonhole the bill.

In their haste the committee overlooked the fact that I had introduced two pay-off bills and reported out the wrong one. Later in the day the correct bill was reported, but this action of the committee was ruled illegal by the Speaker. As the petition had been completed in the meantime, the bank depositors' pay-off bill was scheduled to come up for a vote April 23.

During the prayer on April 23, and before the bank depositor's pay-off bill could be called up under the discharge rule, the Banking and Currency Committee again reported the bill, for the third time, by dropping the report in the receiving basket.

A resolution was introduced objecting to the reception of the committee report. A vote was then taken on a motion to table the resolution. The Speaker refused to answer my inquiry as to the significance of the vote and because of the general confusion on the floor at the time the impression prevailed that the vote was on a motion to override the decision of the Speaker instead of being on a simple motion to lay aside the resolution.

Such tactics as these, together with numerous adjournments of the House which hindered the obtaining of signatures on the new petition, have been responsible for many weeks of delay in bringing this legislation up for consideration by the House.

I am indeed happy that the fourth report on such legislation by the Banking and Currency Committee has led to our vote today on the compromise measure. While it does not afford as much relief as provided in my bill, it will, if properly administered, accomplish results of the greatest importance to recovery.

This compromise bill is designed to extend and broaden the power already given the F.D.I.C. to assist closed banks. Under provisions of the original Glass-Steagall bill, known as the "Banking Act of 1933", the F.D.I.C. was authorized to purchase or make loans on the assets of closed banks. The F.D.I.C. was not required by the law to exercise this power, however, and no use was ever made of it.

It was my hope that the House would accept my amendment this afternoon to make the provisions of the compromise bill mandatory, instead of leaving their administration to the discretion of the F.D.I.C. I believe, however, that the intent of Congress in this regard has been so clearly expressed, both here on the floor and in the language of the bill, that we may confidently look forward to a liberal administration of the provisions of this essential relief measure.

The compromise bill provides for loans and purchases to be made by the F.D.I.C., based on a liberal appraisal of assets, in anticipation of an orderly liquidation. Under provisions of the so-called "McLeod bank depositors' pay-off bill", the R.F.C. would purchase all remaining frozen assets of closed banks. Depositors would receive the full amounts due them at once. Those who owed banks money would be given 10 years in which to pay their debts at a reduced rate of interest. The R.F.C. would liquidate these frozen assets over a 10-year period, disposing of them when the rising markets, which are certain to come with recovery, made their sale possible at their true values. In this simple, yet effective way, a maximum amount of relief would be afforded without ultimate cost to the Government.

This would be but a logical and proper extension of the present functions of the R.F.C. The R.F.C. to date has purchased $1,100,000,000 in preferred stock or capital notes in 6,994 banks. In addition, the R.F.C. has authorized 5,137 loans to banks. A total of $1,113,478,667 has been disbursed, and all but $310,606,571 has been repaid. In other words, 72 percent of the money borrowed by banks from the R.F.C. has been repaid already, as contrasted with total repayments from all borrowers of only 45 percent.

The method of liquidating bank assets is left largely to the discretion of the F.D.I.C. under provisions of the compromise bill. The F.D.I.C. is told to extend the period of liquidation so as best to conserve the value of the assets and prevent their unreasonable sacrifice. This method of disposing of assets would continue the present expensive receivership method of liquidation, which would be abolished under the provisions of my bill.

As a reconstructive recovery measure alone this program should be carried out by the Government. However, the United States Government is under a heavy moral obligation to provide this relief for depositors. For years the taxpayers of the country have maintained a department of the Government whose duty it was to periodically examine and inspect banks of the national banking system. It has been definitely and irrefutably shown that the Government, through its examiners, falsified statements concerning the condition of banks.

Naturally, and properly, the depositors had every reason to believe that the statements furnished them concerning the condition of their banks were accurate. They had no way of knowing that Government-paid examiners had been instructed by the Government to not show depreciation of certain assets of these banks. They had every right to believe that banks under Government supervision were safe as long as the Government allowed them to remain open for receipt of deposits.

When heavy withdrawals followed the shaking of confidence in banks, the Government, through its regularly elected and appointed officials, urged the people, as a public duty, to cease hoarding. Millions heeded this plea. These deluded millions did not dream that their Government was urging them to place their money in banks which it knew were unsound and unsafe. Yet this is exactly what happened.

Although requiring an initial outlay by the Government to discharge its obligation to these depositors, in the final analysis this far-reaching reconstruction program would not cost the Government a single penny. If dumped on the market now, these frozen bank assets would not realize more than a small percentage of their true values. However, their worth has materially increased during the past year, and there is every reason to believe that this increase will continue as we progress toward recovery.

By our action today in passing this legislation, we have taken a long stride forward. It is now our duty to insist that the Senate accept this compromise amendment when the conferees meet for the purpose of making the bill mutually acceptable to the House and Senate. The completion of the petition to discharge the Rules Committee and thereby automatically bring the so-called "McLeod bill" before the House for action on June 11 should influence the conferees of the compromise bill to a hasty and satisfactory agreement and the desired concession of the relief provided for the bank depositors. The enactment into law of this relief measure will eliminate the acute situation that exists because the savings of more than 10,000,000 American purchasers and employers are being kept from circulation. It will accomplish more than any other one measure possibly could to bring about that rejuvenation of our national tranquillity toward which we are expectantly and confidently striving.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

Mr. McKEOWN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following conference report on the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 32, 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "whether filed before or after this section becomes effective, provided the present operations of such corporation do not exclude it hereunder, and whether or not the corporation has been adjudicated a bankrupt"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike the Senate amendment numbered 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or in any territorial jurisdiction in the State in which it was incorporated. The court shall upon petition transfer such proceedings to the territorial jurisdiction where the interests of all the parties will be best subserved"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In case an executory contract or unexpired lease of real estate shall be rejected pursuant to direction of the judge given in a proceeding instituted under this section, or shall have been rejected by a trustee or receiver in bankruptcy or receiver in equity in a proceeding under this section, any person injured by such rejection shall, for all purposes of this section and of the reorganization plan, its acceptance and confirmation, be deemed to be a creditor. The claim of a landlord for injury resulting from the rejection of an unexpired lease of real estate or for damages or indemnity under a covenant contained in such lease shall be treated as a claim ranking on a parity with debts which would be provable under section 63 (a) of this act, in an amount equal to the rent, without acceleration, reserved by said lease for the 3 years next succeeding the date of surrender of the premises to the landlord or the date of reentry of the landlord, whichever first occurs, whether before or after the filing of the petition, plus unpaid rent accrued up to such date of surrender or reentry: Provided, That the court shall scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the amount of the consideration paid for such assignment in determining the amount of damages allowed assignee hereunder"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 10, line 23, of the House engrossed copy of the bill, after the word "committee", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the judge shall scrutinize and may disregard any limitations or provisions of any depositary agreements, trust indentures, committee or other authorizations affecting any creditor acting under this section, and may enforce an accounting thereunder or restrain the exercise of any power, which he finds to be unfair or not consistent with public policy and may limit any claims filed by such committee member or agent, to the actual consideration paid therefor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11, of the Senate engrossed amendment numbered 26, after the word "any", strike out the word "such" and insert in lieu thereof the word "proposed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the Senate amendment strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That such personal representative shall first obtain the consent and authority of the court which has assumed jurisdiction of said estate, to invoke the relief provided by said act of March 3, 1933." The first sentence of subdivision (m) of said section 74 is amended to read as follows: "The filing of a debtor's petition or answer seeking relief under this section shall subject the debtor and his property, wherever located, to the exclusive jurisdiction of the court in which the order approving the petition or answer as provided in subdivision (a) is filed, and this shall include property of the debtor in the possession of a trustee under a trust deed or a mortgage, or a receiver, custodian, or other officer of any court in a pending cause, irrespective of the date of appointment of such receiver or other officer, or the date of the institution of such proceedings: Provided, That it shall not affect any proceeding in any court in which a final decree has been entered"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 28 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. In the administration of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, as amended, the district court or any judge thereof shall, in its or his discretion, so apportion appointments of receivers and trustees among persons, firms, or corporations, or attorneys therefor, within the district, eligible thereto, as to prevent any person, firm, or corporation from having a monopoly of such appointments within such district. No person shall be appointed as a receiver or trustee who is a near relative of the judge of the court making such appointment. The compensation allowed a receiver or trustee or an attorney for a receiver or trustee shall in no case be excessive or exorbitant, and the court in fixing such compensation shall have in mind the conservation and preservation of the estate of the bankrupt and the interests of the creditors therein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 30 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "but the claim of a landlord for injury resulting from the rejection by the trustee of an unexpired lease of real estate or for damages or indemnity under a covenant contained in such lease shall in no event be allowed in an amount exceeding the rent reserved by the lease, without acceleration, for the year next succeeding the date of the surrender of the premises plus an amount equal to the unpaid rent accrued up to said date: Provided, That the court shall scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the amount of the consideration paid for such assignment in determining the amount of damages allowed assignee hereunder: Provided, further, That the provisions of this clause (7) shall apply to estates pending at the time of the enactment of this amendatory act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 31 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. Proceedings under section 77 of chapter 8, amendment to the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as amended, approved March 3, 1933, shall not be grounds for the removal of any cause of action to the United States district court which was not removable before the passage and approval of this section, and any cause of action heretofore removed from a State court on account of this section shall be remanded to the court from which it was removed, and such order of removal vacated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment numbered 33 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That the second sentence of subdivision (b) of section 75 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services, including all expenses, a fee of $25 for each case docketed and submitted to him, to be paid out of the Treasury.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The following Senate amendments, to which the House agreed, are formal and merely improve the language of the bill: Amendments 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24.

On amendment 1: Amendment 1, as agreed upon by the conferees, makes it possible for a corporation in bankruptcy, either before or after this section becomes effective, to proceed to reorganize under this section.

On amendment 3: The House bill provided that proceedings under this section should be initiated before the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the corporation during the preceding 6 months had had its principal place of business or its principal assets. The Senate amendment provided that in case of controversy as to the principal place of business or the place where the principal assets are located, then the petition could be filed in the territorial jurisdiction in which the corporation was incorporated, provided that the court could transfer the proceedings to any jurisdiction where the corporation had a substantial portion of its assets if satisfied that the interests of all parties would be better subserved thereby.

The amendment, as agreed upon by the conferees, retains jurisdiction as provided in the House bill and also provides that the petition may be filed in any territorial jurisdiction in the State in which the corporation was incorporated. The court, however, is directed upon petition to transfer such proceedings to the territorial jurisdiction where the interests of all the parties will be best subserved.

On amendment 5: The Senate amendment, to which the House agreed, makes it unnecessary to show that the corporation has committed an act of bankruptcy within 4 months in case a prior proceeding in bankruptcy or an equity receivership is pending at the time proceedings under the reorganization section are initiated.

On amendment 13: Amendment 14, as agreed upon by the conferees, makes unnecessary the language which amendment 13 strikes out. The House therefore receded.

On amendment 14: Under the House bill, executory contracts, including claims for future rent, are made provable claims for the purposes of this section. The Senate amendment limited claims for future rent to an amount equal to the rent reserved by the lease for 1 year.

The amendment agreed to by conference makes any person injured by the rejection of an executory contract or unexpired lease of real estate a creditor for the purposes of this section. The claim of the landlord for injury resulting from loss of future rents is limited to an amount not to exceed the rent reserved by the lease for 3 years next succeeding the date of surrender of the premises or the date of reentry of the landlord, whichever first occurs, plus unpaid rent accrued up to such date of surrender or reentry of the landlord. The court is directed to scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the amount of the consideration paid for such assignment in determining the amount of damages to be allowed such assignee.

On amendment 15: The Senate amendment provides that for the purposes of this section a creditor may act by an attorney at law as well as in person, or by duly authorized agent or committee. The House, by the conference amendment, agreed to the Senate amendment providing that a creditor may act by an attorney at law, and also provided that the judge shall scrutinize and may disregard any limitations or provisions of depository agreements which may limit any claims filed by a committee member or agent to the actual consideration which such committee member paid therefor.

On amendment 16: This Senate amendment, to which the House agreed, tolls the running of the statutes of limitations during the pendency of proceedings under this section.

On amendment 25: The House bill provides that the judge may require the trustee or trustees, or if there be no trustee, the debtor, to make any transfer or conveyance necessary to effectuate the plan of reorganization after confirmation.

The Senate amendment, to which the House agreed, includes as parties whom the court may require to make such transfers or conveyances, any mortgagee, the trustee of any obligation of the debtor, and all other proper and necessary parties.

On amendment 26: Senate amendment 26 excepts from the operation of all the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, except the civil and criminal liability provisions thereof, for fraud or misrepresentation, all securities issued pursuant to any plan of reorganization confirmed by the court and all certificates of deposit representing securities of all claims against the debtor which it is proposed to deal with under the proposed plan.

The House adopted the Senate amendment with a minor alteration of language.

On amendment 27: The Senate amendment amends the section of the Bankruptcy Act dealing with individual debtors which was added to the act by the amendment of March 3, 1933. It provides that such section shall include the personal representative of a deceased individual for the purpose of effecting a settlement or composition with the creditors of the estate.

The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with the addition of the proviso that such personal representative shall first obtain the consent and authority of the court which has assumed the jurisdiction of said estate. Also the provision is added that the filing of a debtor's petition or answer seeking relief under section 74 shall subject the debtor and his property wherever located to the jurisdiction of the court and that this shall include property in possession of a trustee or receiver irrespective of the date of appointment of such receiver or other officer, provided that this amendment shall not affect any proceeding in any court in which a final decree has been entered.

On amendment 28: This amendment has to do with the prevention of monopolies of receiverships, trusteeships, and appointments as attorney for receiver in any district.

The amendment agreed to by the conferees provides that "the district court or any judge thereof shall in its or his discretion so apportion appointments of receivers and trustees among persons, firms, or corporations, or attorneys therefor, within the district eligible thereto as to prevent any person, firm, or corporation from having a monopoly of such appointments within such district." The appointment of a person as a receiver or trustee who is a near relative of the judge making the appointment is prohibited.

The further provision is made that the compensation allowed the receiver or trustee or his attorney shall in no case be excessive or exorbitant, and the court is directed in fixing such compensation to have in mind the conservation and the preservation of the estate of the bankrupt and the interests of the creditors therein.

On amendment 29: Senate amendment 29 makes judgments for negligence provable claims in bankruptcy. The House agreed to the amendment.

On amendment 30: This amendment has to do with claims for future rent under the general Bankruptcy Act. As agreed upon by the conferees, such claims are permitted to be provable claims, provided that in no event shall a claim for damages be allowed in an amount exceeding the rent reserved by the lease for 1 year after surrender of the premises, plus the unpaid rent accrued to said date. The courts are directed to scrutinize the circumstances of an assignment of future rent claims and the consideration paid therefor in determining the amount of damages to be allowed an assignee. The provisions of this clause are made to apply to estates pending at the time of the enactment of this amendatory act.

On amendment 31: This amendment clarifies the intent of Congress that no cause of action not removable to the Federal court before the enactment of the railroad section of the Bankruptcy Act shall be removable by reason of the enactment of such section.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with the addition of a further provision requiring the remanding to the courts from which removed all such suits heretofore removed to Federal court.

On amendment 32: Amendment 32 makes mandatory the appointment by the courts of bankruptcy within 30 days after the enactment of this act of a conciliation commissioner in every county having an agricultural population of 500 or more farmers for the administration of the agricultural composition section of the Bankruptcy Act enacted in March 1933. The House agreed to this amendment.

On amendment 33: By the terms of this Senate amendment, the filing fee for farmers under the agricultural composition section is increased from $10 to $25 and the compensation of the conciliation commissioner is raised to $25 for each case filed.

Under the amendment agreed to by the conferees, the compensation for the commissioners is increased to $25 for each case, but the filing fee for farmers is left at $10.

On amendment 34: Amendment 34 amends the subdivision of the agricultural composition section extending the secondary liability in case of an extension granted the principal debtor so as to include within its provision those who may have insured, or guaranteed such debts, or bonds issued on the security thereof. The House agreed to the amendment.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—G. C. VANDOVER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House bill No. 4973, entitled "An act for the relief of G. C. Vandover."

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to G. C. Vandover out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injury sustained by G. C. Vandover who, while acting within his capacity as an employee of State Hospital No. 4, Farmington, Mo., had his right leg shot off by a discharged soldier, then a patient in such hospital.

The circumstances attending the injury to Mr. Vandover were extremely unfortunate and I do not mean to underrate the seriousness of his present condition; but the allowance by the Federal Government of an award to him under the circumstances would create an undesirable precedent which might lead to further claims for injuries incurred by State employees under comparable conditions.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 24, 1934.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

H.R. 9459

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill, H.R. 9459.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the Everglades Park bill and to include therein certain references I referred to this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

RULES OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, the other day I received unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD two letters from former Senator Robert L. Owen. I did not know anything about the limitations in reference to printing, and about a week later I found out that the letters had been held up because they were too long. May I inquire what I should do about the matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the Joint Committee on Printing has adopted a rule limiting the length of letters to be printed in the RECORD. If they are over two pages they cannot be printed in the RECORD.

MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a measure is reported by a committee and goes on the Union Calendar and, of course, is referred for the action of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, of course, ipso facto, every Member of the House is a member of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, has or has not any Member who is not a member of the committee reporting the bill, a right to file, if he wants to do so, a minority report against such bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the Member does not have that right, but can do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. That can be done only by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so advised.

TO MAKE TEMPLE HILL A NATIONAL SHRINE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including some very brief references to Temple Hill, George Washington's headquarters in my district in New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of the Reverend A. Elwood Corning, president of National Temple Hill Association, delivered at the forty-third congress, Daughters of the American Revolution, Washington, D.C., April 16, 1934:

Madam President General, members of the Forty-third Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution: After the military operations at Yorktown were brought to a dramatic close the comparative leisure of camp life was attended with perils as great as any which confronted Washington during the entire Revolution.

The temper of Congress, the depletion of the National Treasury, the limited power in the Articles of Confederation combined tended to discourage the soldier ere he returned to the pursuits of peace, lest at home his petitions would go unredressed and his grievances unrecognized.

In this state of mind, in the fall of 1782, the Continental Army went into their last encampment, 3½ miles to the southwest of the present city of Newburgh, N.Y. Huts were at once erected, ultimately accommodating some eight thousand troops. A large temple for worship was constructed, and in this public building Washington appeared on the 15th of March 1783, to answer the anonymous communications designed to inflame the susceptible feelings of the soldiers and to arouse them to concerted action.

It was indeed a precarious situation; never did Washington face a more difficult task. Taking his place upon the platform, he paused before reading his prepared address, and took from his waistcoat pocket a pair of silver-framed spectacles. As he placed them before his eyes, he said, "You see, gentlemen, that I have not only grown gray, but blind, in your service, but I never doubted the justice of my country."

In this address at Temple Hill, Washington was concerned with the soul of the Nation, and on that day, under his successful leadership, the Republic of America was spiritually reborn.

That Washington recognized the importance of this occasion may well be believed when we note the conclusion of his address: "Had this day been wanting", he said, "the world had never seen the last stage of perfection to which human nature is capable of attaining."

It is to memorialize this great event in the history of our country that the National Temple Hill Association, Inc., has been organized. It is our purpose to restore at least in part this last cantonment of the Continental Army by creating at Temple Hill a national park, in which one of the original huts will be returned to its old site. Replicas of other Revolutionary huts will from time to time be constructed. The temple is to be rebuilt; and thus, by setting apart this historic ground as a patriotic shrine, a deserved tribute, long overdue, will be given to the memory of those who bequeath us a republic.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a brief editorial from today's Washington News. The title of the editorial is "Harry Hopkins."

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HEALEY, for several days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. CRUMP, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. STUDLEY, for the balance of the week, on account of death in his family.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next. I do this for the reason that District legislation has been crowded out for a day or two, and this is possibly the last day that will be devoted to District matters, and I think we should have an additional hour, if possible.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the majority leader whether or not we are to have a vote on the petition to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of the 6-hour railroad bill?

Mr. BYRNS. In view of the ruling of the Speaker on a previous occasion, if the information I have received is correct, I take it there will not be, because I understand the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. With a favorable or unfavorable report?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not advised, but I think the committee reported the measure without recommendation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Am I to understand that this action of the committee taken today deprives the Membership of the right to have a vote on this bill next Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. The Speaker has so ruled. The vote next Monday would be a vote to discharge the committee and, when the committee has discharged itself, I cannot see the logic of having such a vote on Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 9530. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Pierce, a legal subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Puget Sound, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as "The Narrows"; and 4789. Also, memorial of the Board of Supervisors of the City of San Francisco, Calif., urging the immediate passage by Congress of a bill having for its purpose the immediate redemption of adjusted-compensation certificates for World War veterans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 25, 1934

(Legislative day of Thursday, May 10, 1934)

The Senate met at 10:30 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day, Thursday, May 24, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MEDALS OF HONOR, ETC., FOR OFFICERS AND MEN OF COAST GUARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to place officers and men of the Coast Guard on the same basis as officers and men of the Navy with respect to Medals of Honor, Distinguished Service Medals, and Navy Crosses, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the convention of the National Society, Daughters of the Revolution, favoring the equipping and developing of Reserve Officers' Training Corps units so as to provide for trained and intelligent officer personnel, and the making of adequate appropriations for the Citizens' Military Training Camps and Reserve Officers' Training Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the convention of the National Society, Daughters of the Revolution, protesting against the ratification of the so-called "child-labor amendment" to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Portland, Oreg., favoring the passage of the bill (H.R. 7598) to provide for the establishment of unemployment and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PROTECTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL SAFEGUARDS

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD resolutions adopted by the Women's Republican Club of Barnegat, N.J., which they have asked me to put into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolutions will be received, lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

BARNEGAT, N.J., May 7, 1934.

United States Senator HAMILTON F. KEAN,
Washington, D.C.

Whereas the Republican Party, under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln, guided our country through an emergency far greater than the present and saved the Union founded on the Constitution; and

Whereas the chief bulwark of our Union is the full and free functioning of the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of our Government as provided in the Constitution; and

Whereas never before has a President in time of peace demanded from Congress the surrender to him of so many of its prescribed powers in order to experiment with our constitutional safeguards under the guidance of irresponsible advisers; and

Whereas the socialistic trend of the present administration, with its creation of a vast bureaucracy endowed with arbitrary powers, its entry into all spheres of activity by an unparalleled expenditure of Federal funds, has created the greatest menace to individual rights and liberties since the foundation of our country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Women's Republican Club of Barnegat and vicinity, recognizing that only the preservation of the Constitution can secure our rights and freedom against the tyranny of personal rule or dictatorship, protests the abdication by Congress of its constitutional powers and duties; protests the establishment, under the guise of an emergency, of a bureaucratic socialism endangering the liberties of our citizens; protests experimenting with remedies which throw to the winds the constitutional safeguards which have brought us through 150 years of our existence as a Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That we commend the courage and patriotism of those legislators in Washington who are publicly raising their voices to warn our citizens to "stop, look, and listen" before they sell their birthright and independence for a "mess of pottage."

Respectfully yours,

ELIZABETH VAN VORST,
Secretary Barnegat Republican Club.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3644) to provide for the assignment of a military instructor for the high-school cadets of Washington, D.C., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1172) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2599) for the relief of Francis A. Parry, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1176) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 341) authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the International Celebration at Fort Niagara, N.Y., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1178) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 3182) to provide for the purchase of the surplus copper, heretofore mined and processed in the United States, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1173) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 6803) to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1175) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3678) for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENS:

A bill (S. 3679) to place officers and men of the Coast Guard on the same basis as officers and men of the Navy with respect to Medals of Honor, Distinguished Service Medals, and Navy Crosses; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3680) to provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in small firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3681) to create an establishment to be known as the "National Archives", and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 3682) authorizing the appointment and retirement of William H. Kyle as a major, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 3683) to amend the act of June 19, 1930 (46 Stat. 788), entitled "An act providing for the sale of the remainder of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 3684) to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Fort Stanwix, in the State of New York; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. DICKINSON:

A bill (S. 3685) granting a pension to Celia K. Crow; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3686) repealing the act of February 28, 1927, governing inland waterways; to the Committee on Commerce.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. OVERTON each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADJUSTMENT OF TIMBER CONTRACTS IN NATIONAL FORESTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. POPE submitted an amendment to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2856) authorizing the adjustment of existing contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

CENSORSHIP OF THE PRESS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I wish to submit a resolution, and in connection with it I ask the clerk to read a short statement and also to read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, at least five attempts have been made within the past year to force censorship on the press of the United States. A free press is the foundation of liberty, and without it we become an absolute monarchy.

As a Senator of the United States I do not propose to sit here and permit, if I can in any way avoid it, such a thing being done. Gagging the press cannot in any fashion be construed as a recovery measure. If the new deal stands for censorship, then it is not new in the slightest. It is the same old game used by persons who would be king. It does not belong in the United States, and it must not be tolerated.

The President has attempted to explain away the attempts of his subordinates to muzzle the press, but to me and to many others here his protests mean nothing. His appointees would not dare, nor his legislative leaders presume, to enact such measures unless they believed there was an acquiescence on his part.

In my determination to do everything I can to prevent such action, I am submitting a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee whose duty it will be to make sure that no persons high or low in the bureaucracy ruling Washington shall be permitted to stamp out the people's rights.

The legislative clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SCHALL (S.Res. 248), as follows:

Whereas it is stated in the public press that various attempts have been made to prevent the press and the public from securing full knowledge of all public records and acts of the heads of various Government bureaus; and

Whereas such acts constitute censorship of the press which is in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas it is in the public interest to prevent any further encroachment on the rights of the press and the public: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to investigate these conditions and appoint a committee of five Senators who shall hold public hearings, call upon Government departments for information, and, when necessary, subpena witnesses to the following end:

1. To investigate if any department at the present time has ordered censorship of any or all records which are rightfully public property.

2. To determine if any merchant advertiser has been threatened with Government prosecution because of any advertisement in any publication opposed to this method of censorship.

3. To lay before the American people any and all acts which might result in a censorship of the press of the United States in violation of the Constitution.

4. To ascertain if the telegraph code of the National Industrial Recovery Act may be used to censor press dispatches or to cause financial loss to newspapers by forcing them to pay higher toll rates.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress and subsequent Congresses until a final report shall be made, to employ such legal and clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $20,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the resolution tendered by the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] recounts as existing facts matters which may be wholly misleading, the able Senator from Minnesota naturally being rightfully led by what he hears. The alleged facts upon which the resolution is based should be first ascertained, and I must move that the resolution be referred to such committee as, under the rules of the Senate, may be appropriate.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I understand the Senator requests that the resolution be referred to the appropriate committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the request of the Senator from Illinois, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SIXTH PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE—ADDRESSES BY MISS DORIS STEVENS AND DR. JAMES BROWN SCOTT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD an address delivered by Miss Doris Stevens before the special plenary session of the Sixth Pan American Conference in Habana, Cuba, February 7, 1934.

The address is timely now because of the fact that the Senate yesterday ratified the Equal Nationality Treaty, and also because the President of the United States yesterday signed the law dealing with this subject.

It is timely, essential, and almost poetic that the treaty and the law were acted upon the same day. These actions mark a great victory in the history of the development of women's rights.

And for the same reasons I ask, further, that the address of Dr. James Brown Scott, delivered before the biennial convention of the National Woman's Party in Wilmington, Del., on November 4, 1933, be also inserted in the RECORD.

ADDRESS OF MISS DORIS STEVENS MADE BEFORE A SPECIAL PLENARY SESSION OF THE SIXTH PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE FEBRUARY 7, 1928, HABANA, CUBA

Honorable delegates, we are met together on a great historic occasion. This is the first time in the history of the world that women are come before an international body to plead for treaty action on their rights.

We are met in this beautiful hall already consecrated to new ideals of Pan Americanism. I ask you to look well at the moving tapestries which hang on these walls. Twenty-one medallions represent the 21 republics assembled here today. What is the artist's conception of each republic? It is a very simple concept. The splendid figures of two human beings, man and woman. The artist is right. That, in the last analysis, is all there is to a state: man and woman.

Behind us is another moving concept of the artist. Where a crown once symbolized autocratic authority, you now have substituted a golden Western Hemisphere ablaze with light. The torch of freedom lights the golden replica of this hemisphere.

We could not, if we had searched far and wide, have found more beautiful and appropriate symbols to the subject matter on which we address you today. These are the symbols of a new world, of a new hemisphere—with new ideals as to that most important of all human relationships—the relationship between man and woman. Humanly stated, our thesis today is Man and Woman, the Ultimate Power in the World.

You have it in your power to make these symbols come alive. You can, here and now, if you will, take decisive action toward making men and women equal before the law in this hemisphere. We are in the hands of a friendly body. You have already declared unanimously your belief that men and women should be equal before the law. Today we propose a method of obtaining that equality.

Great laws are born of deep convictions. They are not made by technicians.

It is our deep convictions that we bring you today. But that is not all we bring you. We stand ready to work with you, as eminent jurists, through your appointed commission, to hasten the procedure of our proposal. For we do not come before you unprepared. We have studied carefully the merits of our proposal. And since with rare exception men cannot feel as we do, the sting of belonging to a group which is classed as inferior, we ask to be allowed authoritative power—not as auxiliaries but as colleagues—to consult between this conference and the next with the subcommission assigned to study the abolition of the present discriminations against women or until that legal subjection of women is abolished in the Americas. We shall not fold our standards until this subjection is removed. You might better act wisely and justly immediately on what you will only have eventually to do.

Since the beginning of time men, with the best of intentions, no doubt, have been writing laws for our good. Since the beginning of time brave and valiant women have been abolishing these same laws written for our good.

There is no limit to what man wishes to do for our good. Last week press dispatches from the United States carried the news that a husband and father had killed his wife, the mother of his children, and the children. When questioned as to his motives, he replied that he did it for their good!

The Associated Press dispatch reported from a seaport in Algeria last week also another example of man's desire to protect woman for her good. For the Mohammedan women's good, custom does not permit them to bathe at the same time as men. Five women were drowned when the bathhouse collapsed, while men were getting up their courage to break the man-made custom and enter the building reserved that day for women bathers.

This, in the realm of custom, is the logical if absurd outcome of the iniquity of one code of conduct for women and another for men.

Is it any wonder that enlightened women are in revolt today against acts done for their good? We want no more laws written for our good and without our consent. We must have the right to direct our own destiny jointly with you.

For, you see, no man, no group of men, no government, no nation, no group of nations ever had the right to withhold from us the rights we ask today. We ask to have restored rights which have been usurped. These are our human rights.

From the year 1846, when the code of Estevan de Ferrater of Barcelona was proposed, to the year 1928, eminent men from all corners of the earth have drafted and proposed codes of international law embracing, among many subjects, articles relating to the status of women. They have, however, been preeminently codes for men. A study of these codes shows at first a few articles concerning the status of women appearing. Each proposed article on the status of women reflects the then existing backward social position she held. More and more points on the status of women, it is true, have been included in these codes through the intervening years, although no code has been proposed giving women equality with men. Are we to permit to grow this vast network of one code for men with special articles inserted for women? If there were no free choice, it is conceivable that in 200 years we might see our bookshelves staggering under the weight of a double stock of law books, heavy with special codes for women and special codes for men. It is even conceivable that in 200 years a point would be reached where the codes for men and the codes for women might become identical. But we are not condemned to take any risk. We can exercise free choice. We can stop this method of codification and begin to write now international law for all human beings irrespective of sex.

Another danger which attends waiting upon evolution lies in the fact that there is no marked tendency to take the most advanced law regarding women on each point. Though eminent jurists advocate and propose what they call "progressive codification", it is not found to be so for women. The most distinguished jurists agree that codification should be a rehabilitation of law, and even a creation of new laws when public opinion demands it.

Furthermore, when public opinion demands it, newer and speedier methods are taken to reach a goal.

We have chosen the road we propose to travel. That right at least cannot be denied us today.

It is fitting that the American Continent should be the first union of republics to be asked for an equal rights treaty. The demand for women's rights was born on this continent. Abigail Adams was, so far as we know, the first woman in modern history to write to her husband, John Adams, when the United States' Constitution was being formed after our War of Independence: "While you are writing this new Constitution, I pray you, do not forget the ladies. If you do, we shall foment a hot rebellion." Again, it was in 1848 in the United States of America that our great pioneers called a congress and wrote a stirring declaration of our rights. This agitation continued until our Civil War in 1861. Again, the women demanded their rights at the same time that they demanded freedom for the black slaves. The slaves were freed. The women were not. It was not until 1920 that the political rights of women were written into our Constitution.

It is not in our traditions to be content with what we have gained. It is not in our traditions to be laggards of liberty. The impulse to gather together our power and push on more rapidly is strong in us.

We have chosen the treaty method because it is the most dignified. It is the easiest. It is the most permanent. It will not only abolish existing national and international inequalities; it will prevent new ones from being written. And lastly it obviates a cruel waste of energy. For we ought never be compelled to appeal for our rights to the most backward opinion in any State. Our appeal to the most select, the most cultivated, the most imaginative men in the world, should be welcomed, approved, and answered in this most dignified method.

Some will tell us that rights of women lie exclusively in the domain of domestic law. This is purely a matter of opinion.

The extension of what was formerly considered purely domestic law into the domain of international law has been the most distinctive feature of legal history in the last quarter of a century. There is every reason to believe that international action will expand to embrace more and more all the acts of humankind. Global action may come in the future. Our proposal lies in the current of our time. You may delay it. You cannot stop it. We want to accelerate it.

Timid souls may say this has never been done. That answer does not move us. All compelling history of the world has been made by those who dared to establish great precedents, who adventured in unknown paths, who led the way. The men who follow are never remembered—it is those who lead, who direct the current of civilization.

There will be those who say: "Woman's rights are not a fit subject for treaty action." To this we answer: "Discriminations against women have already been made the subject of action by convention by certain of the Americas and amongst European nations through the League of Nations. If discriminations against us as women on the sole ground of sex can be made the subject of international conventions, so can our rights.

Let us examine the treaty-making power of my own country. The treaty-making power of the United States is granted in the Constitution without any express limitation as to the subject matter of the treaty. Limitations on the subject matter are only implied. They are undefined and not judicially determined. Since no treaty has ever been held unconstitutional by any court in the United States—Federal or State—it cannot be given as more than a matter of opinion (not law) that the subject matter of our treaty would be so held. Everything written on the point of what is and what is not fit subject for treaty action—and there has been a mass of opinion—is purely academic. It is obiter dicta. The best thought is that restraints on the treaty-making power ought to exist only in the concrete—not in the abstract.

Charles Henry Butler goes so far as to say that "it is still an undecided question whether the judicial department of the court has the power either to declare void a treaty made and ratified according to constitutional method, or to declare that the executive and legislative departments of the Government exceeded the power vested in them by the people." (See Charles Henry Butler, The Treaty-Making Power of the United States, vol. II, pp. 351–363. Also Woolsey, International Law, item 103, p. 160, 6 ed.; also Ware v. Hylton, U.S. Sup. Court 1796, 3 Dall. 199.)

Regarding the supremacy of a treaty over a conflicting State law, eminent jurists disagree. Time permitting, we could cite you opinions on each side of this controversy with the balance of modern opinion, perhaps, on the side of the supremacy of the National Government. "The very words of our Constitution imply that some treaties will be made in contravention of the laws of the State, whether the legislative authority under which they are passed is concurrent with that of Congress or exclusive of that of Congress", says that eminent jurist Elihu Root. (Address made by Elihu Root at first annual meeting of the American Society of International Law * * * American Journal of International Law, vol. I, pp. 278–283, April 1907.

Finally, your distinguished member, His Excellency Orestes Ferrara, said in his report on Treaties to the Commission on Public International Law last week—in reference to the code of public international law drawn up by the conference of jurists at Rio de Janeiro, April 1927:

"In not a single clause has limitation as to the content of treaties been defined. * * * The will of contracting parties (to a treaty) has been left in complete and absolute liberty."

We therefore offer you a treaty which we believe the United States Government and other governments of Pan America are fully empowered to enter into. Legal interpretations may offer barriers. The United States Constitution states none.

Men may differ as to their willingness to accept the rights of women as proper subject matter for treaty action. To persuade them to our point of view is the task we have undertaken.

We can only touch upon these points here.

We shall hope to discuss them exhaustively with the commission appointed to study equal rights for women.

Our proposed method of establishing equal rights is not as revolutionary as you might think—revolutionary in thought, perhaps, but not in international procedure.

At the first conference of the International Labor Office of the League of Nations (Washington, 1919) 3 out of 7 conventions were written for women workers on the ground of sex. The second conference (Genoa, 1920) wrote conventions applying to both sexes (adults and children). At the third conference (Geneva, 1921) more conventions were written for both sexes among adults and children. In 1927 (Geneva) the same office wrote conventions on sickness insurance for workers of both sexes.

These are but a few of many examples which prove two things. Jurists have written conventions making men and women equal before international law. There is no fixed policy, except as there is the general evasion of accepting the idea of laws for human beings. Some of the conventions are for women and children of one sex. Some are for women and children of both sexes. Some are for men and women. The result is not only an appalling hodge-podge; it is manifestly stupid and unfair to both adults and children.

How much simpler it would be to take our clear and decisive method! The result would be one body of conventions for adult men and women, and another for children of both sexes. There could then be a housecleaning of all the useless conventions based on the arbitrary factor of sex.

Conventions have been proposed and ratified regulating the hours of work of women, regulating the time of day when women shall work—as was done by the Convention of the International Conference at Berne in 1906; as was done by the Convention for the Unification of Protective Laws for Workmen and Laborers, signed February 7, 1923, by Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica. For example, Article I of this convention signed by the five Central American countries stipulates the time of day wherein women shall be permitted to work. Will you tell us this can be done and, at the same time, tell us that a treaty shall not be negotiated enabling adult women to choose their own times of work and their own occupations, which our treaty would enable them to do?

Again, will you tell us that the League of Nations (1921 Convention for Prevention of Traffic in Women and Children) can propose a convention for the suppression of the traffic in women, which convention is to date signed by more than 35 countries in the world, and in the same breath tell us that a treaty cannot be negotiated for other women? Must we become sex slaves before we can be judged fit subjects for action by convention? International action was not taken on this shameful traffic primarily because women are sold and transported from one country to another. You know as well as we do that that international convention was written because the moral conscience of the world demanded it.

May I say, in passing, that it is our firm belief that if women were not held in contempt before the law, were not held socially inferior and cheap in the eyes of society, this traffic would never exist. Unconventionality, yes, but not traffic in women. It is our firm belief that so swiftly as you make us your equals, so swiftly will your international conventions written on this subject fall into disuse because they will not be necessary.

We find, then, that international conventions are in operation affecting the following groups of women:

1. Women who work by day.
2. Women who work by night.
3. Women who are trafficked in.
4. Women before and after childbirth.
5. Women who are ill.

And proposed for—

6. Women who marry aliens.

Is it not folly to continue on this piecemeal path? Leave aside for a moment the justice of our claim. Leave aside all legal procedure, which is not always synonymous with common sense. Does not plain, homely common sense compel you to embrace by treaty action now the rights of all women and scrap all this idiotic segregation of women in conventions? Does not wisdom call to you to save yourselves and ourselves from further bulky, cumbersome, unjust international action? We hope so.

Some of the delegates have advised us not to propose an equal rights treaty at this time. "This treaty will call up legal and juridical difficulties, and you will be defeated." Our answer to this is, gentlemen, that if you find our proposal difficult, that is your misfortune. If statesmen avoid all questions because they are difficult, nothing vital will ever be accomplished. The first requisite is to agree on the broad, general principle of equality between men and women set forth in the proposed treaty; and if your heart is in that agreement, your intelligence will settle the technical difficulties. On the point of defeat, this must be said: A defeat of the treaty will be your defeat, not ours.

There is another point we should like to call to your attention. Since working with this conference, we have heard the opinion expressed—I regret to say, by one of our compatriots—that equal rights may be all right for the women of North America but that the women of Latin America are not yet ready for them. We women resent and disbelieve in any hint of sectional superiority. It may be that there is a hope implied that, although we women of North America may be out of hand, the women of Latin America may still be kept under legal subjection. We do not believe that the men of North America are called upon to be the tender protectors of the women of Latin America.

We do not look with approval upon this attempt to divide women. Our subjection is world-wide. The abolition of our subjection will be accomplished by world-wide solidarity of women. Furthermore, we have not noticed that the men of the northern and the southern Americas are reluctant to unite in Pan Americanism because there may exist different customs, differing attitudes of mind toward your mutual problems. The unwarranted presumption is again: One code of conduct for women, another for men.

We bear witness today before you to the growing solidarity among the women of the Americas.

This conference will long be remembered by what it does here for the women of the Americas. Nothing you gentlemen will do during this conference will be of such far-reaching importance as the action you will take toward the liberty of women. Nothing will so distinguish you for all time as to abandon at once all separate codes of law for men and women and to substitute in their place the great principle making women equal with men before the law.

We want to be your peers, your comrades, your helpmates, your partners in the great adventure of life. These we shall be in a properly civilized society. You can hasten that day.

So long as inequality before the law exists between men and women, less is expected of women by men. Less is expected by women of themselves. This in turn affects our whole body of opinion, our whole culture. Less courage, less balance in judgment, a lower standard of public spirit, an indifference in international cooperation. This is the reward of inequality. This is a menace to men as well as to women. To expect less is to receive less. We stand ready to give all our abilities to society, not our limited, restricted abilities. Do you want less?

Will you welcome the opportunity, or will you hesitate? Will you condemn us further to the ignoble, unworthy, unlovely procedure of begging every laggard in our hemisphere to concur before action is taken, or will you men whom we choose to call our intellectual equals release us by your acts?

We ask for immediate recommendation by the conference of the proposed equal-rights treaty, a tentative draft of which we now present to you. This treaty—"the contracting States agree that upon the ratification of this treaty men and women shall have equal rights throughout the territory subject to their respective jurisdictions"—was drawn up by Alice Paul, of the United States, beloved feminist leader and distinguished scholar of international law.

We have told you what we want. The rest is up to you. Who will be the first country to dare to trust its women with that degree of equality which will come through the negotiation of the treaty? Which country among you will claim this honor?

Pan Americanism will move a swifter, lovelier, more rhythmic pace, if men and women run together.

EQUALITY TRIUMPHS—ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE BIENNIAL CONVENTION OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S PARTY IN WILMINGTON, DEL., ON NOVEMBER 4, 1933, BY JAMES BROWN SCOTT, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW AND OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

The race is not to them that's got
The longest legs to run,
Nor the battel to that peopel
That shoots the biggest gun.

These were the lines—a profane version of the Scripture which found favor with the indomitable Texas brigade—that rang out under the Stars and Bars in the darkness of a fatal April night, when for the last time the Army of Northern Virginia was to tempt its fortune.

In the "battel" waged by the National Woman's Party there is no last time. It is lining up for Montevideo, where, in the seventh of the conferences of the American States, the Inter American Commission of Women will give battle with the representatives of the 21 American Republics in conference assembled.

Now, what is this Inter American Commission? How did it come into being? What is its purpose and how is it being accomplished?

The Inter American Commission, as I am sure you know, consists of a representative woman appointed by the governments of each of the American Republics for the purpose of studying and reporting to the seventh of the Pan American Conferences on the political and civil rights of women in the Americas. It is an official body, representing each of the 21 American republics. The representative of the United States is Miss Stevens, and she is also its chairman. The commission is, I repeat, an official body, and as such installed, and properly so, in the Palace of the Americas in Washington.

It is a creation of the National Woman's Party—that is to say, the National Woman's Party caused its creation by their presence in force at the sixth of the Conferences of the American States, held in Habana in the early months of the fateful year 1928.

On that occasion a special and plenary session of the conference was held, in order that the delegates to the conference might learn from the women themselves their views as to civil and political rights which the delegates of the American States, more fortunate than the women, possessed as of right.

On that occasion Miss Stevens stated the women's case in what appear to me—if I may speak in my proper person—to be unanswerable terms. They were assuredly persuasive terms, because 11 days later—to be exact, on the 18th day of February—the conference in plenary session resolved that an Inter American Commission should be constituted and that such commission should be composed of a representative from every republic of America, the purpose of the commission so constituted being "to enable the Seventh International Conference of American States to take up the consideration of the civil and political equality of women in the continent."

Exactly 10 years ago the question was first bruited in the Fifth Conference of the American States meeting in Santiago de Chile, and it was then recommended to the governing board of the Pan American Union that it should include in the program of future conferences the study of "the means of abolishing the constitutional and legal incapacities of women, to the end that the women should secure the same civil and political rights enjoyed by men."

The Fifth Pan American Conference further recommended that a memoir on the position of women, as determined by the laws and constitutions of each of the American republics, should be prepared "in order that the same may be communicated to the governments and to the governing board of the Pan American Union, to serve as a basis for investigation."

A further recommendation was made that women "be included on the delegations" in order that they might participate in the work of further conferences.

For the moment, however, the recommendations fell on deaf ears; and had it not been for the insistence of the National Woman's Party, we question whether the topic would have made its appearance, even informally, at the Habana Conference. But I am happy to be able to say that the studies which the men had neglected have been made by the Inter-American Commission of Women and will be contained in the report to be made by its chairman to the approaching conference.

The question, therefore, is no longer a mere abstraction; it is concrete in the highest sense of the word. The task of the women has been splendidly performed. Every code and every law of every Latin-American republic has been examined, analyzed, and digested and will be laid by Miss Stevens before the conference at Montevideo. What the men have failed to do, the women have done!

To those who would have us believe that we are not making progress toward equality of right in human relationships, it is only necessary to state the past and compare it with the present—to compare the situation a century or more ago with the situation today and to appreciate the state of mind which is bound, if the lessons of history mean anything, to bring about a different and better future.

Nobody would deny the intelligence of Bonaparte, although many there be who lament the use that he made of it. We happen to have his ideas on the woman question. In a conversation at St. Helena, where he was freer than ever he had been to form at leisure his opinions on a variety of topics, he proceeded, having failed with the men, to put woman in her proper place. She was an inferior being, exclusively made for the pleasure of man, and the pleasure in the Corsican's view was material, and, may I add, unspeakable in any gathering of cultured people. Human in form, the woman was to him an animal in fact. Fortunately the Corsican and all his ways are but a memory.

* * * * * * *

In the Americas, too, there are unhappy memories. In the time of some persons still living, African slavery existed in the United States, and it only ceased to exist in Brazil when I was a student in a New England college.

What is the situation today? In many countries women possess the right of suffrage. By virtue of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, for which, I am happy to say, the Woman's Party was finally responsible, women today have the right of suffrage throughout the American commonwealth. And a few years hence people will look back and wonder how it could ever have been otherwise; for suffrage, is it not, as Archimedes might say, a lever long enough to move the world?

Scientific societies and associations, as well as enlightened governments, are interested in the equality of men and women. The most influential of scientific bodies in the domain of international law is the Institute of International Law, founded in 1873 at Ghent, by a small group of forward-looking men of different nationalities. Since then it has increased in number and at its meetings, held every year or two, there are internationalists of as many as 20 to 30 countries present. It is, therefore, not only international in name but international in fact. It is a private organization having the respect of governments, but no official connection with them. Its resolutions, by the care with which they are drafted, nevertheless, embody the views of governments expressed through their nationals and accepted by the world at large to such an extent that international conferences dealing with phases of international law find sure and safe guides in the resolutions of this private organization; and, because of reliance upon these resolutions, the conferences influenced by them are successful.

In 1929 the Institute of International Law held its first meeting in the United States in Briarcliff Manor, overlooking the Hudson, and in a setting rich with historic incident and literary memories. Whether influenced by the Statue of Liberty as they entered the harbor or affected by the drowsy atmosphere of Sleepy Hollow, the members adopted a declaration of the international rights of man ("man" being used in the sense of human beings), a declaration which is abreast of the present and divines the future. I cannot do better than lift a few of its phrases here and there. By the first article the state is obliged to recognize in each and every individual an equal right to life, to liberty, and to property and the equal protection of that right, without distinction of nationality or sex or religion. The fourth article assures to us, without distinction of sex or race or language or religion, the enjoyment of private and public rights, specifying particularly admission to educational institutions and the exercise of the various economic professions and industries.

A few years later the same institute, at its session in the summer of 1932 at Oslo, the capital of Norway, recognized the right of the woman upon marriage to preserve her own nationality, and to be unaffected by the subsequent change of nationality on the part of her husband. This was an unexpected and a precious confirmation of the program for which the National Woman's Party stands.

Now, imitation is, we all know, the sincerest flattery. A few years ago the American Institute of International Law, a continental instead of a world institute, composed of 5 publicists from each of the 21 American Republics (we hope that Canadian publicists will find their way to us shortly), through the governing board, on two occasions expressed itself unanimously in favor of two important, indeed, epoch-making, projects relating to equal nationality and equality in all political and civil relationships. The first of these is of but three lines:

"The contracting parties agree that from the going into effect of this treaty there shall be no distinction based on sex in their law and practice relating to nationality."

The second is also of but three lines:

"The contracting states agree that upon the ratification of this treaty men and women shall have equal rights throughout the territory subject to their respective jurisdictions."

Now, these two projects are none other than the projects of the National Woman's Party, and they were adopted as such; the first drafted by Miss Stevens, the second by Miss Paul.

In addition, a committee of the American Institute has been appointed by its governing board to cooperate with the Inter-American Commission.

These proclamations adopted by the two institutes of international law are as fundamental for equality as equality is for democracy. We do not need to argue the matter. President Lincoln has done it for us, as it were, in advance, and in a very classic form: "As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses", he continued, "my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is no democracy."

In the address which Miss Stevens delivered at Habana at the plenary session of the Sixth International Conference of American States in 1928 she presented the draft of a treaty on the equal rights of men and women, which in the same terms will be presented by her at Montevideo, and the draft, as I have already remarked, has been approved unanimously on two separate occasions by the American Institute of International Law. She will also present the draft on equal nationality, likewise adopted on two occasions by the American Institute; and both of these documents, I need hardly remind you, were adopted by the Inter American Commission of Women.

Therefore we have these two epoch-making projects approved by a private organization composed of representative American publicists and by an official commission composed of representative women of the Americas. Their adoption by the conference at Montevideo would, I veritably believe, dedicate the republics of the vast American Continent to equality, as they are already dedicated to liberty.

There can be no doubt that a treaty embodying one or other or both of the projects would introduce equality in nationality as well as in civil and political rights; for the contracting parties bind themselves by the treaty to pass whatever legislation may be needed to carry into effect its provisions. This I have not hitherto mentioned, as it seems to be self-evident; otherwise—why a treaty?

It is stated, however, from time to time that a treaty is unconstitutional if it be in conflict with the terms of our Constitution. This, of course, depends upon the relation of international law to national law. If municipal law, to use a more familiar expression—and what is a constitution but municipal law?—be in conflict with the treaty, the national or municipal law must yield to the law international, in that the law of the international community is, and must be, superior to the laws of its component parts, meaning the civilized States of the world, on the theory, in simplest mathematical terms, that the whole is greater than any of its parts.

I would not have you believe, however, that I have based these statements on mere theories, even if they be mathematical theorems.

We have had instances from time to time in which the Government of the United States has maintained that the remedy for injury to foreigners is to be had in State courts, as the Federal Government is without jurisdiction in such internal matters. This is an answer, but an unacceptable answer, to the foreign nations insisting upon the rule of international law that its citizens or subjects in a foreign country must be protected in their rights to life, liberty, and property; and to the answer that our Constitution does not permit the Federal Government to intervene, the foreign country invariably replies, and rightly, that if our form of government does not permit compliance with the rule of international law, we must change our government to bring it in harmony with the law of nations. In the end our Government generally saves its face, so to speak, by according reparation "as an act of grace." Is not the act of grace, however, a recognition of a duty and, therefore, an implied recognition of the international obligation?

There are two answers to this American constitutional doctrine. One is—speaking of the United States—that of the Constitution itself: That "all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." It may be, however, and it has been, objected that certain treaties infringe upon what are called the reserved rights of the States of our own Republic. A second and final answer, therefore, is that while treaties of the United States with foreign powers often affect the so-called "reserved rights" of the States, nevertheless such treaties are held constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, the most notable instance being the recent case of Missouri v. Holland, decided in 1920 (252 U.S. 416), on the question of rights over migratory birds—rights which, without the provision of the treaty, would have been considered as reserved to the States.

But what, it may be asked, have migratory birds to do with the civil and political rights of women? As in the case of birds of passage, these laws affecting women are made by the many States. An act of Congress alone could neither abrogate nor change these laws. But what an act of Congress cannot do without a treaty it may do by a treaty, which is the supreme law of the land to the President, to the Congress, and to the Supreme Court of the United States. And it may safely be asserted that in every country which makes a pretense to civilization, a rule of international law, whether in the form of a custom or in the form of a treaty, takes precedence of the national law; otherwise there would be anarchy instead of law between nations.

We should confess our faith in equality of right, not only in nationality and in political and civil rights but in all human relationships.

What a debt we who believe in the "battel" for equal rights owe to these migratory birds!

* * * * * * *

Within a month to a day a handful of women of the Americas will join battle far, far to the south at Montevideo under the light of the Southern Cross!

God bless the American women!

As I began, so would I end:

The race is not to them that's got
The longest legs to run,
Nor the battel to that peopel
That shoots the biggest gun.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the tariff question has been a political issue in this country ever since its foundation. In many campaigns it has been the outstanding or paramount issue. Every major political party that ever adopted platforms regularly included a plank on the tariff. Every American statesman and outstanding political leader has presented to the American public his views on the tariff. But neither American statesman, American political leader, nor American political party ever openly advocated a tariff policy such as is embodied in the pending measure. This is especially true of the Democratic platform, the Democratic Presidential candidate, and the Democratic leaders during the campaign of 1932.

Should the President make full use of the powers delegated to him by this bill, it would result in heavy injury to some and complete destruction to other American industries. I believe this would be especially true of the shoe industry. As my State is one of the great shoe-manufacturing centers of the United States, I desire to use this industry as an illustration, and to point out the danger to that industry under the program of the administration. What I shall say of the shoe industry will apply with greater or less degree to any other industry now having and needing tariff protection.

The Constitution of the United States provides that the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." It is now proposed to delegate to the President full power to negotiate certain tariff treaties without the Senate being advised of the actual provisions of such treaties, and without the submission by the President of such treaties to the Senate for ratification by a two-thirds vote, as provided by the Constitution.

It is difficult to believe that any such proposal would be seriously considered by anyone having due regard for our constitutional form of government; yet this measure has already passed the House of Representatives, and under the lash of the President will undoubtedly pass the Senate. It may be of interest to the citizens of my State to know that of the 13 Democratic Members of the House of Representatives from Missouri, 12 voted for this measure, the other Member—Mr. SHANNON, of Kansas City—being absent.

So far as I am able to learn, no such bill was ever previously proposed or considered by an American Congress. The platform on which this administration was elected advocated a policy directly opposite to that of the pending bill. Let me quote from the Democratic platform of 1932, which President Roosevelt, while a candidate, repeatedly declared he endorsed 100 percent:

> We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue with a fact-finding commission free from Executive interference.

This plank condemns the measure now before the Senate. This administration has no mandate from the American people to enact any such measure. In the face of its pledge to frame a tariff law "free from Executive interference", it would be a gross and shameful violation of its pledge to enact legislation putting such authority arbitrarily in the President's hands.

The proposed measure is not only un-American but viciously so. It is contrary to American policies and destructive of American ideals. If such a measure can stand the test of our courts, then the Constitution has indeed become a dead letter.

Certain American industries and products need tariff protection, without which they cannot compete with the cheap labor and lands of foreign countries. This is no longer a disputed question. One has but to peruse the debates during the framing of the present tariff law, read the fervent pleas made by Democratic Members of Congress for tariff protection for the products of their own States, and examine their votes on various tariff schedules to become convinced that down deep in their hearts Democrats as well as Republicans favor tariff protection, but with this difference: The Democrats favor tariff protection only for the products of their own States, while the Republicans view the question from a national and patriotic standpoint, and favor tariff protection for every American industry and interest, no matter in what part of the country such industry or interest may be located.

To remove needed tariff protection from any industry would either close such industry or force those employed therein to reduce their wage and living standards to the level of foreign countries. When fairly and honestly put to them, the American people will never support any such proposal; and I deny the right of this administration, in view of the specific campaign pledge previously cited, to impose any such legislation on the country without first submitting it to the American people for their approval or disapproval.

This proposed act would ratify in advance any treaty the President may negotiate under its provisions; it would put into his hands the power of life and death over every industry needing tariff protection; it would subject every such industry to the continued uncertainty of a misguided judgment and a "cracking-down" penalty should such industry incur the displeasure of the administration or fail to do its bidding. It represents the limit of constitutional surrender by Congress.

There is no provision in this bill for review of, or appeal from, the President's decision. His action would be final. As this measure passed the House, there was no provision for a hearing for any industry that might be injured or destroyed by any tariff treaty the President may negotiate. The Senate Finance Committee added what is supposed to be such a provision, but it is meaningless, for any hearings the President may hold under its provisions would be under rules and regulations promulgated solely by him and would not be public. For all practical purposes the provision added by the Senate Finance Committee is useless.

The stated purpose of the bill is the promotion of foreign trade. I have carefully gone over its provisions and read the report accompanying the bill, but nowhere is it made clear just how this increase in our foreign trade is to be brought about or how the provisions of the act will inure to our advantage. As any benefits we are supposed to derive are to be through certain tariff changes, it would seem that the proponents of this measure could easily point out some concrete illustrations as to how the plan would work and some of the specific tariff changes the administration proposes to make. It is only fair to the American people, to those employed in American industry, and to those who have their funds invested therein, for them to be advised of the actual intentions of those now asking for this unusual and dangerous grant of authority.

I understand, of course, that under this proposal we are to reduce certain tariff rates which would permit the importation of foreign goods not now being imported into this country. In return, we are presumed to obtain some concessions from abroad. If a fair and equal exchange results, then neither country will have benefited. The advantage will obviously be with the best bargainer, and in view of past experience in foreign negotiations this country can expect to come out of the small end of the horn.

If through any treaty negotiated under the provisions of this proposed act foreign countries will be able to ship us goods now being made or produced in this country, this will logically throw out of employment those now engaged in the production of those goods in the United States. This will be fine for the foreigner, but tough on the American, and will hardly improve employment conditions in this country. Let me illustrate how the provisions of this act may affect the shoe industry, one of the great manufacturing industries of the United States.

St. Louis, Mo., and surrounding territory, is one of the large shoe-manufacturing centers of the United States. One concern alone has almost 50 plants in the St. Louis area. Many of these factories are in the smaller cities, ofttimes the only industrial plant there, and therefore vital to the business welfare of the community. Many thousands are employed in the shoe industry in St. Louis and surrounding territory, and the injuring or closing of these factories would be a terrific blow to the community such industry is now benefiting.

The American shoe-manufacturing industry needs tariff protection, without which it cannot exist. This is not merely a partisan statement. I invite attention to the fact that not long ago the present Democratic Chairman of the House Committee on Labor presented a petition to the United States Tariff Commission pleading for an increased tariff on shoes, alleging that the shoe industry in the New England States could not now properly function under the terrific competition of the cheap products of foreign lands. I do not believe this fact will be seriously questioned by any informed person, but I desire to present a striking illustration that came to my attention.

I recently have been shown a pair of gymnasium shoes, with canvas tops and heavy rubber soles, which seem to be unusually well made. They were manufactured in Japan, imported into the United States, duty paid, transported to Washington, and after allowing a profit to the retailer, were sold at the amazingly low price of 25 cents a pair. These shoes were purchased at Kresge's store in Washington, D.C., on March 22, 1933. It is perfectly obvious that the American shoe industry cannot continue to pay the present wage scale, enabling those employed therein to maintain a decent standard of living, if it must compete with products from abroad which can be sold at such a price.

The illustration cited may be an extreme one, and was doubtless partly due to an unusual exchange situation, but no labor in the world is as well paid as the American laborer, and when we let down the tariff bars on any industry needing tariff protection, such industry must either close its doors or those employed therein must reduce their standard of living to the low level of foreign countries. Such a policy is not only unfair—it is un-American. As far as I am concerned, I would not sacrifice one job now held by an American shoe worker or any other American laborer for all the foreign-trade dreams this administration's "brain trust" can indulge in.

Let it not be supposed the power delegated to the President under this act will not be exercised or that American industry will not be sacrificed in order to carry out the wild and unsound program of this administration. Those who seek unusual and dangerous power will not hesitate to take unusual and dangerous steps. Spokesmen for this administration have repeatedly announced that certain American industries which they are pleased to designate as "secondary" or "inefficient" should be sacrificed. Let this administration exercise the power delegated to it by this measure, and our industrial highway will be marked with the ruins of American industry, a sacrifice to a policy this administration did not dare submit to the American people for their approval.

This administration either intends using the power delegated to it by this act, or it does not intend doing so. If it does not so intend, then the passage of the bill is a hypocritical gesture unworthy of any administration. If it does intend exercising the power delegated to it, it means the ruin of certain American industries, sacrificed on the altar of a foreign-trade dream.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, outstanding administration spokesman, has repeatedly stated that in order to carry out the new-deal program and to develop foreign trade, it may not only be necessary to sacrifice certain American industries that Washington bureaucrats may choose to designate as "inefficient" or "secondary", but also take millions of acres of agricultural land out of cultivation and eventually put all agricultural land under the direct control of the Government. In his recent pamphlet, America Must Choose, he discusses this prospect at some length. I quote from him as follows:

> A truly practical readjustment of our own tariff policy would involve the careful examination of every product produced in the United States or imported and the determination of just which of our monopolistic or inefficient industries we are willing to expose to real foreign competition. This problem should be approached from the point of view of a long-time national plan which we are willing to follow for at least 20 or 30 years, even if some of our friends get hurt and howl continuously to high heaven.
> There is a best place and a second and third best place in the world to mine coal and grow cotton, just as there are favored and less-favored cotton and coal regions within the United States.
> The same thing holds true of innate or inherited capacities. England makes better cloth than we do, and better hand-made shoes. France, I am told, makes better wine. Unquestionably, however, we raise better apples more cheaply than France. Accordingly, one of our first approaches toward dealing with the world again on a new basis is as simple and sensible as a swap between two pioneer farm neighbors.

The only inference that can be drawn from Secretary Wallace's pamphlet is that certain American industries should be sacrificed and those now employed therein forced to join the ranks of the unemployed. He is, however, generous enough to intimate that when thrown out of their present employment they may be permitted to engage in the apple-growing industry. What an unfortunate thing it has been for the American people that they did not know in 1932 just what this administration intended doing in the event it was elected. The American people would never knowingly elect anyone to public office who proposed to sacrifice any existing American industry or to deprive any American laborer of a single day's toil on the theory that by doing so some foreign trade might be obtained.

The professed object of the measure before us is the promotion of foreign trade. This is to be brought about through a reduction of tariffs. If the proponents of this bill will inform themselves on the subject, they will learn that our foreign trade has always made its greatest gains under protective-tariff laws, with just the opposite true under low-tariff laws.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator quoted from America Must Choose, by Secretary Wallace. Secretary Wallace, I think, professes to be a type of protectionist; at least that was the view of all his ancestors, so far as I know about them, and I thought it was his view; but I wonder if he realizes that he is taking the position, as read by the Senator, that where some other nation can produce a thing better and cheaper than we can we ought to buy for our needs from that nation and devote our own country's activities to the production of some other things which we can produce cheaper and better, and thus have a reciprocal relationship. I wonder if he realizes that that is the stock argument of all free traders, has always been, and is the one distinguishing feature which differentiates protection from free trade.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Ohio is eminently correct in that statement. I gathered the impression from reading Mr. Wallace's pamphlet, America Must Choose, that whether he knew it or not he was a free trader.

Mr. FESS. That is the thought I had in mind. I think he would resent the statement that he is a free trader, and yet he is employing exactly the argument of the free trader. It is fundamental with them that we ought to give up the employment of labor in any inefficient or expensive industry, and buy goods now produced by us under such circumstances from some other country, and that this country should enter upon the production of other commodities which it can produce more cheaply and more efficiently. That is the fundamental principle of free trade which differentiates that theory from the theory of protection.

The danger of the free-trade theory is that under it we will fail to develop industries, as illustrated in the case of tin plate. It was thought for many years that we could not produce tin plate, and that if we had attempted to do so the process would be inefficient and expensive. Had we followed that concept and never inaugurated the production of tin plate, we still would be buying our tin plate from foreign countries as we used to do when we did not produce a pound of it, and yet we now produce not only sufficient for our own needs, but we produce it at a less cost than the price at which we used to buy it from England, and we produce it in sufficient quantities to export it to every other country which needs it. Suppose the Wallace theory or the free-trade theory had been in vogue, how far would we ever have gotten with the development of that industry? And is the same thing not true with regard to sugar and every other industry where we have the facilities for producing for our own needs?

Mr. PATTERSON. I agree with the Senator absolutely. We would not have had a tin-plate industry if it had not been for the tariff being placed upon tin plate. We have built up that industry to be one of the greatest industries in the country. I remember when I was a small boy, when the tariff was first placed upon tin plate, the Democratic National Committee sent emissaries around to the back door calling attention to the fact that the price of tin plate had gone up on account of the McKinley "robber" tariff.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator recall that that very campaign, conducted as the Senator says, resulted in defeating Major McKinley, who was a Member of the House, and Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and author of the law of 1890? He was defeated following the passage of that act by that peddling method of propaganda, by which they said that tin plate had increased in price due to that particular tariff law.

Mr. PATTERSON. Exactly. And it resulted in the election of a Democratic President.

Mr. FESS. What impresses me just now is the statement the Senator from Missouri has quoted from America Must Choose, in which the free-trade theory is adopted bodily by one who, I do not believe, thinks he is a free-trader.

Mr. PATTERSON. He probably does not think so, but he is in fact.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I was thinking of another illustration. When the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was urging a protective tariff on manganese I opposed it, occupying at the time the seat at which I am now standing, on the ground that I would not be in favor of protecting any article when we had no possibility of ever increasing its production. The Senator from Arizona gave figures indicating that by means of new processes we could increase the production of manganese to an appreciable point, sufficient to satisfy our own consumption needs. Of course, if we could do so, then the policy advocated by the Senator from Arizona is sound protective policy. I have not followed it up so as to know whether the new processes referred to by the Senator from Arizona have fulfilled the predictions made by him at that time. His argument, however, is the soundest form of protective argument. If we cannot by protection stimulate production to a point somewhere near our needs, then it is a question whether we ought to protect it or not, but if we can, it is the common-sense thing to protect our industry to the point where we employ our own labor instead of looking to Europe for the product of cheaper labor.

Mr. PATTERSON. I thank the Senator for his contribution. Before yielding to him I made the statement that our foreign trade had always made its greatest gains under protective-tariff laws, with just the opposite true under low-tariff laws.

I refer, of course, to normal times, and not to such unusual periods as the recent war, when as a result of war demands our foreign trade rapidly increased and then more rapidly decreased when the war demands were over; nor do I refer to the past few years when, as an aftermath of that World War, there has been an industrial collapse over the entire world.

The Democratic Party has always endeavored to convey the impression that under protective tariff laws our foreign trade is practically destroyed, and that by such legislation we virtually declare an embargo on foreign products. Nothing could be further from the truth. Let me present a historical illustration.

During the previous Democratic administration what is known as the "Underwood low tariff law" was in force. Up to the outbreak of the World War, under that law, our foreign trade was gradually falling off, but the demands of that war caused the foreign trade to rapidly increase. When the war period ended, our foreign trade fell off at a greater rate than ever known in history. On the incoming of the Harding administration, the Fordney-McCumber protective tariff law was passed, going into effect on September 21, 1922. According to Democratic theory this should have further reduced our foreign trade, and that party lost no opportunity to make such predictions. I quote the following from the Democratic campaign book of 1922:

> The Fordney-McCumber profiteers law is the worst tariff law ever passed by an American Congress. * * * It will not yield the Government itself more than $250,000,000 in revenue under the most favorable circumstances. * * * It is practically an embargo on foreign products, and will destroy what is left of our foreign trade.

History has been written since the foregoing declaration. Let us examine the results.

The foreign trade of the United States, imports and exports, for the last year of the Underwood low tariff law aggregated $6,944,000,000. During the 7 years following, up to the time of the world-wide crash and under that law which the Democrats predicted would destroy our foreign trade, that trade averaged $8,921,000,000 a year. This is an average increase of $1,076,000,000, or 15½ percent a year, over the last year of the Underwood low tariff law. During this 7-year protective tariff period, our foreign trade was larger than during any other peace period in our history. This forcibly proves the statement I made to the effect that under protective tariffs we have a greater foreign trade than under lower tariffs.

Tariff collections under protective tariff laws are also of interest, always being larger than under so-called "tariff for revenue" acts. Although the Democratic campaign book of 1922 predicted that under the Fordney-McCumber protective tariff law tariff collections would not exceed $250,000,000 under the most favorable conditions, the historical record shows that up to the time of the world-wide crash such collections actually averaged $573,000,000 a year. This is $324,000,000, or almost 130 percent, greater than that estimated by the Democratic campaign book.

Under protective tariff laws neither unreasonable nor prohibitive tariffs are levied. Notwithstanding Democratic misrepresentations, we do not deny the right of foreign nations to freely deal with us, as is conclusively shown by the foregoing illustration. Of the imports that have been coming into this country under protective tariff laws, approximately two-thirds enter without the payment of a single penny of duty. Under protective tariff laws we do, however, levy sufficient tariff to protect the American producer from the cheap products of foreign lands. This has been the consistent policy of the Republican Party since its birth. To this principle I heartily subscribe. The American people, of course, have no ill will toward the people of any other land and wish them every happiness and success. But every American should look to the welfare of his own country first, and not only through personal purchases, but by his vote give every necessary preference to those products produced on American soil, made of American materials, and fashioned into completed shape by American labor.

It has been said that distance lends enchantment, and this seems to be especially true of the Democratic view on trade. That party always seems primarily interested in foreign trade, which is relatively small compared to our gigantic home trade. Foreign trade is desirable when beneficial—not otherwise. To merely send to some foreign country products that can be as well produced in that country, in exchange for products that we can as well produce in this country, does not benefit either country. It merely gives such goods a holiday journey and adds to the cost of the article. While foreign trade should be developed wherever possible, it must not be at the expense of our home market, nor at the expense of American labor or American industry.

The American home market is the greatest in the world; it amounts to twice as much as all the foreign trade of all the nations of the world. Under such circumstances, is it not downright folly to remove needed tariff bars and open this rich field to the cheap labor and cheap lands of other countries?

The United States ordinarily consumes from 90 to 95 percent of its products. Is it not wiser to look to the safety and development of this trade rather than engage in a foolish gamble for the relatively small foreign trade? In this connection let me quote from an editorial in Labor, the official publication of the standard railroad labor organizations:

> Roughly, 93 percent of all that we produce in this country is sold in this country—if sold at all. Only about one-fourteenth of our output, or 7 percent, goes abroad. With these figures in mind, it is easy to see that a 10-percent increase in buying power at home would be worth more to our producers than 100-percent increase in our exports. That is just plain arithmetic.
> The development of buying power at home is in our own hands. No treaties or negotiations are needed. * * * But foreign markets are guarded by barbed-wire entanglements of tariffs, regulations, and subsidies difficult to get through, and with nothing on the other side as rich as the possible market within our own door.
> Labor does not decry foreign trade. The more we get of it on fair terms, the better. But labor knows that foreign markets alone will not bring prosperity; and it knows that many of those who shout for foreign trade are blocking economic reforms at home.

Mr. President, nations, like individuals, ordinarily buy in that market where they can buy to the best advantage. Due to the severe competition among foreign countries, we, with our higher labor and higher production costs, can expect to gain but little from them; but with the restoration of business confidence in this country our gigantic home trade can be revived and materially increased and put the Nation on the road to sound recovery.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is comparing foreign trade with our own domestic trade, stating that the latter far surpasses all foreign trade, taking the world over?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is twice as large, as I understand.

Mr. FESS. I am impressed by the thought that in Europe, with an area perhaps only 500,000,000 square miles more than ours, there are 25 nations which in the aggregate have a much larger population than ours, and each nation has its own tariff barrier; while in this country, spreading over 48 States, we have the largest domestic trade of the world, without a single tariff barrier of any sort between State and State, constituting the freest trade in all the world.

The conditions in Europe do interrupt the free trade of European countries, and they naturally want to get into our great market. If they could get in without displacing the same commodities we produce, we would not care so much, but when we talk about freedom of trade we have a convincing example of it here at home, and the pending proposal is designed to interrupt that situation on behalf of Europe rather than on behalf of ourselves. That is the thing that I think our people are overlooking.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator's statement is absolutely correct. In that connection I should like to refer to a clipping from this morning's Washington Post containing a news item in regard to the address which Mr. Merle Thorpe made in Indianapolis. He refers to the fact that the European nations a short time ago, only about 4 or 5 years ago, sent a commission here to study trade conditions, and they made this report just a few years back:

> With 7 percent of the world's people, the United States has more purchasing power than all Europe combined. This little group has created and owns more than half the world's wealth. From 6 percent of the world's acreage they harvest more than half the world's foodstuffs. Sixty percent of the minerals are extracted in America. Half the communication facilities, nearly half the railways and electrical energy have been developed and are in use here. Individual transportation is triumphantly interpreted in the production of 92 percent of the automobile output, which is operated on 600,000 miles of paved highways.
> This 7 percent maintains a standard of living which consumes half the world's coffee, half of its tin, half of its rubber, one-fourth of its sugar, three-fourths of its silk, one-third of its coal, and two-thirds of its crude petroleum.

Mr. FESS. That is a wonderful showing. If the Senator will yield further——

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The clipping the Senator read referred to the automobile industry. Unfortunately, the leaders of that industry are slipping away from the principles of protection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Under the mistaken impression that they are going to get more trade abroad.

Mr. FESS. Precisely. Because automobiles have come to be the second greatest export products of America, they overlook the fact that nearly 90 percent of all the automobiles they produce will be sold here, and even if they keep up only with the increase of our population it is better not to sacrifice our home market in behalf of buyers in the Old World and in South America. More than that, the replacements here in America of second-hand automobiles by new automobiles will be sufficient to keep the automobile industry going, provided we maintain the buying power of the people here at home. When they have supplied the home market for the moment, they can look abroad to sell the surplus; but they are putting the emphasis on the fraction produced beyond what we consume and are falsely looking to foreign sales and overlooking the sales at home.

I am receiving letter after letter from personal friends of mine who are in the automobile business asking me to support the pending proposal. They are mistaken in what they are asking for, because they are going to sacrifice, in a large measure, the power to sell at home because of the visionary idea that they are going to increase the sales of their product abroad. It is only because the automobile manufacturers have reached the high scale where they have a surplus that they are putting their emphasis on that surplus instead of on supplying the great demand here at home.

I make that statement because there are constantly letters coming to me in this behalf, and there are also other friends who want this bill passed; and I know they would not want it passed if they could realize what they will be in for if they shall sacrifice the home market.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is correct, and I am going to treat that subject further on in the course of my remarks.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. In line with the suggestion as to what we are doing in connection with the pending proposed legislation, I want to quote from the Herald Tribune of this morning an article by George Clarke Cox, in which he says:

> The thesis of what I am writing is that the new deal, which professes such tenderness for the investor, is in a fair way to abolish him altogether.
> Statistical studies under the present state of confusion are not much more valuable than a topographical map of the Mississippi just before a flood.
> The new deal has had these results:
>
> The dollar has been devalued 40 percent, with a legal 10 percent more and an (at present) illegal but possible further devaluation. No one knows.
>
> The gold clause in United States Government bonds has been repudiated, including a large issue immediately after March 4, 1933.
>
> The seizure of gold and the writing up of its price, the removal of the gold to the Treasury from the Federal Reserve System have caused vast confusion as to the backing of all our currency.
>
> Federal Reserve figures are no longer revealing; they conceal facts to which investors are entitled.
>
> Immense increase of funded debt without corresponding Treasury receipts has diluted the value of all Government securities.
> N.R.A. has forced increased costs upon all corporations, often with decreased business; all past computations are rendered unreliable.

The soundest of all corporations under the old deal—viz., operating public utilities—are forced to cut rates, accept larger taxes, meet public competition, etc. The very highest-grade investment securities have been rendered objects of suspicion without any failure on their part.

The next paragraph is one to which I call the particular attention of the Senator from Missouri:

No one knows whether we are to continue to have foreign trade or not.

And that by reason of the confusion which is brought into the whole atmosphere. The next paragraph, which is of particular interest to the State of Missouri and to my State of Iowa, reads:

Processing taxes, bounties to farmers of all kinds, make calculations of profits in various corporations difficult, if not impossible. All previous common law under which business had been conducted seems set aside by Executive order.

That is the reason why it was necessary to have a new Executive order to buy automobiles for the service in the P.W.A. When they found they did not have the authority they got a new Executive order to grant them the authority. In other words, this is a reign of Executive orders.

The profit motive is openly assailed—

As shown by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] in the Tugwell report of yesterday. Tugwell is now sitting in as one of the members of the Executive Policy Committee to direct operations under the new tariff law—

The profit motive is openly assailed, whereas without profit there can be no business and certainly no investing.

This simply shows what is happening with all these new things pressing in on finance, on industry, on every phase of our commercial, industrial, and economic life in this country. It is bringing about a stalemate, the outcome of which no one can foretell.

I think this all fits in with the line of argument which is being presented by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think so, too; and I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Unfortunately the measure now before the Senate will only add to the uncertainty that now pervades the business field, further destroy business confidence, and put further obstacles in the way of sound business recovery.

Enact this measure and Congress suspends a Damocles' sword over every industry needing tariff protection. No such industry could possibly know how long it would be permitted to exist. Any day the news may come that the President has negotiated a treaty taking from such industry that protection without which it cannot exist. Under such uncertainty such industry would only manufacture to meet its immediate needs. With such a threat hanging over it no industry would endeavor to extend its facilities, nor could finances be obtained for such purpose. No new enterprise would dare enter such fields with the knowledge that the stroke of a Presidential pen at any time may wreck the industry and wipe out the capital invested therein. Financial institutions would be slow to grant loans to such industries, and other concerns would hesitate to extend them credit. There is no cost so high to industry as the cost of uncertainty. Let this measure be passed, and it will be impossible to estimate the damage it will cause to American business.

This is not a constructive measure. It is a destructive and ruinous one. It will not build up American industry but will destroy such industry. It will not add to American employment but will decrease such employment. It will not restore business confidence but will further undermine such confidence. No such proposal has ever been submitted to the American people; and I again say that I deny the right of this administration, especially in view of its campaign pledge, to saddle on the backs of the American people this infamous piece of legislation.

Why does this administration completely ignore its pledges to the American people on the tariff question? I have pointed out that one plank in the Democratic platform favored tariff framing free from executive interference, yet the proposed legislation before us is entirely contrary to that plank, and puts arbitrary tariff powers into Executive hands. There is another plank in the 1932 Democratic platform to which I desire to call attention. It is as follows:

We condemn the Hawley-Smoot tariff law, the prohibitive rates of which have resulted in retaliatory action by more than 40 countries, created economic international hostility, destroyed international trade, driven our factories into foreign countries, robbed the farmer of the American markets, and increased the cost of production.

Seldom has there been a more severe indictment of any measure by any political party. I think it will not be questioned that if the Democratic Party believed in its 1932 tariff plank, then this administration was duty bound to take immediate steps to repeal the present tariff law. This administration has now been in power for almost 15 months. No administration in history has been in such complete control of legislation as the present one. Yet not only is the tariff law, so severely denounced by the Democratic platform, still in full force, but not a single step has been taken by the administration to repeal such law. Under such circumstances what becomes of any pretentions the Democratic Party may make on the tariff question and what reliance can be placed on any representations it may make in the future?

The Democratic platform condemned the present tariff law as having resulted in retaliatory measures by more than 40 countries, yet the administration keeps the law on the statute books. The Democratic platform charged this law with creating economic international hostility, yet the administration continues the law in force. The Democratic platform asserted this law had destroyed international trade, yet the administration refuses to repeal the law. The Democratic platform charged that this law had driven our factories into foreign countries, yet the administration continues the policy it claimed was driving American factories abroad. The Democratic platform accused this law of having robbed the farmer of the American markets, yet the administration permits the so-called "robbery" to continue. If this administration believes what the 1932 Democratic platform said about the present tariff law, then it has been guilty of little less than treason in permitting this law to remain on the statute books, a law which it claimed was wrecking and ruining the country.

If the Republicans are to be condemned for enacting a law which they sincerely believed would be of benefit to the country, are not the Democrats to be condemned a thousandfold for permitting a law to remain on the statute books which they claim is ruining the country? But one conclusion can be drawn from the actions of the administration, and that is that the tariff plank in the 1932 Democratic platform was a dishonest declaration, made only to deceive the American people, and that the Democratic criticism of the present tariff law was wholly unjustified.

It may be said in apology that it is the intention to change the present tariff law through the provisions of the bill now before us, but that answer will not do. In the first place, the Democratic platform is expressly opposed to the bill before us; in the second place, no step has been taken to change the present law during the almost 15 months this administration has been in power; in the third place, it would not be practical to correct, through treaty negotiations, the wholesale injustices which are alleged by the Democratic platform to exist in the present tariff law, and it is even possible that not a single change may be made through the channel of such negotiations.

When dreamers begin chasing the foreign trade will-o'-the-wisp, we can expect them to bargain our rights away, and this will likely be the result under this measure. But suppose the American spirit should prevail, and we should insist on obtaining a fair return from abroad for any concessions we may make. Foreign nations would hardly be interested in any such negotiations, and under such circumstances it is possible that no treaties would result. This would leave on the statute books the present Republican protective tariff law, which the Democratic platform denounced so severely and which it charged was responsible for practically all our ills.

The measure now before us is not congressional legislation, for, if left to its own initiative Congress would not give a respectable hearing to any such proposal. It is nothing more or less than a cowardly surrender on the part of Congress to the executive branch of the Government—a course contrary to every American principle.

Let Congress reassert its constitutional prerogatives, and exercise the functions delegated to it by the Constitution. Let me appeal to the Democrats to be fair with the American people, and honestly endeavor to carry out the pledges made by them during the 1932 campaign. If they believe the present tariff law is wrong, they should make an honest attempt to repeal it, but let them do so in the manner provided by the Constitution which every Member of Congress must take an oath to support and defend before he can take his seat. Let us not travel farther along the road which is leading us only to ruin and disaster.

Mr. President, we have reached an epoch in the history of our Nation where expedients of every kind are set forth as palliatives or downright curatives in the domain of our domestic economy. In no other field, however, are so many proposals advanced as in that relating to our trade and commerce with the other nations of the world. They range from what would amount to absolute free trade, through all the gradations of bargaining, swapping, reciprocal deals, and bilateral arrangements to the extreme now proposed of conferring on the Chief Executive the authority to execute commercial treaties with foreign governments regardless of the limitations upon such action prescribed in the Constitution. As sole judge of the feasibility of altering any or all of our tariff schedules, the Executive would have dictatorial power in one of the most essential and vital departments of Government. Such a policy, involving so radical a change in our practices from the foundation of the Republic, so violent an abandonment of the traditions of the country, is not only a threat to our business interests but a menace to our institutions.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator has spoken in rather vigorous language in criticism of the failure to keep a pledge. I share that feeling with him to a considerable degree, and yet I never criticize anyone for changing his position from one Congress to another if new information has been received that formerly was not available, provided the question is merely economic; but if it goes to fundamental principles, and the change is elemental, it becomes serious.

When a party announces a position on a particular subject and later on either changes it, as in the case of the League of Nations, or some new information that originally was not available comes to light, I can excuse a change of position; but when the change goes to the fundamentals of our institutions it becomes terribly serious, and the most serious things is the manner in which the change is treated by those who make it. It is said either that the action is taken because of an emergency or that it is taken in order to be open-minded, progressive, growing. The danger is that even in the fundamentals the breach instead of observance of the promise will become the rule; and, worst of all, those breaking their promises boast of their action as if that were the thing they ought to do.

That is what disturbs me when I see this administration abandoning every fundamental principle it has announced.

Mr. PATTERSON. I agree with the Senator in that respect; and I desire to add that there has been no change in conditions between the time the Democratic Party made the declaration of its purpose with reference to the tariff and the present time.

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. PATTERSON. We are living under practically the same conditions.

There never was born an individual with enough wisdom and knowledge of world affairs to warrant the bestowal on him of such sweeping and autocratic authority as the majority in Congress contemplates conferring on the President.

We know that, when viewed in the perspective and by the light of history, the protective-tariff system, such as America has enjoyed with scant interruption from the first legislative act ever passed by an American Congress down to the present time, has been a real blessing. A protective tariff has ever been the basic doctrine of the Republican Party, and it has been approved by the mass of the people, for even the most unlearned of the population knew that it meant for our workers better wages and higher standards of living, more of the comforts and refinements of living than the wage earners of other lands could ever hope to obtain. Its practical operation meant that the laboring classes here were better fed, better housed, better clothed, than were any others under the sun who depended for their livelihood on manual toil. Our toilers in the United States have been the envy of all who lived by the sweat of the brow; and for that reason millions of human beings in all parts of the Old World flocked to our shores, where they found not only a refuge from oppression but the opportunity to live on a scale of material well-being impossible for them to attain in the land of their nativity.

It is unnecessary to dwell on the thesis of what a transcendent part our protective system played in the development of America. The lesson is plain enough for all to read and it will stand for all time. Credit for upholding this major policy in large part belongs to the Republican Party. In all our political mutations it has never wavered, has never once faltered, has ever kept the faith, and is as insistent upon its maintenance now as when it was first organized. Our opponents can boast of no such record. Theirs has been a record of sniping, of tariff tinkering, and perennial effort to lower the duties on foreign imports below the safety line. They learn nothing; they forget nothing; and today, but under a new guise, they are at their old tricks.

What is the illusion that obsesses our opponents today? Nothing more or less than that prosperity can be recaptured by the simple device of negotiated treaties effected by 1 man for 125,000,000 souls.

The United States does one-half the business of the world; but, as matters now stand, it is done almost entirely among its own nationals. Our foreign trade, which of yore loomed gigantically, is no longer a primary consideration; for our exports in recent years have not exceeded 5 or 6 percent of our total production, if we include in the total the nonexportable items of distribution, transportation, and construction.

Half a century ago 80 percent of all our exports came from the farm, and, of the grand total, cotton alone accounted for more than 50 percent up to the year 1850. During all that period our domestic producers believed they would enjoy a monopoly of this particular crop for all time. Such a monopoly existed for generations, but it does not exist today. The reasons for this are to be found in the constantly growing competition of other lands. That competition has reached the acute stage. Egypt, for years a producer, is this season adding an enormous acreage heretofore planted to other crops. India is making fast strides in the same direction. Brazil and Argentina have entered the list, with the encouragement of their governments. This, of course, does not imply an immediate cessation of foreign demand, but it is not an unreasonable prediction that long before the turn of the century our dealings in raw cotton will not extend beyond our own shores. England's far-flung dominions will supply the "tight little isle", while Germany, Italy, and the rest, including the industrial section of the Orient, will cease getting their cargoes here.

Next in importance in our export trade comes wheat. In the not far-distant past our exportation of this cereal equaled at least 25 percent of the whole production, and wheat farmers profited by the sale of this surplus abroad. Today there is a different story. Australia, Argentina, and Canada have almost crowded our wheat growers off the boards, and our share in that particular market can never be regained. Pursuing a policy of nationalism nigh akin to isolation, many people have embarked on a policy of raising as nearly as possible all the foodstuffs their nationals consumed. Even now Italy lacks little of raising every bushel of wheat needed. Germany is not far behind and England will simply ignore us in favor of the self-governing units of the Empire—Australia and Canada. Britain, indeed, would look to Canada rather than to the United States for its bread supplies and only in case of a crop failure in all three of these countries would she turn to the United States.

The foregoing merely suggests the changes in an ever-changing world. Men in England grieved over the disappearance of the whaling business; the indigo growers sobbed when their product had to yield to synthetic indigo; and, coming down to modern times, the breeders of horses and mules cursed the advent of the automobile. Of all the nations of the earth, we have the least reason for worry or apprehension as to the future. We have a market of our own, a home market that is of such transcendent importance as to dwarf international commerce. The loss to agricultural interests is for the present heavy but will find compensation in natural adjustments. What will remain with us, which no mutations of trade can ever take away, is the home market for such essentials as dairy products, meats, eggs, fruits, and vegetables.

The wheat and cotton farmers are desirous of doing a heavy business both at home and abroad, but they will have to face the fact of changed world conditions. A benign Providence has so ordained that this mighty continent called the United States does not have to look to alien sources for its material necessities. We stand on an enduring basis from natural causes, supplemented by the superior ingenuity and skill of the most efficient workers known to history. With few exceptions, which may almost be counted on the fingers of one hand, this Nation is absolutely independent. Leaving out rubber, coffee, and silk, and a small group of metals, America is self-sufficient as to commodities of magnitude. As to silk, which we buy from China and Japan, an excellent substitute has been found in rayon. Synthetic rubber of undoubted quality will, in the opinion of scientists, take the place of the natural product, so that the only major commodity which we have not yet produced or found a substitute for is the item of coffee, of which we are the world's greatest consumers. Note the fact that not a solitary article of our imports that belong in the catalog of necessities comes from Europe. That quarter of the globe gives us nothing that we really need. The small dependence that does exist is on the Orient, portions of the Near East, and a few islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. As the Senator is very well saying, we note that our export trade is gradually diminishing, not due to tariffs, but due to the stimulation afforded by other countries to the production of the things we produce here, as is illustrated in the case of wheat.

Prior to the World War there were not many wheat-producing countries, but under the fear that the soldiers might starve, the cry went out to all the countries of the world identified with the Allies to grow wheat. The result was that we not only increased our acreage of wheat, but other countries began to grow wheat, and the disaster to us is that they did not discontinue it. After they found they could produce wheat, they began growing to supply their own demands and now are producing wheat to supply other countries which we once supplied. So, as the Senator will recall, only a short time ago a conference was held in Geneva, our country being represented by an ex-Governor of Nebraska, where 11 countries were in session, through their representatives, dealing with the surplus wheat crop, 11 countries, including those which had never previously grown wheat.

Now those countries—11 of them—having a surplus, supply the Liverpool market with wheat grown more cheaply than we can supply it, and due to that fact our chance to dispose of our surplus of wheat in Europe is bound to grow less and less, not on account of tariffs, but on account of these normal forces.

The same thing will occur, as certainly as that we are in this Chamber, in the case of cotton, because of the recent legislation looking to compulsory reduction, which favors the Old World in growing cotton at the expense of the American cotton grower. As once we exported all but 37 percent of our cotton, we are now exporting only about 42 percent. Those exports will decrease under that sort of legislation as certainly as that an effect follows a natural cause.

The idea that it is tariff legislation which causes all this result is perfectly silly, and to give the President such bargaining power, to destroy or reduce any of our American products, in the hope of increasing the imports of an article which other countries wish to sell to us, I think, is unwise in the highest degree. I think the Senator, in emphasizing that point, is on fundamentals in the discussion.

Mr. PATTERSON. I thank the Senator.

In the last analysis, then, why should Americans, looking down from their high point of vantage, be influenced by the zeal of the "new dealers" to swap and bargain and make treaties with nations which in all the tides of time will never be on a parity with us. In an epoch when the Government is harassed with the problem of creating and financing jobs for millions of unemployed, our modern theorists seems to have forgotten that this country has had the worst of it in our foreign financial transactions since the conclusion of the World War; and by this time it must be universally believed by foreign nations that Uncle Sam is a very gullible personage, and they would doubtless be as quick to trade and bargain now as they were to become indebted for enormous sums which they never intended to liquidate.

On the surface it might be easy to make out a case where benefit would accrue from lowering our tariff. We might, for instance, bargain with England to reduce its tariff on automobiles in return for the reduction in the duty we impose on manufactures of cotton. Such a bargain would result in an increased sale of English cotton goods in the United States and cause the mills of Lancashire to employ more operatives and make more money for their owners. In our own country prices in every line of cotton goods would fall, and many of our textile plants would have to reduce wages sharply, while some would be forced out of business, with hundreds of employees thrown out of work.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have been interrupting entirely too much in this debate, perhaps, but if the Senator will permit me a moment, I understand a news report has been received regarding the Colombian Treaty. I have been unable to consult the newspapers this morning, having just come into the Chamber, but I understand there is such a report, which gives the information that it has been found from some source that the Colombian Treaty deals with tropical fruits and oil produced in Colombia, and some other products of that kind, which are to be brought into this country.

I understand the treaty is not to be sent to us, but if I am correctly informed there is some kind of an export tariff in force down in Colombia—I am not as familiar with it, perhaps, as I should be—and under this treaty the export charges on the fruits to be brought out of Colombia will be abrogated, and the Colombian people will thereby be enabled to bring their tropical fruits into the United States without having to pay the export charges ordinarily imposed on them by Colombia.

Mr. President, if that be true, then California and Florida and Texas might as well get ready to sacrifice their fruit business. That goes without saying.

Furthermore, we are undertaking to restrict oil production in the United States, due to the fact that the supply is now in excess of the demand. Some want an oil dictator over the industry in order to reduce the production. Yet if this reciprocal tariff is to be put into effect, we will on the one hand have an administrator curbing American production, and a reciprocal tariff permitting the importation of foreign-produced oil.

Of course, I am not advised completely regarding that matter, but it seems as if we are working at cross purposes, at one time attempting to restrict American production in order to bring the supply down to the demand, and with the left hand negotiating a treaty with Colombia in order to bring more of the oil of that country in.

In another direction we are undertaking to curb agricultural production, even of fruits, and at the same time negotiating with Colombia with the left hand to bring in their tropical fruits, naturally to the disadvantage of the American fruit producers.

It looks as if the whole thing, with this kind of a bill being urged, is at cross purposes. Waiving the point as to whether it has been wise to attempt to restrict domestic production, at least if it is necessary to restrict domestic production, we should not be negotiating with a foreign country to bring in foreign products at the same time.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I was referring to the possibility of a bargain with England to reduce its tariff on automobiles in return for a reduction in duties we impose on manufactures of cotton.

It is no answer to say that the automobile plants of Detroit might obtain more English orders for automobiles. Such a plan would diminish our home market, as the former workers in the textile mills would no longer be in a position to buy. This would affect thousands of textile workers in the factories of New England and the South, who would be thrown out of employment. These unfortunates cannot be shifted en masse from their homes to the scene of the automobile industry, and none but a mind that revels in dreams can advocate such impractical dealings.

Another argument advanced for lowering our duties is found in our position as a creditor nation. On the supposition that we do lower our tariffs or make reciprocal trade agreements, while the effect would allow our foreign debtors to pay off their obligations, it would by no means guarantee any considerable increase of their purchases from us, and wanting this assurance, we would get the worst of the bargain. The injury done our workers deprived of their jobs through the influx of imported goods would far outweigh the benefit to some American holders of foreign bonds. It would sacrifice the many for the advantage of the minority, who employ their money in investments abroad.

The manifest lesson is to push aside the doctrinaires and rainbow chasers, who think only in terms of internationalism—visionaries who seem ignorant of the fact that the United States, with not over one-thirtieth of the entire population of the world, does one-half of the whole world's business. We should concentrate more than ever on developing our own colossal home markets. We should give every American industry the protection that it needs to protect our higher standards of living. While we should develop our foreign trade wherever possible, we should not do so at the expense of our own home market. The home market is twice as large in volume as the foreign trade of all of the nations of the world. We owe it to ourselves to push aside the rainbow delusions of international contacts. Our happy fate is to keep in the van of all mankind simply by nursing our own advantages. All else is but a phantom.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3025) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 2837) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 9530. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Pierce, a legal subdivision of the State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Puget Sound, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as "The Narrows"; and

H.J.Res. 345. Joint resolution to provide funds to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of the acts approved April 21, 1934, and April 7, 1934, relating, respectively, to cotton and to cattle and dairy products, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to interrupt the tariff debate for only a moment, but it seems necessary to make a statement respecting a contemporary matter.

In connection with recent unsavory political disclosures in Michigan, I was particularly incensed at the suggestion that the administration of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was being prostituted to political cash-register purposes. The suggestion arose from published quotations of entirely reliable and trustworthy business men of Plymouth, Mich., who said they were approached by Mr. George Woods, secretary to the recently resigned United States collector of internal revenue at Detroit, who also serves as Democratic national committeeman from Michigan, and solicited for contributions for Democratic campaign funds and for certain other lobbying purposes.

In connection with other amazing proposals, described by this reputable citizen of Plymouth and attributed to Mr. Woods in these newspaper reports, was the following quotation in connection with the solicitation of funds:

> You know that all applications for deposit insurance pass over this desk.

This citizen of Plymouth, who helped raise some of this money sought by Woods is thereupon quoted as follows:

> We felt that we were in a tight spot. Our two banks had just gotten going, and we were very anxious to qualify for Federal insurance. We didn't know, of course, whether Woods spoke with authority, but we felt that we couldn't afford to take any chances.

It was by such methods as these that the political pot was said to be raised. I do not at the moment discuss some of the other methods. But in fairness to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and in order that banks may know authoritatively that they need not surrender to any such political chiseling, I feel that this particular episode should be extended in the RECORD.

I submitted the proposition this week to Hon. Leo Crowley, Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. He says for himself in a letter dated May 23:

> I would not countenance any interference with the operation of this Corporation from outside sources, believing that all applications for membership to the fund should be considered strictly on their merits, with fair and equitable treatment to all.

From my own observation of Mr. Crowley and his colleagues, I state my own complete belief in the integrity of this statement.

Mr. Crowley goes farther. He submits to me a supplemental memorandum from Mr. H. N. Stronck, assistant to the director of the Corporation, and in intimate charge of membership applications last December when this disgusting episode occurred. Mr. Stronck says:

> Based upon my personal experience and observations, I can safely state that I know of no case where—
> 1. Any of the activities of the F.D.I.C. in connection with the admission of the banks were subject to any form of political censorship.
>
> 2. That no applications for insurance in Michigan or in any other State were submitted by this Corporation to Democratic national committeemen.
> 3. That neither in Michigan nor elsewhere were Democratic national committeemen or any other political officers consulted with or advice asked as to the qualifications of banks for admission to the insurance fund, and that the cases were decided strictly upon technical and legal requirements.

Mr. President, I have wanted to make this statement for the RECORD because of the utter importance that no suggestion of a shadow should rest upon the administration of the sacred trust involved in the protection of the bank accounts of the American people through this new and amazingly effective instrumentality of government. Here, certainly, is one point where it would be near treason for political exploitation to enter.

I cherish the hope that if any political highjackers shall so far trespass upon the hopes and fears of those who must deal with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as to renew this type of chiseling anywhere in the United States, this forthright statement from the responsible officers of the F.D.I.C. will serve to reassure the intended victims that they need pay no heed or tribute to any such collectors.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Lonergan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	Long	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	McNary	Thompson
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Tydings
Byrd	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gore	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Carey	Hastings	Overton	Walsh
Clark	Hatch	Patterson	Wheeler
Connally	Hatfield	Pittman	White
Copeland	Hayden	Pope
Costigan	Hebert	Reynolds

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] is detained by illness, and that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] are necessarily detained.

I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, the Constitution, under the present administration a badly manhandled document, vests in the Congress, as the representatives of all of the people, jurisdiction over the economic life of the country, a power which the people of Connecticut would not have transferred to a single person or group of persons.

The pending reciprocal tariff bill is an invasion of the sovereignty of the people of my State and of all the States to which I cannot become a party. It is too nearly akin to "taxation without representation" to be acceptable to the New England which was so active in throwing off such a yoke and aided in giving to the country the Constitution which has sufficed for all of our needs until the advent of the present administration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I desire to know if at this time we could not ask someone who is in authority what is going to be the disposition of our application for the Colombia Treaty. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit an interruption so I can ask that question?

Mr. WALCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. My friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], or the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], perhaps, can inform me. I want to get in the RECORD, if I can, a statement as to just what is going to be done with reference to the request for the production of that treaty.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Louisiana made a very respectful request for it on yesterday.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I object to any consideration of the matter at this time.

Mr. LONG. I want to get the record straight. May I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi? The Senator from Mississippi responded the other day with the suggestion that he thought the State Department would send this treaty here provided the Republic of Colombia did not object, and the Republic of Colombia was being asked by the State Department if it was all right.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that country has been asked whether or not there would be objection. Of course, the rule is that both countries simultaneously publish a treaty or agreement when it is made, but I do not like to have the discussion on the pending bill diverted by a discussion of another subject matter.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to inform the Senator from Mississippi that I have information that that is not what is withholding the treaty. Since the Senator made that statement, I have been reliably informed that it is not on that ground that the State Department is withholding the treaty, but on other grounds. That is why I was hoping to get an authoritative statement in the RECORD on the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall object to any consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, Connecticut is not willing to yield the power of economic life and death to theorists or to the executive branch of the Government. It cannot be justified as an emergency measure; it cannot be demanded of the Congress as necessary for the general welfare of the country if we are to rely upon the expressions of Democratic leaders in such matters who have complained that the flexible tariff itself is an invasion of State rights; it is perhaps then merely to appease the vanity of a Chief Executive and his advisers that each plank in their party platform had been dealt with and the promise of action redeemed.

Mr. President, Connecticut is not willing to yield the power of economic life and death to theorists or to the executive branch of the Government. It cannot be justified as an emergency measure; it cannot be demanded of the Congress as necessary for the general welfare of the country if we are to rely upon the expressions of Democratic leaders in such matters who have complained that the flexible tariff itself is an invasion of State rights; it is perhaps then merely to appease the vanity of a Chief Executive and his advisers that each plank in their party platform had been dealt with and the promise of action redeemed.

It may well be argued if we have not faith in our Chief Executive, the country is in pretty bad shape. On that basis it can be said that if he were personally to administer the law we are being called upon to enact, all would be well. But he cannot do all of this, and necessarily he must delegate the duties imposed under this bill to subordinates, probably men who never have been engaged for a single day in actual industrial pursuits, but who view the intricacies of the tariff from textbook knowledge.

Connecticut is too highly industrialized to view other than with extreme perturbation the surrender of their rights under the Constitution to those who are selected, not those who are elected. The practice of tariff logrolling, which has been decried here, at least gives opportunity for the duly elected representatives of the people of my own and the other States to have a voice in the matter.

It is not the demand nor yet the wish of our people that we build up a Chinese wall of import prohibitions, but it is asked that we have that degree of protection for our industries and our workers that will neutralize the trade advantages of the Old World and the Orient in particular accruing from cheap labor.

The pending legislation is neither of an emergency character nor necessary for the carrying out of the President's recovery program. We talk about "Yankee trading" to be made possible under the operation of this bill. The President already has as much power under the National Industrial Recovery Act as the pending bill proposes to accord him, and the administration should be satisfied to rest with that instead of seemingly going out of its way to keep industry and labor stirred up with indications of undertaking by new and devious ways to remake the economic structure of the country.

The question of our right to delegate these tariff- and treaty-making powers to the executive branch of the Government has been covered admirably and completely by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in his address before the Senate last Thursday, dealing with the constitutional issue the bill involves. Aside from this, there is no need for me to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of the proposal. The tariff is a revenue measure; it is a tax measure; and, as such, originates in the other House. From the early days of our existence as an independent nation the House of Representatives has originated tariff proposals and has set forth specifically the amount of tax which must be levied on goods coming into our ports from foreign countries. We may well doubt the constitutionality of the pending measure. It has not been successfully contended here that the President is not being given power which is exclusively reserved by the Constitution to Congress.

We must not, in our deliberations, compare the pending proposal with the flexible provisions contained in our present tariff act. Under the present act, whenever a change in a duty is contemplated, the Tariff Commission makes thorough and impartial investigations in this country and abroad, and after full public hearings, at which may appear those who are specifically interested, makes recommendations to the President. The bill now under discussion, on the other hand, permits the President, after a hearing which bids fair to amount to little more than an advance warning of doom, to change any duty. Of course, it cannot be conceived that he proposes to revise these duties upward. There is no provision for consideration by Congress, whose prerogative it is under the Constitution to levy taxes.

The Senator from Idaho has said that "the integrity of constitutional government has never meant so much to the average American citizen, to those whom Lincoln was wont to call 'the common people', as in this very hour." I feel that he is right. There are those who are becoming increasingly willing to blink at disregard for the Constitution.

The question of how our welfare will be affected, what we shall have to lose or gain by authorizing the negotiation of reciprocal tariff treaties is a complex one, and is bound up with broad questions of national policy throughout the entire period of our existence as a nation. Our domestic market is the prize which is put at stake, and has been put at stake by all attempts at alteration of our tariff policy.

No nation trades entirely within itself, but the form, variety, and purchasing power of domestic consumers differ greatly. Even today, the United States has the largest, the most varied, and in consuming capacity the best domestic market of any nation in the world, and the one which every other nation most desires to penetrate.

Our domestic market is the largest free-trade area in the world. Neither Russia, China, India, nor any similar physical areas can be compared with the United States, because of the small buying power of their population and the numerous natural restrictions on intercourse, due to lack of communication. Europe alone has similar physical proportions to ours, but the buying power of a larger European population within a similar physical area varies, and, on the average, is much less than ours, without equal facilities for communication. Moreover, we have free intercourse between 48 States, several of which are greater in physical area than is any one of the European nations save Russia. The customs barriers erect stockades which divide the European area into cloistered markets so small that, in the case of Belgium, a highly industrialized state, trains cross its area in the same period of time required for passage through Massachusetts.

Under these conditions there is no comparison between the United States, without a customs barrier between the Atlantic and the Pacific, or Canada and Mexico, and a Europe checkered with independent sovereignties, each operating under a separate customs system necessitating continuous negotiation and bargaining to find outlets for states which must export the greater part of their production and import many of their necessities for both living and defense.

Here 67 percent of our imports enter free. England alone, among European states, shows a larger figure of free importations.

Secretary Wallace says we must choose between contraction of our foreign trade and a declining capacity to use our excess of production. The intimation is that plenty threatens us with poverty. We must, he intimates, check industry and throttle inventive progress in order to preserve agriculture, or open our domestic market to an enlarged exchange for foreign goods, and thus limit our industrial production by the amount of our importations.

In the past, events have not shaped themselves in accordance with this conclusion. Fiske's Critical Period of American History shows that in the period between the Yorktown surrender and the adoption of the Constitution our markets were flooded with British goods, which took our hard money and threatened to leave us dependent for defense and domestic security on imports. We were still the victims of Chatham's declaration that "the Colonies should not be permitted to make a horseshoe or a hobnail for themselves." Yet we did not prosper.

The first act of the First Congress was the passage of the famous tariff bill suggested by Hamilton's report. The Colonies, threatened with bankruptcy and fiscal chaos, began to transform household industries into the beginnings of the industrial system.

America chose to secure economic independence through the development of industry. One State after another did everything to encourage domestic manufacture and create a new sense of economic independence. Invention, through manufacture, made possible the development of agriculture on an equally independent basis. Before Eli Whitney's cotton gin, it took the labor of one slave 1 day to separate a pound of lint from seed. A Connecticut Yankee founded the kingdom of cotton, for, at the adoption of the Constitution, less than 500 bales of cotton were exported from the United States annually.

With the development of cotton as its staple, the South became almost wholly agricultural, living on exports, while the North became industrial, and the irrepressible conflict that followed had its foundation partly in the divergence of sentiment in a section dependent on imports in exchange for cotton, with comparatively little development of manufacture.

A Wallace in the South would then have argued that the South must choose whether to be agricultural or industrial. Whereas, since the Civil War, the South has written its own answer in terms of both agricultural and industrial development, balancing the competition of other sources of cotton with its own manufacturing product.

Again, during the Civil War, McCormick, by the invention of the combined reaper and harvester, applied machinery to agriculture, released men to the Army and yet, with lessened numbers of workers, fed the North and had food for export. This had never occurred before in the history of civil war.

The fundamental trouble with the Wallace theory is that it does not recognize the fact that our population operates under a continuing exchange of goods and services, using money and credit as the intermediary. Disturbance of the balance in production and distribution requires its restoration; otherwise all business will suffer. But the production itself is the source of wealth, and our choice is not made between national and international trade, but between developing and sustaining a domestic market, unique in character, while seeking all forms of foreign trade in exchange for the things we need and have not, without risking our capacity to produce and supply our own needs for domestic consumption, convenience, and defense.

It is too late to say that America must choose. America made her choice when she elected to follow Hamilton's recommendation and develop domestic manufacturing industry. Our great cities, our great manufacturing plants are the consequences of that choice. Our present growth and population are its byproducts and, at the same time, the source of the market for our agricultural products. If we attempt now to demolish a structure which we have fostered for over 150 years, which is inherent in the character of the national life we have developed, we shall indeed have an appalling heap of ruins.

Some idea of the preponderant importance of our domestic market as compared with our foreign market may be obtained from the following figures for the year 1929, when exports were at their height as a result of artificial stimulation because of our heavy foreign loans:

United States exports for this year ($5,157,000,000) amounted to 6 percent of the estimated national income for that year ($83,032,000,000);

They amounted to scarcely 2.5 percent of our domestic trade in commodities, excluding all transactions on the commodity exchanges (approximately $200,000,000,000);

They amounted to less than 2 percent of ordinary and original transactions in goods and services in the United States, excluding all transactions on commodity and stock exchanges, direct wage and salary payments ($275,000,000,000).

They amounted to a little more than 0.5 percent of total bank debits to individual accounts during the same year ($935,000,000,000).

Even after the elimination of all purely speculative transactions, it is probable that the total value of our exports in 1929 was considerably less than 1 percent of our entire domestic trade.

The significance of these facts was well recognized a year ago, when, through the operations of the N.R.A. and the A.A.A., we embarked on a course of building up our domestic market and price scales to a high level, with the intent of placing embargoes, if need developed, on foreign commodities the influx of which in any way threatened this plan. It is now proposed to dash to the opposite extreme or to operate both plans simultaneously at cross purposes.

I thought in the beginning that Connecticut was due for slaughter under the pending bill. I am now convinced that there is not a single State in the Union which may not be due for slaughter. I am convinced that as great a country as ours cannot permit a single man, no matter how competent and trustworthy, to trade its industries and its agriculture for the benefit of foreign countries and agriculture.

We have not been able to obtain from the administration's sponsors of the bill the details of any of the contemplated operations thereunder. We hear from the administration's leaders in the Senate that the Hawley-Smoot tariff rates, which many of these leaders aided in putting into the law, must be lowered in order to allow the entry of foreign products to permit of the balancing of trade relations between the United States and the rest of the world.

This is very well in theory, but is not practical of operation as long as in this country we prescribe minimum wages under the President's reemployment agreement and the industrial codes, ban child labor, fix maximum and minimum hours of labor, and otherwise seek to maintain our workers on the high plane which our civilization provides.

That this is recognized by the administration is made manifest by the steps being taken to aid coded industries faced with extermination by imports from the cheap-production countries of the world.

We hear the cry of trade barriers, but what are the facts? The domestic production of lead pencils was threatened by an ever-increasing flow of imports from Japan. The domestic manufacturers could not compete, even with the supposedly protective-tariff rate of the Hawley-Smoot law, with pencils which sold to the trade at less than the cost of production in the United States of like articles. Their complaint was found justified, and the Government stepped in and applied a quota to Japan under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The cotton-rug industry truly is threatened with extermination. Whereas 4 years ago the imports from Japan of the highly popular chenille rugs totaled in the neighborhood of 300,000 square yards annually, if the tide be not stemmed this year the total will reach something like 2,000,000 square yards. We are being swamped with hit-and-miss rugs, as a peculiar type of rug is known, but these being in wider use, we are willing to permit as much as 2,000,000 square yards per year to enter the United States.

To permit the unrestricted entry of chenille rugs into the country, even with the payment of the much-criticized Hawley-Smoot tariff rate, would wipe out the investment and employment in that industry. It is reliably reported that the United States Tariff Commission has found that it is desirable, from the standpoint of domestic economy, to limit these importations to a maximum of about 600,000 square yards and necessary to employ an import fee, additional to the tariff, to equalize the difference in production costs at home and in Japan as nearly as possible under the circumstances.

The Orient is not the only section of the world against which we must further protect ourselves. There is another character of cotton rugs that are popular in the United States, known as "cotton orientals." They come from France, Belgium, and Italy, and they are being imported in increasing quantities. So dangerous has become the competition of these imports that, I am reliably informed, the President now has in contemplation the imposition of an import fee additional to the present rate of duty, for the protection of the domestic industry.

These are examples, though not particularly outstanding in character, of the matters with which the President has been called upon to deal—not the President himself, for he has had to delegate these matters to the United States Tariff Commission, a body set up for the specific purpose of dealing with import questions. Public hearings were held at which both the domestic manufacturing and the import interests were permitted to present their cases at length. Some of the rug importers, I am told, were represented at the hearings by James W. Bevans as counsel, one-time Chief of the Customs Bureau in the Treasury.

Some time ago, perhaps even before the National Industrial Recovery Act became operative to the plate-glass industry, the United States Tariff Commission made an investigation of the plate-glass tariff. It has been reported that the results of the study of the Commission experts indicated probable justification for rate reduction. Then came the agreements for minimum wages and maximum hours under the codes. The picture underwent a complete change. Not only was the alleged competitive margin, favorable to the United States, wiped out, but it was made apparent to the President by his advisers that the suggested rate cutting was unwarranted.

I do not understand that the revised report has reached the President. I am told that it will show a need for the maintenance of the present rates for the protection of the industry and the continuance of employment.

I have tried diligently to secure some idea of what commodities are intended for trading. The advocates of this bill will not reveal them specifically; but at the hearing before the Ways and Means Committee the chairman of the Tariff Commission, at the conclusion of his presentation, submitted a list of "dutiable articles more or less competitive with respect to which foreign countries present advantages." Time does not permit a complete review of all of these commodities, or even a considerable proportion of them; but I should think every Member of the Senate would want to look into this list very carefully, for he will find in it commodities in which he is vitally interested. I am going briefly to discuss one or two; and at this point I desire permission to print as an appendix to my remarks a comparative statistical statement, put together by our Department of Labor, showing the relative wages on given articles of manufacture between the chief countries that are now in competition with the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The matter referred to appears at the end of Mr. WALCOTT's remarks.)

Mr. WALCOTT. Watch movements are on this list. The State of Connecticut was the birthplace of American manufacture of the clock and the watch. The State is still a major producer of these commodities, and hundreds of people are employed in their production. Competing countries are Germany, Italy, and Switzerland. Switzerland, I understand, desires to enter into a reciprocal-tariff agreement with the United States. It has watches and clocks to trade for wheat. It also has optical goods and other commodities; but unless the country can make a deal on its clocks and watches there is not much use in negotiating. If the President wants to trade, he will have to trade on these commodities, and the cheap labor of Switzerland, Germany, and Italy will drive the higher-priced labor of Connecticut out of employment, and into what? Probably into agriculture, and the resulting increase of our farm surpluses.

Take silk fabrics, for example, which are also on this list, and of which Connecticut is a large producer. The great Cheney plant of South Manchester is known throughout the world for its silk products, and yet this item appears on the "doomed" list. If the President desires to enter into negotiations with Italy or Japan, he will have to talk silk. The silk code, which was in effect imposed upon the silk industry under the N.R.A., provides for a $13 minimum-pay rate in the North. That is the very minimum weekly wage which can be paid in a Connecticut mill. As a matter of fact, and as all Senators know, the prevailing weekly wages are much higher.

Now let us look at Japan.

A female silk reeler, on the basis of February 1934 exchange, got 21 cents a day (60 sen); a silk thrower, 94 sen, or 28 cents per day; a silk weaver, 138 sen, or 41 cents per day. England, with a lower wage scale than ours and without an N.R.A., could not stand the competition and was compelled to put an embargo on Japanese goods.

I am informed that the present tariff rates on cotton and silk piece goods and many other commodities produced in quantity by Japan are too low to keep them out, and that particularly with the more wide-spread adherence to the N.R.A. codes and the action of Great Britain, we may look for tremendous Japanese competition; and yet, unless the President will trade on these commodities with Japan there will be no trade. Will his advisers present to him facts and figures which will be designed to convince him that American labor can compete with the 21-cent silk reeler or a 25-cent-a-day cotton spinner in Japan?

I wish time permitted more detailed analyses of some of these comparative wage rates. The figures which I have already given and those which I shall hereafter give concerning Japan are based on the monthly report on current economic conditions published by the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce and Industry and reprinted in the United States Monthly Labor Review of December 1932.

Let us see what Japan would do to our metal industries. A lathe operator in Japan gets 5.23 yen, or $1.57 per day, based upon February 1934 exchange. A founder gets 3.07 yen, or 92 cents a day; a patternmaker gets 4.42 yen, or $1.33 per day. No Senator who is familiar with Japanese labor conditions will contend that the daily wages which I have named are for a 6- or 8-hour day or on the basis of a 40-hour week. In many cases they are based on a workday lasting from sunrise to sunset.

Connecticut is a considerable producer of pocket cutlery, safety razors, dolls and toys, of woven-wire cloth, of cosmetics, toilet preparations, machine-made laces, and many other commodities on this list. Suppose the President decides that he will enter into negotiations with Italy. Italy, as Senators know, is a great industrial country; and her dictator has but recently issued an order which has for its purpose the reduction of wages so as to place "Italy in a better position to compete with other countries in the world market." That is quoted from Mussolini's own speech. On the other hand, we have increased wages and shortened hours. Either Mussolini is wrong or President Roosevelt is wrong with respect to the proper policy to restore national prosperity.

Personally, I applaud the raising of wages and the shortening of hours to a reasonable degree; but it is not difficult for me to see that if Italy is reducing its wages, and if our President makes a tariff agreement with Italy, the American working men and women are certain to lose out. Italy is willing and anxious to export its hats and rayon goods into this country. If the President is not able to trade on rayon, edible nuts, olive oil, and other Italian commodities, Italy will not trade. It does not require unusual vision to foresee the effect of placing the workers of a coded industry in competition with the low-standard workers of Europe and the Orient.

It is not humanly possible for the President to review personally the hardships which will be caused by any treaties which he might negotiate. Even if we were certain of the wisdom of his advisers, we could not, while these great experiments of recovery are being conducted, rightly place in his hands an unwarranted power.

We know that the American manufacturer and farmer are in a hopeless predicament whenever the advisers of the President suggest that a certain industry is a nonessential industry. I cannot review the list of Connecticut industrial and agricultural products without a feeling of deep apprehension when I know that these low-pay foreign countries are straining at their borders, anxious to leap a new tariff barrier and get into a market which, under the reciprocal-tariff plan, would be defenseless to prevent their inroads.

Under section 3 (e) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the President, on his own motion, or if any labor organization or any trade or industrial association or group which has complied with the N.R.A. requirements shall make complaint that any articles are being imported into the United States in substantial quantities or increasing ratio to domestic production or any competitive article, may cause an immediate investigation to be made by the Tariff Commission. The President may then prescribe the terms, conditions, fee payments, and limitations subject to which these articles may be imported. He may even forbid the importation of such articles unless the importer shall first obtain a license from the Secretary of the Treasury. Domestic producers are just beginning to learn of the existence of that section, and it is being utilized. The question is, Does that section mean anything? Was it a mere bait held out to the domestic producers to secure their approval of the N.R.A.? Does the President mean to nullify the effect of that section through the passage of the reciprocal-tariff bill? American producers are most apprehensive, for they realize that the struggles which they have made to conform to the N.R.A. requirements can be rendered futile by the stroke of a pen.

Even our debased currency offers no protection against the inroads of foreign competition. The President advocated the devaluation of the dollar as a means of opening up new markets abroad for American products. Why, Mr. President, resort to that scheme does not even guarantee our own markets to our own people. This is evidenced by the increase in imports that is noted.

Business is always sensitive to legislation affecting corporations, and suspicious that any legislation directly or indirectly affecting any given industry has been designed to curtail the freedom of action of that industry. This is particularly true during a depression, when business has been crowded down to a low ebb by unfavorable economic conditions.

It would be difficult to think of anything better calculated to put a damper upon the employers and employees of the manufacturing industries of the United States now enjoying protection from the ruinously low labor costs of foreign countries than to throw into the legislative arena at this time a bill which definitely and specifically provides for secret agreements, secretly arrived at, without any opportunity in advance of the conclusion of the agreement for interested parties to have a word to say against the terms of the agreement, knowing full well that the power has been lodged in the hands of one man, who usually knows little of business, and who may easily be influenced largely by political prejudice.

Let us turn to a copy of the North American Review for October 1909 and recall what President Woodrow Wilson said with regard to secret agreements in arriving at tariffs:

> It is the policy of silence and secrecy, indeed, with regard to the whole process that makes it absolutely inconsistent with every standard of public duty and political integrity.

That expression appears toward the close of a learned article considering how futile secret methods of approach always have proved to be with relation to tariff agreements.

This bill makes it possible for the President of the United States to declare operative an arrangement called a "reciprocal agreement" with any competitor nation on earth whereby any home industry in this country may be deprived of one-half of the protection which that industry is now enjoying.

Suppose any of the hundreds of items manufactured in New England in the brass or copper industry: the small hardware and cutlery industry; woodworking and machine tools; spare parts for automobiles, like radiators, meters, springs, clocks, and wire wheels; watches; laces; manufactured silks, all now enjoying reasonable protection, but not now making even reasonable profits, should be attacked by having 50 percent of their protection which now exists ruthlessly removed. What would become of these industries? They could no longer exist. The resulting loss to the employees and to the communities in which they are located would be disastrous.

The point I wish to emphasize in all this is the pall of uncertainty, like a black cloud, which this bill would spread over the industry of these United States, still bordering upon panic, still unable to completely throw off the fear caused by the nightmare of depression from which it is still struggling to emerge. I repeat, that I can think of nothing so perfectly calculated to paralyze New England's industries with fear as the dread uncertainties this proposed legislation would create, and I personally believe that some of the uncertainties would be converted into realities.

Let us look for a moment at the other side of this picture, to which allusion was frequently made during the hearings before the Finance Committee, the possibility of raising duties upon articles of necessity which are not produced in this country. This advance or increase in tariff might amount to 50 percent, just as the reduction might amount to 50 percent, without the approval of Congress, which was set up by our Constitution as a regulatory body, a balance wheel, a brake upon the usurpation of autocratic powers by the President.

The enactment of this bill would reverse a long-established American tariff policy. With the exception of certain concessions to Cuba, we have made no discriminations among foreign nations with respect to the tariff over a long period. This policy has saved us from trade wars of the sort which, in foreign countries, have led to the most severe international entanglements. They have resulted in complications in the relations of the countries of Europe which have added to the flames of an all too threatening universal discord and struggle.

It must be remembered that agricultural products would be in the front line of those to be affected by negotiations of the sort contemplated. If their effect should be to drive the industrial workers to the farms and the farmers away from the farms, it is difficult to see just how we should find occupations for that portion of our working population that is even now idle.

As a practical proposition, the attempts to establish a reciprocal tariff system have proved rather futile in the past. Before our present policy of international impartiality with reference to tariff rates was adopted, 22 reciprocal tariff treaties were under consideration at one time or another in our history. Our own Congress refused to confirm 16 of these. The foreign governments affected refused to confirm two more of them. In the case of our one previous experience in negotiating such treaties without the requirement of congressional confirmation, 22 treaties were successfully negotiated, only to be repealed after a short time by subsequent tariff acts. When it comes to the point of actually taking the step of ruining a domestic industry, the obvious immediate disadvantage is apt to prevent its consummation. This seems to leave us the choice of either ruin to a particular industry or ineffectiveness.

It seems needless to say that the very uncertainty that would overhang the possible negotiations would probably act as an additional pall over the reestablishment of normal business relations, which have already had too many setbacks, and which it is our aim to encourage in every way. Without actually creating new outlets for industry, we would be continually creating shifts which would add to our industrial chaos and only tend to send industry back into its shell. It would be one more experiment of the type of which we have been witnessing a continuous succession, with little more resultant improvement than was to be expected in the natural course of events, and no more than other countries which have not resorted to experimentation have experienced.

There is one experiment we have not tried since business has definitely turned the corner. That is, leaving it alone for a little while to solve its own destiny. If this experiment were given the trial that has been given innumerable others, I suspect that it might show the most gratifying results of any of them.

I cannot bring my remarks to a close without reemphasizing the very strong objections to the inadequacy of the provision calling for a public hearing. This provision has been drawn stipulating only that public notice shall be given of the intent to negotiate a treaty with a foreign country or instrumentality thereof. In our history we could point to many statutes containing similar provisions. In fact, the tariff act contains a provision similar to the one proposed and under a long line of decisions of our customs tribunals. It has been held sufficient, when the collector of customs posts a notice of the liquidation of an entry on a bulletin board of the customhouse, to start the time running within which the interested parties must appeal to the courts for a review of the collector's decision or lose the right to appeal. This kind of notice, as I have stated, the courts have sustained as sufficient, but if it was the intent of the proponents of this bill to provide a real hearing to the parties interested, let me point to a precedent in the Tariff Act of 1930. In section 336, the flexible-tariff provision, we provided:

> The Commission, * * * upon application of any interested party, shall investigate the differences in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article. In the course of the investigation the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence and to be heard at such hearings. The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section.

Section 4 of the proposed bill contains a provision in comparable language, yet the line of decisions I have referred to certainly would not apply, and I daresay that no court would compel a complete disclosure of the commodities to be treated or would guarantee to the parties interested a reasonable opportunity to be heard and present evidence.

The foregoing shows clearly that the provision in section 4 of this act is not even as specific as the provision relating to hearings in the Tariff Act of 1930, for this bill only provides for—

> Such public notice of the intention to negotiate an agreement with such government or instrumentality (thereof) shall be given in order that any interested person may have an opportunity to present his views to the President or to such agency as the President may designate under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

This means that a producer, frightened by a public notice of the intention to negotiate an agreement with a foreign government involving some item of commerce which he was manufacturing or raising, might come to Washington and express his fears without knowing the terms which were to be discussed or anything about the proposed agreement, sounding his alarms in the dark. There is not one word in this bill to compel the President, in his public notice, to disclose the commodities to be covered by a proposed treaty with any particular country or to disclose the items on the other side of the trade or to give more than 1 day's notice. In a word, an aggrieved farmer or manufacturer would have nothing to talk of but his fears and might consider himself fortunate if he had time enough to reach Washington, under the notice provision, to present these; and he would probably be compelled by the rules and regulations of the President to present these fears to some obscure commission or person who would give him scant attention, for he would have nothing specific to talk about. Section 4 of this bill is the rag to be tied over the eyes of the farmer, the manufacturer, and the workingman in a game of blindman's buff.

The history of our various attempts at reciprocal trade agreements, the spirit of intense nationalism which has entered the body politic of every civilized nation of the earth as an aftermath of the World War, the insurmountable trade barriers which have completely sectionalized Europe and split Europe into so many small countries, most of them not as large as many of our States, with the Chinese walls of bitter racial persecutions and intense national rivalries, all indicate that this bill is peculiarly ill-timed and cannot be made to work to our advantage. I regret that this is true. It is a sad admission, but a fact; and it would be unwise to attempt to do now what might have proved a great boon to our foreign relations and trade if it had been successful when tried 30 and 40 years ago; unwise because of the shock to industry, still emaciated and trembling from the blow of economic depression.

I repeat my request for the printing in the RECORD of a list I have received from the Department of Labor giving a comparison of wages paid in the United States and in foreign countries, in order to substantiate my contentions with regard to the need of protection for American wage levels.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington.

WAGES IN THE COTTON, SILK, PORCELAIN, AND ELECTRICAL INDUSTRIES OF THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES

The accompanying tables show the latest statistics available relative to wages and hours in the cotton, silk, porcelain, and electrical industries of the United States and foreign countries. Insofar as possible, statistics have been supplied for recent years, with the exception of the pottery and electrical industries of the United States, the latest studies in these industries having been made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in 1925 and 1927, respectively. It should also be noted that the wage data furnished for the electrical industry in the United States cover only the manufacture of fractional horsepower motors, no general study of wages in the electrical industry having been made.

Throughout the tables wages are shown in the currency of the respective countries covered as well as in United States currency. In all instances conversions into United States currency have been made at the par of exchange and notations are made in the tables indicating the exchange rate of particular currencies that have fluctuated widely from par, as, for example, in the case of the British pound, having a par value of $4.866 and an average exchange rate of $3.396 in October 1932.

The material presented has been assembled from original wage studies made and published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and from reports covering wages in foreign countries furnished in large part by American consular representatives abroad and published in the Monthly Labor Review.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Russell
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Schall
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Sheppard
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Smith
Barbour	Duffy	Lonergan	Steiwer
Barkley	Erickson	Long	Stephens
Black	Fess	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	George	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Goldsborough	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Gore	Norbeck	Wagner
Capper	Hale	Norris	Walcott
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Carey	Hastings	Overton	Wheeler
Clark	Hatch	Patterson	White
Connally	Hatfield	Pittman
Copeland	Hayden	Pope
Costigan	Hebert	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CLAUDIUS T. MURCHISON

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming be kind enough to yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. For the convenience of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent. The matter has been discussed with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and with the members of the committee. The request is that, as in executive session, the Senate consider the nomination of Mr. Murchison to be Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The Senator from North Carolina will make a brief statement as to the reason for this request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, this matter was presented last evening by the Senator from North Carolina, and I objected to immediate consideration because the action rested upon a poll which included the majority of the committee. This morning the Commerce Committee held a meeting, at which time Mr. Murchison was before the committee. All the members of the committee have been consulted and, I understand, are unanimous in agreeing to report the nomination. Therefore I have no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not press this matter now but for the fact that I am under the necessity of leaving the city. I know Mr. Murchison. He is a very competent man, at the head of the department of commerce and banking in the University of North Carolina, a graduate of Columbia University. The committee reports favorably upon the nomination. I move its confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming for so graciously yielding.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. CAREY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senate on three occasions passed bills which had been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with reference to the Everglades National Park. The House never considered those bills. The Senate passed another bill on the subject only a short time ago, and it went to the House. A similar bill was introduced in the House and was passed by that body on yesterday. I should like to ask the Senate to consider and act upon the House bill at this time. There are a few modifications in the House bill, but we are entirely agreeable to the House bill.

I ask that House bill 2837 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the bill (H.R. 2837) to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, which was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to all the lands within boundaries to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior within the area of approximately 2,000 square miles in the region of the Everglades of Dade, Monroe, and Collier Counties, in the State of Florida, recommended by said Secretary, in his report to Congress of December 3, 1930, pursuant to the act of March 1, 1929 (45 Stat., pt. 1, p. 1443), shall have been vested in the United States, said lands shall be, and are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people and shall be known as the Everglades National Park: Provided, That the United States shall not purchase by appropriation of public moneys any land within the aforesaid area, but such lands shall be secured by the United States only by public or private donation.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and upon submission of evidence of title satisfactory to him, to accept on behalf of the United States title to the lands referred to in the previous section hereof as may be deemed by him necessary or desirable for national-park purposes: Provided, That no land for said park shall be accepted until exclusive jurisdiction over the entire park area, in form satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, shall have been ceded by the State of Florida to the United States.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended: Provided, That the provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, known as the "Federal Water Power Act", shall not apply to this park: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to lessen any existing rights of the Seminole Indians which are not in conflict with the purposes for which the Everglades National Park is created: And provided further, That the United States shall not expend any public moneys for the administration, protection, or development of the aforesaid park within a period of 5 years from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 4. The said area or areas shall be permanently reserved as a wilderness, and no development of the project or plan for the entertainment of visitors shall be undertaken which will interfere with the preservation intact of the unique flora and fauna and the essential primitive natural conditions now prevailing in this area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator from Florida if this bill follows the usual national-park form and involves no expenditure on the part of the Government for the acquisition of land?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator from Florida spoken to the Senator from Oregon about it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. The Senator from Oregon is agreeable to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it ought to be all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF SCHOOL TEACHERS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] if he will allow me to intrude for the purpose of asking the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, for information as to a bill which passed the House and which is on its way to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Illinois for that purpose?

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I should like to proceed with my remarks, but if it will not take more than a minute I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely wish to ask a question, as I have awaiting me in the lobby a delegation seeking information which I cannot give correctly. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida, the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, if he can give me information as to the status of the bill which comes from the House and which contains an amendment in behalf of the school teachers of the country? I am exceedingly anxious as to that feature of the bill, because of the great necessity of the school teachers of Chicago, and I merely want to ask the able Senator if he can tell me at this particular juncture whether the bill is here and is to go to conference, or whether we are to act upon it at present, or what his judgment is, so that I may understand its status, as I myself do not know it at present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that matter is in charge of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who will be here in a few moments, I understand. I am quite sure that his motion will be to disagree to the House amendments and ask for a conference. I think there are some amendments which he will not be willing to accept. However, he will attend to that matter very shortly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Senator from Wyoming yielded only for 1 minute, and that minute has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I do not believe that any administration has advocated so many things which are detrimental to the State of Wyoming and other Western States as has the present one. While I feel that much of the program of this administration is unwise, during the present session of Congress two measures have been enacted which will seriously affect two of the basic industries of my State, namely, cattle and sugar.

A bill for the leasing of the public domain is now pending, and the passage of the pending tariff bill may destroy other industries in Wyoming.

The bill which made cattle a basic commodity will reduce the price which the cattle producer will receive for his cattle, and the processing taxes which will be imposed will be paid by the producer rather than by the consumer. I make this statement knowing what has happened in the case of hogs, where not only high processing taxes have been levied but with millions of pigs purchased and destroyed by the Federal Government the price of hogs has steadily declined. Further, on account of the dry season throughout the hog-producing area it is to be expected that there will be more hogs in the country than when the program was initiated, which means still lower prices.

The sugar bill, to which I shall refer later, is the first step toward the elimination of the beet-sugar industry, which provides the only cash crop which the farmers on irrigated land in the West can produce. It means the destruction of an industry which has built up many prosperous communities not only in Wyoming but in other Western States. To prevent its further expansion denies to these States an opportunity to increase their taxable property and population.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to his colleague?

Mr. CAREY. I prefer not to yield at this time. I should like to proceed with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming declines to yield.

Mr. CAREY. The Secretary of Agriculture, in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Finance, was asked by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] if the Casper-Alcova project, in Wyoming, for which the Federal Government is expending $26,000,000, would be a beet-producing area, made the following statement:

> Secretary WALLACE. I think that they would, under this kind of a provision, not be entitled to a sugar allotment, but that would be again up to the technicians to arrive at the fair thing. But in view of the past history it would seem to me that clearly they would not be entitled to such an allotment.

We have other areas in Wyoming where, within a very short time, we could expect sugar factories but which will be denied them.

A bill has already passed the House of Representatives and will shortly be before the Senate providing for the leasing of the unappropriated public lands. The passage of this bill will make it impossible for the public lands to pass into private ownership and to contribute their share toward the cost of State and county governments. This bill will seriously affect the development of the public-land States, and the continuance of Federal control means that the Western States to a large extent will be colonies governed from Washington rather than sovereign Commonwealths.

The tariff bill which we are now considering will permit the President to reduce tariffs 50 percent in order to develop trade with other nations. While I am in favor of increasing our export business, considering the fact that it has been 10 percent of the business of the country in normal times, I do not believe in sacrificing American industries in order to increase it.

The principal products of Wyoming are now protected by a tariff, although the present tariff is not high enough in some instances adequately to protect them. We produce in Wyoming wheat, corn, and other grains, potatoes, beans, cattle, hogs, sheep, wool, oil and coal, as well as other minerals, and sugar. The passage of the present tariff law cannot do other than demoralize business, as those engaged in every industry in the country which is protected by the tariff will be fearful of reductions which would affect them. The danger of this legislation is not only what may happen, but the fear of what might happen. In my State the wool industry represented the only industry which has shown any signs of returning prosperity. Wool was bringing good prices and there was an active demand; but the threat contained in the pending bill has reduced the price of wool from 33 cents, which was paid early in February, to about 22¼ cents at the present time, a reduction of approximately 33 percent. On account of this tariff agitation there has been but one sale of range wool made in Wyoming in the past 30 days.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to his colleague?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator recall what the price of wool was in 1932?

Mr. CAREY. I recall it was considerably lower than it was during 1933, and I recall that wool went up in price until this tariff agitation began.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator recall what was one of the factors that cooperated in raising the price?

Mr. CAREY. What helped to bring the price up?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. CAREY. I am very glad to give credit to the Farm Credit Administration for the help they gave at that time. I have always given them credit for it, and I wish the Farm Credit Administration could have continued its good work without tariff agitation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad the Senator is giving that credit.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, it is a well-known fact——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since the Senator has been interrupted, will he permit me to interrupt him just at this point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CAREY. I yield if the Senator does not intend to make a speech.

Mr. LONG. I do not intend to make any extended speech. I merely want to call the attention of the Senator to a rather interesting situation. He was interested in the cattle measure the other day, although I think he voted against the bill. We appropriated, I believe, $150,000,000 to restore the cattle business—to limit the production of cattle, I guess. I have in my hand this morning two cans of meat, Libby's corned beef. Libby is an American packing industry. Here [exhibiting] is one can of Libby's corned beef made from Argentine meat; it is canned and processed and prepared in Argentina, and the inspection certificate reads:

Inspected and passed by Argentine Department of Agriculture.

Here [exhibiting] is another can of corned beef sold by the same packing company. It was packed in Uruguay; it is Uruguayan beef; and on the inspection label it says:

Inspected and approved by the Uruguayan Government.

The "brain trusters" have already got things to the point where there is not any use trying to do anything for the American cattle grower and for the American beef raiser. The meat can be obtained in South American countries for practically nothing, and, in order to save the cost of labor, they are packing it in South America, and we do not even get a chance to inspect it. We have a reciprocity agreement by which the inspection is done down there, and therefore our cattle growers have got their cattle standing up and the Agricultural Department is letting foreign beef come in here. These two cans were bought on the counter in this city this morning.

Mr. CAREY. The Senator is aware that the United States Government purchased South American beef during the past year, is he not?

Mr. LONG. I did not know that, but I would not be surprised at anything they do; I would not be a bit surprised. If the Senator had told me that 2 months ago, I would have denied it, as a matter of principle, but I would not be surprised at anything the Senator tells me now, particularly since we have appropriated $150,000,000 to help the beef industry and agriculture, and there are not being sold here over any counter any such products to amount to anything when it can be helped except Argentine and Uraguayan beef, and we are not even inspecting it. I would not be surprised at the information that the Government was buying it from there. I would not be surprised at anything that might happen. You can just take that from me. I have passed the day of surprises.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, it is a well-known fact that both Secretary Wallace and his Assistant Secretary, Dr. Tugwell, are free-traders, and it is not to be expected that either of them will make any great effort to protect the agriculturists of this country should it be decided to enter into trade agreements with South American and other countries which will have little or nothing to exchange except agricultural products.

Last winter, in a conversation with Secretary Wallace, he told me that the troubles of the cattle men were entirely due to the protective tariff, as through the protective tariff they had been encouraged to overproduce. I can concur in his statement that there would be no overproduction if there was no tariff, as without a tariff no American cattle producer could remain in business. It costs from 6 to 7 cents a pound to produce beef in this country against a cent and a half in some South American countries, such as those countries which are producing the canned meat which the Senator from Louisiana has shown to the Senate.

The present administration has taken the position that the sugar-beet industry is "inefficient" and "uneconomic" because it enjoys tariff protection. If this be true, then corn, wheat, wool, hogs, and other agricultural products are uneconomic, as is every other American industry which has tariff protection.

In the course of the hearings on the Jones-Costigan bill, before the House Committee on Agriculture, Mr. A. J. S. Weaver, who was then chief of the sugar section of the A.A.A., was asked the following question by Mr. HOPE, of Kansas:

Well, then, in other words, the policy is to start in eliminating the industry before it gets any bigger. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; I think that is a reasonable statement.

Following that statement, certain Senators and Representatives called on the President, who authorized them to issue a statement repudiating Mr. Weaver, and announcing that it was not the intention of the administration to eliminate the beet-sugar industry.

While Mr. Weaver made the foregoing statement, his testimony was changed in the printed record—Mr. Weaver stating that he had misunderstood the question—to:

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; if you mean limiting the industry, I think that is a reasonable statement.

However, we find that Dr. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, made an unscheduled appearance before the committee on the following day to disavow some of the things which Mr. Weaver said. Yet, when he was asked if he agreed with Mr. Weaver's views on the elimination of the industry, he replied:

I think he [Mr. Weaver] believes that no industry is entitled to support by a tariff, and I may say personally that I agree with him.

If these views of Professor Tugwell are to be the policy of the administration or the Department of Agriculture, it will mean, should this bill become a law, that no agricultural product will be protected by the tariff, as Professor Tugwell has plainly stated he does not believe it is entitled to such support.

I could quote from numerous speeches of the Secretary of Agriculture in which he has consistently advocated a radical reduction in tariffs and the elimination of industries which he considers uneconomic, but it is not necessary, as his position is well known. Certainly we can expect little help from the Department of Agriculture in maintaining tariffs for the protection of the farmer or livestock grower.

On account of a letter which was published in a news story appearing in the Habana Post under date of August 24, 1932, in which it appeared that Mr. Roosevelt, then a candidate for President, had advocated the reduction of 20 percent of the sugar tariff for the benefit of Cuba, the President wrote a letter to Hon. FRED CUMMINGS, of Fort Collins, Colo., in which he endeavored to explain the letter, particularly that he had made no commitment respecting the sugar tariff. However, in this letter he made the following statement:

> The declared policy of the Democratic Party and its candidates is to establish a "fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference"; to negotiate "reciprocal tariff agreements with other nations"; and, finally, to call "an international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange."
> In other words, the Democratic program is specifically intended to eliminate politics from the consideration of the tariff question, and there is no industry in the United States—manufacturing or agricultural—that cannot, with greater assurance, rely upon this program than upon the Republican policy which has brought our country to the brink of disaster.

I call attention particularly to that part of the statement where the President said:

> The declared policy of the Democratic Party and its candidates is to establish a "fact-finding tariff commission, free from Executive interference", to negotiate "reciprocal-tariff agreements with other nations", and, finally, to call an "international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange."

While there may be justification for this change in position on the part of the President, his most ardent supporters cannot claim that the pending bill is in line either with the statement made by him at that time or what he calls the "declared policy of the Democratic Party." The bill provides for no "fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference" but gives the President the arbitrary power to enter into reciprocal-tariff agreements without consulting with any commission or anyone else. Neither does it provide for any international economic conference.

No one knows, unless it be the President or some of the miscalled "brain trust", just what American industries will be affected through the passage of this bill. However, we can judge sometimes of the future by what has happened in the past, and for that reason I desire to call attention to what has happened in the case of sugar.

There is no question that very clever persons, acting in behalf of the Cuban sugar interests, were responsible for the Jones-Costigan Act. It is also possible that certain ones high in the councils of the administration, some of whom held Government positions, who had previously been employed by the Cuban sugar interests, sold the idea to the administration.

Early in 1933 a conference was called in Washington by the administration, to which were invited representatives of the various sugar interests which supply sugar to the United States. Dr. John Lee Coulter, a Republican member of the United States Tariff Commission, conducted negotiations with the various groups and after long negotiations presented a sugar-stabilization agreement which all branches of the domestic sugar industry approved. More than a month after the agreement was presented it was rejected by Secretary Wallace. At that time Mr. Wallace had associated with him two gentlemen who had had connections with the Cuban sugar interests, while there was a third gentleman, high in the councils of the administration, with interests in Cuba.

While it is impossible to say who were responsible for the administration's sugar policy, it cannot be denied that certain persons intimately connected with the administration had been in the past either employed or interested in Cuban sugar.

When the A.A.A. was established, Mr. Jerome N. Frank was selected as the head of the legal section, regardless of the protests of Mr. George N. Peek, who was then Administrator. Mr. Frank, after graduating from law school, practiced law in Chicago, but in 1929 he moved to New York and became a member of the law firm of Chadbourne, Stanchfield & Levy. The senior member of this firm, Thomas L. Chadbourne, is reputed to have extensive holdings in Cuban sugar, although his name is not included among the directors of the larger Cuban sugar companies. In 1930, Mr. Chadbourne was asked to look over the sugar situation in Cuba, the result of which evolved in what later became known as the "Chadbourne plan", an international agreement which included Cuba and Java and several European countries. Mr. Chadbourne is reported to have been paid a large sum for this work and in public addresses, in extolling his triumphs in economic diplomacy, constantly condemned the Hawley-Smoot tariff on sugar.

In the summer of 1933, when the so-called "sugar-stabilization conference" was in session in Washington, Mr. Chadbourne proposed that drastic quotas be imposed on all domestic sugar so that advantages might be extended to Cuba. He also suggested that the preferential rate on the duty on Cuban sugar be reduced to 1½ cents a pound, which, curiously enough, is exactly the amount provided for in the recent Presidential proclamation.

As I have stated before, Mr. Frank attained his position with the A.A.A. over the protests of the Administrator, Mr. Peek; in fact, Mr. Peek had so little use for him that he personally employed another attorney, Mr. Lee. Also, I am informed that when Mr. Frank came here he stated that he had made a lot of money and cared nothing for a salary, but that his sole desire was to serve in some capacity where he might help his country. How he made his money is not known; but as he was a member of a law firm representing Cuban sugar interests, it may be presumed that some of this money came from Cuba. It was not long before he was one of the "bellwethers" of the A.A.A. and helped to "grease the slide" for Mr. Peek's exit. This meek gentleman, whose sole desire was to help his country, so ingratiated himself with Secretary Wallace that he is dictating the policies of the A.A.A. and, with the possible exception of Dr. Tugwell, is the most influential person in the Department. He is the legal head, while the Solicitor of the Department is seldom consulted and constantly ignored. While it is true that Mr. Frank has never appeared publicly in sugar matters, it is fair to presume that as the chief legal adviser of the Secretary he has been consulted. Certainly his previous connection with Mr. Chadbourne would in no way influence any advice he may have given the Secretary.

When it was necessary to appoint a legal adviser for hearings on the so-called "sugar-stabilization agreement", there was chosen for this position Mr. Adolph A. Berle, Jr., who had been the legal adviser for Mr. Charles W. Taussig, a member of the "brain trust" scrub team, and who is president of the American Molasses Co. and is interested, among other things, in the operation of a refinery in Cuba which makes granulated white sugar and ships it into the United States in competition with American refiners.

On August 29, 1933, during the hearings on the sugar-stabilization agreement, certain members of the Sugar Institute moved that Dr. Berle be barred as acting as a member of the commission on the ground that he—> is biased and prejudiced against the interests of the said operating cane-sugar refiners of the continental United States, and cannot fairly hear and justly determine, or fairly advise the Secretary of Agriculture with regard to said agreement, or any modifications or amendments thereof which may be proposed to or by the A.A.A.

It was also charged by the refiners, and never denied, that Dr. Berle was attorney and counsel for Charles W. Taussig. In reply to these charges Dr. Berle stated that he was acting only upon the insistence of the Secretary of Agriculture, who was aware of his outside interests. If the Secretary had that much confidence in Dr. Berle at that time, it is certain that Dr. Berle has been consulted as to the sugar program.

Mr. Charles W. Taussig, regardless of his connection with Cuban sugar interests, has been a constant adviser of the President on sugar matters. His relations with the President have been so close that he traveled with him during a part of his campaign, and would probably have continued for the entire route had not some of Governor Roosevelt's friends intimated to Mr. Taussig that his presence might prove embarrassing.

As to the particular parts Mr. Frank, Dr. Berle, and Mr. Taussig have played in influencing either Secretary Wallace or the President in shaping the sugar legislation, I have no way of knowing, but it is fair to assume that these gentlemen, because of their previous or present connections with Cuban sugar interests, have not been lacking in diligence in presenting their views.

Recently another gentleman, a friend and a protege of Mr. Charles W. Taussig, has moved into the picture. I refer to Mr. John E. Dalton, who has been made chief of the sugar section of the A.A.A., replacing Mr. Weaver. Dr. Dalton, who is known to his intimate friends as "Curse You" Jack Dalton, came here from California in 1932, and has gone from one job to another with remarkable rapidity. He belongs to the new-deal circle of economists, and is an intimate friend and associate of both Dr. Moley and Mr. Taussig. Dr. Dalton, as head of the sugar section of the A.A.A., will be the dictator of the sugar industry in the United States. His selection is proof that Mr. Taussig and the Cuban sugar interests are still "in the saddle."

It is also well known that Secretary of Commerce Roper acted for Mr. Chadbourne in a legal capacity, and also represented several Cuban sugar companies. However, I have no knowledge that he was ever consulted as to the sugar program.

I have spoken at length on the sugar question, and called attention to the friends of the Cuban sugar interests connected with the administration, for the reason that I feel that if this bill becomes a law similar situations may develop affecting other industries. No one knows who has been "planted" or will be "planted" in departments of the Government to destroy certain industries and to help others. No one knows who will have the most influence with the administration, as no one can foresee what industries will be declared uneconomic and inefficient and selected by the "brain trust" for destruction.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CAREY. I do.

Mr. FESS. The Senator has stated matters which, if I understand the inference from them, are most serious.

I can understand how the Cuban people, as a people, should desire to have no tariff whatever on sugar coming here, because of sugar being the product on which that island relies for its prosperity. That is easily understood. I can also understand why, in all of our tariff making ever since Cuba has become independent, we have given her a preferential status; and it is easy to understand why people who are close to Cuba as a nationality should plead with us on behalf of the people of Cuba to reduce the duty. As I have listened to this address, however, I have heard the names of Frank and of Chadbourne and of Berle and of Taussig and of Dalton, most of them now in positions here in the administration, most if not all of them identified in an official relationship with Cuban interests, especially sugar. If I draw the correct inference—and it seems to me it is irresistible—those men have had to do with our policy as to sugar, both in what we have already done and now in what we are asked to do. If that inference is justified, it is something that ought to be investigated.

Mr. CAREY. I think it is justified or I should not have made the statements I have made. I have given the record as it is.

Mr. FESS. I can understand why Cubans should want this legislation; but if Americans employed by sugar interests in Cuba and now in official positions in this administration are asking for such a thing for selfish reasons, I think we ought to know it, if that is the inference, and I take it that it is.

Mr. CAREY. I cannot see any justification for men who have had the connection with sugar that some of these men have had having a hand in framing this legislation.

Mr. FESS. I think that matter ought to be brought to the attention of the public.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, it is certain that if this tariff bill becomes a law every interest and industry in the country must struggle to protect itself; and those will be protected who are closest to the administration, while others will suffer who have no advocates to protect them. There is no question but that the large industrial interests that desire to sell their products in foreign countries will insist on sacrificing agriculture or any other industry in order to gain their end. Agriculture and the small industries will suffer, while the large industries will profit.

I am not opposed to this bill because it is a Democratic measure but because I feel that if I supported it I should be betraying the people who sent me to the Senate and who expect me to represent their interests. I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that it is right to sacrifice any section of the country or any class of people for the benefit of another section or class. Neither can I justify selling the United States short, which will happen if the bill shall become a law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune under date of April 30, 1934, entitled "Dangerous Tariff Powers."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DANGEROUS TARIFF POWERS

It is regrettable that the administration spokesmen who have put up such a good argument in favor of granting the President powers to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements should insist that these powers be granted in such a form as to obviate the necessity of hearings on the part of persons whose interests might be adversely affected by Presidential rulings reducing tariff schedules. The point is of vital importance—not only in principle but also in practice.

It is important in principle because it places in the sole discretion of the President extensive powers of tariff making, and hence of taxation, which have heretofore been reserved to the legislative branch of the Government. It is important in practice because these powers may be abused to serve political ends of unscrupulous advisers of the President.

Unfortunately, this second point is the most ominous. Three months ago few people would have believed so. But the Nation has been jolted into the unpleasant realization that the powers for "cracking down" on a recalcitrant industry may be used arbitrarily, regardless of fair play. The fate of the air-mail carriers shows this. The industry was offensive to some of the President's friends and advisers. It was therefore sacrificed. What assurance have we that other industries which give offense may not, under the arbitrary powers over the tariff to be given to the President, also be punished?

It is difficult to see how the effectiveness of the President's negotiations for reciprocal agreements can be seriously jeopardized by giving some group like the Tariff Commission the role of a sort of court of appeals. The essential thing is to make it impossible that the President's power be exercised arbitrarily and without a corrective. This, rather than the principle of reciprocal agreements, is what is objected to by critics of the present measure.

Mr. KEAN obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead

Costigan	Hebert	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, every Senator is well aware of my attitude and record on the important question of the tariff. The reasons why I have consistently advocated adequate protection seem too obvious to require any detailed explanation at this time. However, I feel that it is my duty to point out again the great danger to the workers of this country, in both field and factory, and to industry and agriculture in general. The plain fact still remains that failure to afford suitable protection will inevitably retard recovery in the United States and work a particularly grave hardship upon the working men and women of America.

This highly important problem ought not to be left to the discretion of any man; or, for that matter, to any small group of men. What I argue here is that the question of insuring the future welfare of the American workingman and American industry is of such vital importance, particularly at this time, that the people of this country deserve to be represented in any and all deliberations by the men and women whom they duly elect to represent them and to protect their interests. The welfare and future happiness of all of the people of this country so largely depend upon any adjustment of our rates which may be made that it seems unthinkable that these vast powers should be delegated to others by their representatives here.

I think it is clearly impossible that the President of the United States could possibly go into a detailed study of any one article manufactured in the United States and a like article manufactured abroad and decide whether we should destroy the American plant for the benefit of the foreign plant. Therefore, he must delegate this authority to some group of brain trusters, with no experience in business, with little or no sympathy with the troubles and problems of the workingman, who will simply decide the question involved on the ground of something they have learned out of books in universities. In one of the committees of the Senate on which I have the honor to serve we are now talking about setting aside large sums of money for improving housing conditions of the ordinary man.

I submit, Mr. President, that no sound argument has been advanced, here or elsewhere, which disposes of the plain fact that American labor cannot compete with underpaid foreign labor, and with any hope that they will in the future enjoy the standards of living which have prevailed in the past.

True, in times of distress like these, men are ever ready to grasp at any fancied panacea in the desperate hope of improving their lot. That is but human. But permit me to warn Senators that, under the circumstances, a grave responsibility rests upon their shoulders. I warn them here and now that they will deeply regret any failure to see to it themselves—it being plainly their duty so to do—that suitable protection from cheaply produced goods from abroad is assured the people of the United States.

It was inevitable that advantage should be taken by opportunists to discredit our system of protecting American workers and American industry during the period of economic distress which followed the most devastating war of all time. The souls of men have been sorely tried, and one can well understand how susceptible they may be to the arguments of the preachers of such false doctrine. It is therefore more important now than at any time in our country's history that Senators should not be deceived by this false and dangerous doctrine.

The cold plain fact remains. One need not be a statistician, an expert in economy or on fiscal matters generally, to realize that any system which permits the dumping of foreign products in the United States spells defeat for the worker and his employer in this country.

Before the war there were something like 20,000 landholders in Great Britain, many of them owning vast tracts of land which were laid out into parks. Now, owing to excess of death duties, many of these landholders have parted with their places, the forests on them are being cut down, and they are being transformed into farms. This will mean that Great Britain will buy much less wheat than heretofore. In addition to this, they will not give up the benefit of empire trade, so that we will be able to sell to them less wheat and less cotton because both India and Egypt are going to be greater cotton-producing countries.

In France we have paid for the restoration of the devastated regions and provided them with farm machinery better than they ever had before, so that France will not be a purchaser of our farm products as she has been in the past, and will probably raise cotton in her African possessions, so that we cannot hope for a market for our cotton from that country.

Germany today is self-supporting, and the only hope we have is of giving them such favorable terms that they can forego some of their farm products in the hope of reaping a tremendous profit out of displacing American workmen in our factories.

I should like to point out at this time that there is no real justification for the charge that the tariff rates of this country are excessive. We actually rank next to Great Britain in the matter, with 67 percent of our products on the free list and but 33 percent protected. Certainly no one who has made anything approaching a careful study of the subject will argue that our rates are too high, when he realizes that the dutiable list of the United States is smaller than that of any country in the world, with one exception, namely, England.

It must be apparent to everyone who gives the problem serious thought that the surest, quickest, and most logical method of bringing about sound and permanent recovery is to restore and increase the purchasing power of the American people. Let those who advocate lowering tariff rates further, and thus bringing about what would virtually amount to free trade, explain here and now how it could possibly increase our prosperity, in view of the fact that any such movement would almost automatically throw thousands of our workers out of employment, thereby further decreasing our domestic purchasing power.

The unrestricted importation of products of the farm and factory which we ourselves produce could not possibly have any effect other than to place our producers at such a disadvantage that they would be forced to suspend operations.

I have always been a firm believer in a tariff, a tariff rather that protects our industry than one simply designed for revenue purposes only. But I believe that the rates on articles imported into this country should be fixed so as to equalize the costs of production at home or abroad, so that similar articles on which the tariff is imposed may be brought to the market at an equal price.

It is very difficult for the Congress to give to each article all of the attention the surrounding facts of its manufacture at home and abroad deserve. Still it is compulsory, under our Constitution, that this method be followed.

The most scientific method is for investigation to be made along judicial lines, weighing the evidence impartially on the facts as presented. This method has been followed successfully for the past few years. In effect, the Congress has made the Tariff Commission, which was created for an express purpose, a part of itself. The Tariff Commission has no other function than to weigh the evidence presented to it and make its decision, which decision is transmitted to the President for his approval—exactly the same procedure as is taken by the Congress in its consideration of legislation.

But to transfer to the President the power to hear evidence and make a decision, and to either raise or lower tariff rates by 50 percent, is a far different procedure. By the pending bill the power is sought to be given to one person, who is to hear the evidence, make a decision as a referee, and transmit that decision from himself as a referee to himself as President—a sort of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde proposition.

There is no question in my mind that the Congress has a constitutional right to delegate to the Tariff Commission the power to change duties either up or down by as much as 50 percent of a given rate. This was decided by the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator feel that Congress also has the right to give the President the power to raise or lower tariff duties to the extent of 75 percent?

Mr. KEAN. I do not think the Congress has the right to give the President any power to raise or lower the rates, except as it delegates the power to a commission for fact finding.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator feel that he could make that yardstick 75 percent instead of 50 percent?

Mr. KEAN. I would not make it 75 percent and I do not feel that——

Mr. TYDINGS. I asked if the Senator felt that that would be the yardstick he could make?

Mr. KEAN. I do not feel that I would give such latitude to the President of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not ask what the Senator would give to the President.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator asked me how I felt about it and I have answered him as to how I felt about it. Having answered the question, I will go on with my speech.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator misunderstood me if he thinks he has answered the question. The Senator made the statement that the Supreme Court has held that a 50-percent yardstick was constitutional. I am asking the Senator if he thinks a 75-percent yardstick is likewise constitutional.

Mr. KEAN. That is for the Court to decide.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator does not want to answer.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator would just as lief answer, but the Senator is not the Court.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the Senator refuses to answer.

Mr. KEAN. Now, Mr. President, I will go on with my speech.

In the case of Bluefield Water Works Co. v. Public Service Co. (262 U.S. 679), the Court said:

> The prescribing of rates is a legislative act. The commission is an instrumentality of the State, exercising delegated powers. Its order is of the same force as would be a like enactment of the legislature.

In the case of Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Works Co. (212 U.S. 1), the Court said:

> Nevertheless, the function of rate making is purely legislative in its character, and this is true whether it is exercised directly by the legislature or by some subordinate and administrative body to whom the power of fixing the rates in detail has been delegated. The completed act derives its authority from the legislature and must be regarded as the exercise of legislative power.

It is clearly said by the Court that rate making is purely legislative in its character, whether exercised directly by the legislative or by some subordinate and administrative body.

Certainly the President of the United States cannot be considered as subordinate to the Congress. The Constitution took care of that when it created the three distinctive branches of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial.

The constitutional provisions as regards the creation of the office of President are carefully drawn, and nowhere does the Constitution provide that the President shall exercise legislative powers, nor does it provide that legislative powers be delegated to the Executive.

Article II, section I, of the Constitution of the United States provides that the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.

Section 3 of article II provides:

> He (the President) shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them, with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

It is my opinion, therefore, that if the Congress complies with the request of the President to clothe him with such powers that the constitutionality of such an act might be seriously questioned.

It seems to me that it is clearly unconstitutional; and if it is unconstitutional the Senate should proceed cautiously and give full consideration to the effect its act should have upon the business of the country. Business has been disturbed far too much to be further embarrassed. Prosperity can never come back, Blue Eagles to the contrary notwithstanding, until the business people are assured that the future holds no uncertainty for them.

While I am opposed to any method which is designed to place in the power of any one person the control of all the manufacturing plants in the United States, at the same time, if the Senate gives this power to the President, why does he ask for the right to cut the protective tariff on foreign-made goods, when at the same time foreign countries now import goods into this country to an approximate value of $900,000,000 a year which are all on the free list and on which a tariff is not levied? Instead of the President asking for the power to reduce any tariff by 50 percent as a trading measure, why does he not ask for the right to take all of these foreign-made goods off the free list and use this $900,000,000 of free trade which they now enjoy as a persuasive argument to take an equal amount of goods from this country which they do not at the present time purchase from our merchants?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act only 19 percent of the imported manufactured food products we consumed came into our country duty free. A large number of these free importations consisted of commodities of which we produced little or none in the United States. However, 82 percent of crude foodstuffs and food animals came in free of duty. But of this amount, in money value, three-fourths was in the form of coffee alone, which we do not produce in this country. Of crude materials, 83 percent came in free of duty; but raw silk and rubber, which we do not produce, accounted for over half of this amount. However, only 40 percent of finished manufactures and only 19 percent manufactured foodstuffs were imported.
